University radio station broadcasts in FM format

By JEN BORDA
Staff Reporter

The University radio station WXVU 640 AM officially became WXVU 89.1 FM June 20. The station is taking part in a time-sharing contract with Cabrini College allowing WXVU to now broadcast on the FM airwaves.

WXVU will broadcast Tuesdays, Thursdays, Saturdays and the first half of Sunday, while their sister station, WYBF at Cabrini, will broadcast the rest of the week.

In their first year of broadcasting on FM airwaves, WXVU station executives have discovered many advantages to changing to the new format. The radio station can be reached at a 25-mile radius, which has increased the amount of listeners, said executive board members Steve Gallo and Dave Berger.

Switching to FM has also enabled the station to broadcast in stereo with enhanced sound quality and fidelity, Gallo added.

The station is also one of a few stations in the area that programs alternative music. The station's unique programming has attracted many fans from the Main Line community and on campus, said Berger.

WXVU is currently broadcasting from 6 p.m. to 12 a.m. due to technical problems. By next month, the station hopes to extend air time to 8 a.m. to 1 a.m., Berger said.

Although the station plays primarily alternative music, other programs will include jazz, heavy metal, sports and news. Plans are also being made to broadcast several away football and basketball games. The station would also like to take their programming on the road and broadcast from local nightspots, Berger said.

Mumford removed from team roster, leaves University

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

Villanova Head Basketball Coach Rollie Massimino dismissed men's basketball player Lloyd Mumford in early August after Mumford was arrested by Radnor police on charges of criminal trespass, disorderly conduct and criminal mischief in early July.

At a court hearing July 28, the charges were reduced to disorderly conduct when Mumford's lawyer successfully argued that the charge of criminal trespass and criminal mischief were unjustified since there was no criminal intent.

Mumford, who played sparingly as a redshirt freshman in the 1990-91 season but was expected to push for the starting job this season, left the 'Nova campus at approximately 3:30 a.m. on July 12 to visit a friend's house.

According to police reports, Mumford used a key to cut open the rear window screen of a twin house on the 600 block of Conestoga Road. But while entering, he realized it was the wrong house and left before causing further damage.

Mumford then preceded next door, where the woman actually resided. He tampered again with a window screen but eventually entered the house through an unlocked door. He was asked to leave immediately by the friend and he did.

> It was a case of poor judgement. It was a set of circumstances where the media blew it out of proportion. He made a mistake.
> Lt. J. Gregory, Radnor police

Later that morning after being notified of the break-in, police found the key and a pair of clippers on the premises and traced it to a Villanova Fieldhouse key. Mumford turned himself into the Radnor police and was charged with the three counts.

Mumford paid a $400 fine for the incident after district justice Beverly Foster found him guilty of disorderly conduct. Foster also

ASPC to regulate academic cuts

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

A new Academic Strategic Planning Committee (ASPC) will regulate the termination of academic programs under the direction of the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs.

Gallen convened the committee to assist in making recommendations on academic policy to Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president and the Board of Trustees. Action was taken in response to an April 19, 1991 resolution by the University Senate, according to a letter by Gallen.

"The proposed committee will have the proper expertise and sufficient faculty respect to insure that any academic strategic plan that results from its recommendations will have credibility throughout the University community," Gallen said.

The purpose of the ASPC is to promote the University academically by analyzing new programs, reviewing present programs and recommending changes, said Gallen. The committee will ensure full and open discussion with those involved in the program under review.

According to Gallen, the proposed structure will provide a fair and uniform way to review all programs. University Senator James W. Klingler, 1990-91 Faculty Council chairman, recommended a procedure that would investigate all implications involved in an academic closing.

The ASPC is designed to take a university rather than a college or department perspective. "Thus it is appropriate for a University-wide academic strategic plan," Gallen said. Positive and negative outcomes are anticipated from the evaluations as new programs are expanded and others are terminated, he added.

The procedure will be initiated in the fall semester when six faculty members are elected by the Colleges of Arts and Sciences, Commerce and Finance, Engi-

Peace and Justice forum discusses Soviet politics

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
Assistant News Editor

The Center for Peace and Justice Education hosted an open forum on Sept. 11 to discuss the political, economic and social future of the Soviet Union and its people, said Barbara Wall, Center for Peace and Justice Education.

Jeffery Hahn, political science, Adele Lindenmeyer, history, and Zoia Korsun, modern languages, were the three featured speakers at ther discussion.

Hahn gave an overview of the political and economic changes that have taken place in the Soviet Union since 1985. The failed coup attempt on Aug. 19 was the climax of these "dramatic manifestations of political conflict that have been brewing," said Hahn.

> I missed service with a smile the most . . . People [in the Soviet Union] have forgotten how to work.
> Zoia Korsun, modern languages and literature

The major conflict for former Communist party leader Mikhail Gorbachev has been whether to preserve the old communist doctrines or to lean toward democratic reforms, Hahn said. In 1990, there was a decline in Perestroika [rebuilding of the economy] and an emergence of the democratic left, he said.

"Perestroika is dead," said Hahn.

There are many issues that need to be addressed in the Soviet Union including who will govern the country and how the economy can be saved, Hahn said.

Two ways to help the Soviet economy would be to "turn the agricultural sector over to private economy and make the ruble convertible [to attract foreign investments]," he said.

Langran campaign targets South Campus students

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
Assistant News Editor

Political science professor and tennis coach Bob Langran will run for Radnor Township's Board of Commissioners. Students who live on South Campus and other students in Langran's voting district are encouraged to register in order to vote in his support, said John Sullivan, Langran's campaign manager.

Langran distributed letters explaining his campaign and voter registration applications to all residents of South Campus. Transportation to and from polling places on election day will be provided for students by Langran's campaign.

Langran has been a professor at the University since 1959 and currently has three children attending the University.

Langran is opposed to several housing ordinances passed by Radnor Township's Board of Commissioners. One of these laws is Ordinance 89-27, which allows only two students to live together in one residence.

Sullivan also wrote that there are other restrictive ordinances that prevent Villanova from building dormitories, limit the number of students in rental residences and leave the University "politically powerless."

INDIANAPOLIS

Mike Tyson was indicted Sept. 9 on charges of raping a Miss Black America pagent contestant in her hotel room in July. The grand jury charged Tyson with one count of rape, two counts of criminal deviate conduct and one count of confinement all of which could send the 24-year-old former heavyweight boxing champion to prison for a maximum of 63 years.

A warrant was issued for Tyson's arrest with bond set at $30,000, court officials said. He is expected to surrender to authorities this week to post bond, said Marion County prosecutor Jeffrey Modisett.

Tyson denies the accusations and still plans to participate in the title fight against Evander Holyfield Nov. 8 in Las Vegas. This is in spite of boxing officials who are demanding the cancellation of the fight and the stripping of Tyson's boxing license until the situation is resolved.

The case is expected to go to trial early next year.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Senate confirmation hearings for Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas began Sept. 10. There will be four days of hearings on President Bush's choice to succeed retiring Justice Thurgood Marshall.

The big question according to Senate Democrats is how Thomas stands on the abortion and privacy issues. Sen. John C. Danforth (R., Mo.), Thomas' main supporter in the Senate, cautioned those seeking advanced promises that Thomas' position on specific issues will not be brought up during these hearings.

Bush admitted that there will be a fight, but was confident that Thomas would win the nomination.

PHILADELPHIA

The radical group MOVE has moved into a large, three-story twin home in West Philadelphia. MOVE member Alberta Wicker said the group purchased both halves of the house with some of the $2.5 million settlement with the city over the May 13, 1985 confrontation on Osage Avenue.

The battle between MOVE and police ended in the deaths of six adult MOVE members and five children along with the fiery destruction of 61 homes.

While neighbors have exhibited concern, Wicker said the group had no intention of disrupting the neighborhood. Police Commissioner Willie Williams received complaints from MOVE members about unnecessary surveillance by police.

THOKOZA, SOUTH AFRICA

An incident where three gunmen opened fire and killed 18 Inkatha Freedom Party supporters returning from a rally Sept. 8 has lead to a series of attacks around Johannesburg that continued through Sept. 9 leaving 58 dead and more than 90 injured.

This ended three months of peace in the area and occurred just before a major peace agreement was to be signed between the traditional, Zulu-dominated Inkatha and its political rival, the African National Congress.

A peace convention is scheduled for Sept. 14 where both sides plan to sign a new accord. Leaders of both groups begged township residents to not get involved in any more bloodshed.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

Defense officials have found that the lack of a Soviet military threat will make it difficult for lawmakers not to cutback on military spending, which is now roughly $300 billion a year.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, however, wants to stick to last year's budget agreement that calls for military spending to shrink three percent annually over the next five years.

Cheney insists that the Soviet arsenal still has 30,000 nuclear warheads and can destroy the United States.

Kathleen Byrnes named new assistant dean of Students

By FRANK MORGAN and FLORENCE VACCARO
Staff Reporters

The University recently hired Kathleen Byrnes, Esq., for the post of assistant dean of Students, attorney who will handle matters involving off-campus student housing problems as well as disciplinary responsibilities.

The main focus of Byrnes' job will be working with off-campus students, educating them as to their rights and advising them in such matters as zoning laws, landlord problems and other general concerns. She replaces the Rev. Joseph S. Mostardi, O.S.A., in this capacity.

"I'm here to offer the off-campus residents support and create an on-campus community for them so they don't feel as if they are just 'kicked off' campus," Byrnes said.

She said the disciplinary responsibilities of her job will be only "marginal" and mostly dealing with the discipline of off-campus students. She might be asked to sit on or moderate a disciplinary judicial board, but her concern will be for the most part with helping off-campus students.

Byrnes is a member of the University's Class of 1984 and taught at the Villanova Law School for the past two years. After receiving her law degree from Duke University, Byrnes moved on to private practice, working for three years in Washington, D.C., and Philadelphia for firms dealing mainly in commercial litigation.

Faculty scholars receive annual research awards

University Press Release

Dr. Thomas Busch, professor of philosophy, and Dr. Rachel Hare-Mustin, professor of education and human services, received the Outstanding Faculty Research Award for 1991.

During the May luncheon held in their honor, Busch was commended for his outstanding research achievements in the field of contemporary French philosophy and Hare-Mustin was commended for her most distinguished scholarly contributions in the field of psychology.

After comments from the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, Dr. Daniel J. Ziegler, dean of the Graduate School of Liberal Arts and Sciences and chair of the Award Selection Committee presented the recipients to the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences who in turn conferred the award.

Busch received his B.A. from St. Joseph's College, Ind., and his M.A. and Ph.D. from Marquette University. He joined Villanova's philosophy department in 1964 and served as department chairperson. He has earned a national reputation as a leading interpreter of the philosophy of Jean Paul Sartre, arguably the greatest French philosopher of this century.

Busch is the author of The Power of Consciousness and the Force of Circumstances in Sartre's Philosophy, published by Indiana University Press in 1990. He argues in this study that Sartre's thought underwent a profound evolution from the theory of radical, individual freedom found in the master work, Being and Nothingness, to a recognition in the later writings on Genet and Flaubert of the limiting and conditioning circumstances within which freedom is always situated.

Widely reviewed and highly acclaimed, Busch's book was recently the subject of a panel discussion by the Society for Phenomenology and Existential Philosophy, the major professional society in the United States for the study of continental philosophy.

Busch is the author of articles in professional journals, including a number of important papers on the work of Maurice Merleau-Ponty and Gabriel Marcel. He edited an anthology of the writings of Marcel, and is currently editing an anthology of studies of Merleau-Ponty.

Falvey undergoes summer changes

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Staff Reporter

Falvey Memorial Library underwent $250,000 in renovations over the summer, including improvements to the air conditioning and heating systems and the addition of a computerized card catalogue, after a study of its inner structures proved the building was in need of repair, said James E. Zaleski, director of engineering in Facilities Management.

The study was conducted because of frequent complaints of the library's uncomfortability. Renovations began in May.

Air handlers containing fans were replaced throughout the library, which will improve comfort control and will be more energy efficient. Because of the shape of the building, the cooling system must run year-round to cool the center of the library, while the heating system will run to heat the perimeter of the building during the winter.

High efficiency lighting was also installed throughout Falvey, which will cut down on the release of heat and will provide adequate lighting for reading.

The addition of VUCAT, Falvey's on-line card catalogue, was completed just two days before classes began. Terminals located near the circulation desk will provide access to all periodicals, reserves, instructional media services as well as all of the 500,000 volumes within the library.

Campaign for Community strives for continuous student awareness

By LAURA BAKER
Staff Reporter

The Year of Diversity, first sponsored by Student Government last year, will be replaced this year by Campaign for Community, said Jeaneen Riely, coordinator for Peace and Justice Education. The program was renamed to better reflect the organization's goal of student awareness and the steering committee's ideals, she said.

Campaign for Community, unlike the Year of Diversity, is meant to be a continuous project of student thoughtfulness and sensitivity not limited to one year, Riely said. The campaign's mission statement expresses the desire "to promote learning and understanding of all cultural, economic, ethnic/racial, gender, geographic, ideological, religious, sexually-oriented, social and uniquely-abled backgrounds," she added.

The mission also strives to "go beyond toleration. Our purpose is consistent with the ideals set forth by our University and will be carried out under the auspices of an all-new, united campus-wide movement ... to perpetuate the enhancement of Villanova's commitment to education and the awareness of all people," Riely said.

Advising organizations, Campaign for Community will provide training and resources to any group that wishes to design a program. Forty campus groups, including several fraternities and sororities, agreed to form one program this year on a topic of their choice, Riely said.

Summer marked by student deaths

By MARGARET KAMINSKI

Two students who would have been seniors this semester died from alleged accidents during summer break.

John P. Healey fell out of a six-story residence hall window during a visit to Framingham State College in Framingham, Mass. with a friend who knew several Framingham students on May 12.

The state police believe the incident was an accident but still do not know what made him fall out the window, said Jill Reilly, spokesperson for the Middlesex County District Attorney's office, in an article by the Patriot Ledger.

After attending a campus party, where officials believe Healey was drinking, he went to sleep on the top floor of Larned Hall dormitory, later fell from a window and landed on the sidewalk where a student found him, reported the article.

The 21-year old civil engineering major was originally from Scituate, Mass., where he attended Boston College High School.

Lenahan fell off the side of a boat during a fishing expedition on July 18 off the coast of Long Island, where the body has not been found, said the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students.

While on the boat, he felt ill and went below deck. Later Lenahan came up from the cabin and spoke to a priest on deck. The priest turned around for a minute, and when he turned back Lenahan was in the water and never surfaced, said Stack.

Memorial services were held for the accounting major from Woodcliffe Lake, N.J. on July 27 at Our Lady of the Mother Church.

Jewish awareness marks celebration of new year

Special to the Villanovan

Villanovans for Jewish Awareness, in conjunction with the Center for Peace and Justice, marked the beginning of more than a month of religious festivities for Jews around the world with an informal celebration of the Jewish New Year, Rosh Hashanah, Sept. 12, at the Center for Peace and Justice. This Rosh Hashanah is the beginning of the year 5752 in the Jewish calendar.

The event opened with a few brief remarks by Rabbi Maltzman, a longtime adjunct professor of history at the University. Students and faculty with their families joined together to enjoy the traditional rituals of dipping apples in honey and sharing the round challah bread, symbols of sweetness, hope and completeness for the year ahead. The Jewish New Year combines family rejoicing with contemplation and awe.

Jews prepare for the next 10 days of repentence that culminate in Yom Kippur, the day of atonement. Observed by abstinence from food and drink from sunset to sunset, Yom Kippur is set aside for the private confession of sins, repentance and forgiveness. It is also a time of hope and spiritual renewal.

After the solemnity of these High Holy Days, a week later Jews joyously celebrate the delights of the harvest in the feast of Sukkot.

Rosh Hashanah, Yom Kippur and Sukkot together inscribe a period in the religious lives of Jews in which the whole range of human emotion and spirituality are expressed — from the self-criticism and self-denial of Yom Kippur to the playful affirmation of pleasure and abundance of Sukkot.

Texas student loan agency recommends universities

By College Press Service

A state student loan agency in Texas has taken up the unusual practice of recommending where the students who seek its help should attend school. "This is the first time I've seen [student loan] counseling include" telling a student to transfer to or enroll at a different school, noted Jean Frohlicher of the National Council on Higher Loan Programs in Washington, D.C.

In Texas, the loan agency reportedly is trying to steer students away from certain trade schools and into colleges with lower default rates and broader course choices.

"Our first choice would be the student's first choice, [but] they may be better served by another school," said Cathy Flautt of the Texas Guaranteed Student Loan Corp., which lends college money to students who cannot get a loan from a bank or another lender.

Every state has a similar guaranteed student loan corporation, but Texas's is apparently the only one making enrollment suggestions to students who come to it for money, Frohlichewr said.

"It is not our policy to try to attempt to sway students toward what school to attend," said Karen Papoi of the Michigan Higher Education Student Loan authority.

Frohlicher, however, pointed out that it is legal for the state loan agencies to try.

She adds that lenders have good reasons for not wanting students to use the money to go to schools that have high loan default rates.

Trade school loans, she explains, are just as expensive for lenders to process as loans for four-year schools.

But the dropout rates at trade schools, which run for-profit specialized courses that instruct students how to master certain job skills like clerical work, cosmetic care or drafting, tend to be higher than at nonprofit colleges, leaving lenders with a lot of money that will never be repaid.

By his continuing research on Marcel, a French Catholic philosopher of this century, Busch has contributed to the tradition of Christian philosophy essential to the University's mission.

Hare-Mustin received her B.A. from Swarthmore College, her M.A. from Wellesley College and her Ph.D. from Temple University, joining Villanova's faculty in 1976. She is regarded as a leading theorist in gender theory, family therapy and ethics in psychotherapy.

Hare-Mustin's research in gender theory and in family therapy includes numerous articles that appear in prestigious journals such as "American Psychologist," "Psychotherapy," "Family Process," "Journal of Family Issues," and "Journal of Marital and Family Therapy." She also has co-authored two books in these areas: Making a Difference: Psychology and the Construction of Gender and Women and Psychotherapy: An Assessment of Research and Practice, both of which are hailed as standards within the field.

As a visiting professor at the University of Science and Technology in Sichuan, China, Hare-Mustin conducted research on Chinese motherhood and the family, publishing her findings in leading family therapy journals. The influence of her articles and her leadership in the area of ethics in psychotherapy was recognized by her being selected to chair the Ethics Committee of the American Psychological Association.

Hare-Mustin also was honored by being selected to serve as the first woman parliamentarian for the American Psychological Association.

As a result of her expertise in the fields of gender theory, family therapy and ethics in psychotherapy, Hare-Mustin has accepted invitations to present her work at conferences in Stockholm, Salzburg, Hong Kong and throughout the United States.

the Soviet Union the morning that the unsuccessful coup in Moscow was announced. She was one of a group of professors studying at Hudson University in St. Petersburg over the summer in an exchange program.

The teachers in St. Petersburg talked openly and willingly about the political changes in their country, she said. Even people in the streets of the city were eager to talk, especially to Americans whose society they idealize.

"I missed service with a smile the most. People [in the Soviet Union] have forgotten how to work," she said.

Stores and restaurants were unpredictable in service and quantity of merchandise. Usually customers waited in lines up to three house long just to buy cheese and there was no guarantee that there would be any left when it was finally your turn, she added.

Lindenmeyr discussed the change in the attitude of the Soviet people since the 1950's.

"This is a people that for centuries has been described as politically apathetic and yearning for a Stalin. This is also the population of which hundreds of thousands have rallied for change in the past year. Why did these people change?" asked Korsun.

The Soviet people and their government have been the object of many jokes throughout the years, she said. "The most luxuriant genre of political jokes have been about communism," she added.

The Center for Peace and Justice Education will sponsor other forums periodically to give the University community a chance to discuss information and communicate about world events as they occur, said Wall.

The ASPC was derived from the Program Evaluation Committee (PEC) initiated three years ago with Dr. Angelo Armenti, dean of the University College, as its chairman.

Look out, Freshmen

So how does it feel to be in the big, bad world of Villanova? Yes, freshmen, we are talking to you. We know it seems that you know only your orientation counselors and those living on your halls, but we are addressing you.

You've entered Villanova at an interesting time, and we'd like to tell you a little about what you are going to experience. Villanova has commenced several projects which will make campus life different than it has been for those in the recent past.

The huge building and parking garage springing up next to Falvey Memorial Library will unite Villanova's renowned liberal arts program under one roof. This monstrous building will house the entire Arts College, which has previously resided in small offices throughout the campus.

Those graduating will not again see the inside of the St. Thomas of Villanova Church luntil they have entered the "real world." The beautiful Church is scheduled for extensive renovations which will last through the spring semester. For the time being, students must adjust to Mass in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center.

Last year's innovative "Year of Diversity" campaign by Student Government is presently under a new name, "Campaign for Community." The program, meant to promote cultural understanding on campus, has been altered slightly by the new government. Stay tuned for various events centering around this campaign.

The 1992-93 academic year marks the 150th since Villanova began its higher education programs. The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin O.S.A., has publicized the University's intentions to celebrate this birthday with multiple events. Next year should be an exciting one to be a Villanova student.

For those interested in entering Villanova's Greek system, several changes have occurred. Chi Omega, one of the largest social sororities in existence, begins a chapter at Villanova this semester. On the social front, kegged beer, outlawed at Greek functions last semester, has been reinstated as a result of hard work by the Interfraternity Council.

These are just a few of the changes slated for the University now and in the near future. Best of luck freshman, you have a lot to look forward to in your careers at Villanova.

Alternatives to drinking

Recently we greeted a freshman on our way to Tolentine, and we asked the immutable question "How do you like 'Nova, so far?" His reply startled us and impressed us. He said, "The school spirit is amazing, even in the classroom, but I'm still trying to figure out if anyone knows how to have a good time here without involving alcohol?"

We looked at each other and had no straight answer. Sure we cited the fact that all colleges have the problem of alcohol abuse. Then, we explained that students in college need to feel accepted and alcohol may give them a feeling of acceptance. We even went as far as to blame television for stealing away our imaginations. But we really could not help him solve this mystery of Villanova social life other than to tell him that he is miles ahead of the rest in understanding what defines a good time.

All students at Villanova from freshmen to seniors stand to learn from this student's simple observation. When Villanova seniors seek entertainment after a hard weeks work, the majority end up at one of the Mainline's bars. Do we have to be at bars or at keg parties when we want to socialize or unwind? Certainly when the upperclassmen only socialize at bars or keg parties we are setting an example for the underclassmen.

It is up to the individuals at Villanova to save the rest of the beer guzzlers from utter stagnation. Let's put to use some of our spontaneity and seek alternative forms of entertainment at times. We may even find we enjoy our new ideas more.

Students seek help from peers

To the Editor:

One year ago a self-appointed committee of six students attempted to lay a foundation for a Year of Cultural Diversity. The goal of the year was to focus on discussions of difference in the academy. The efforts of that committee resulted in what is today known as the Campaign for Community.

There is a perception on the Villanova campus that political beliefs and values are not proper topics for dicussion. The Campaign for Community Steering Committee feels, however, that the university setting is the ideal place to express, exchange and challenge as many different kinds of values and beliefs as there are people.

As a result, we would like to establish a forum for the exchange of ideas that would promote an attitude of openness and awareness of others. It is hoped that our differences can foster a respect and understanding of all peoples.

The need for the Campaign for Community emerged from a lack of opportunities to ask questions. Through participating in forums and programs we can each share in finding the answers. Through this effort, we feel that all members of the Villanova community will grow and learn, not only about others, but about themselves as well.

Our goal is to affect the Villanova population by acting as a resource center to help all student organizations program events which they may want to bring to campus. We would like to see every student organization sponsor or co-sponsor a thought-provoking program by the end of the academic year. We also intend to hold student leadership workshops and residence life presentations to help educate the students about the Campaign and issues affecting our world today.

We envision providing the Villanova community with a global view. We encourage and support open discussions of various views, beliefs, ideas and values inside as well as outside the classroom. Our hope is that all members of the community will be challenged to grow and learn about their world and the people residing in that world.

We have coined the phrase "Campaign for Community" as a means of expressing the theme of the year as a time to acknowledge a community that includes all members of the Villanova community. This is an ongoing campus-wide movement, and therefore the support of the students, faculty and administrators is crucial to its success. We hope that each one of you will take time out of your hectic schedule to take part in, learn about or give feedback to the Campaign for Community.

The Campaign for Community Steering Committee

To the Editor:

We let Radnor Township walk all over us. Most Villanova students dread moving off campus because of harsh restrictions enforced by Radnor Township. Laws regarding unrelated students living together increase each student's share of rent and limits affordable housing.

The newer dorms have soundproof windows because Radnor Township complained about noise. Off-campus students must bow down to the demands of the "community." Why? We live here too. Defend your own rights by voting Dr. Robert Langran onto the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners. Find out more Monday, Sept. 16, at 4 p.m. in Tolentine room 308.

Here's to democracy

To the Editor:

Ah, Democracy! A victory for the voters! Of the thousands of talented Pennsylvanians who could be our next Senator, we were almost forced to choose between two: Democrat Harris Wofford and Republican Richard Thornburgh.

But on June 10, a federal judge ruled Pennsylvania's selection system unconstitutional, because it violates the funadmental right to vote. Now, the voters will decide for themselves, thank you. It's about time the People take back some of their power.

Sincerely,
Jeff Bullock

COMMENTARY

From the desk of the President . . .

I am pleased to extend a most cordial greeting to the whole University community as we begin Villanova's 149th academic year. Yes, we are but one year away from celebrating our 150th anniversary. Founded in 1842, the University has designated the 1992-93 academic year for its observance of the Sesquicentennial and for more than a year now has been preparing an appropriate celebration of this historic occasion.

The completion of two major construction projects, now very visible on campus, should aptly coincide with the beginning of the anniversary celebration. The construction of the new Liberal Arts Center and the renovation of St. Thomas of Villanova Chapel should be completed in late spring. Each of these projects makes its own significant statement regarding the traditional identity and future direction of the University.

For its part the Liberal Arts Center will fill crucial and long-overdue needs for academic space on campus. Not only will it house numerous departments and administrative offices of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences, but it will free other space on campus for refurbishment to provide upgraded academic facilities to serve the whole University, as well as a more adequate Career Counseling Center. The new Liberal Arts Center will serve also to symbolize and to emphasize the centrality of the liberal arts to a Villanova undergraduate education. Each of the colleges of the University will benefit from the enhancements of the liberal arts programs which should flow from the closer interaction made possible by the new facilities.

St. Thomas Chapel, of course, has been Villanova's most distinctive landmark. The twin spires continue to symbolize Villanova to friends and neighbors and plant their long tradition in the hearts of present Villanovans as it has done to those of the past. The extensive renovation and repair have been planned carefully to preserve its traditional architecture, while meeting the aesthetic, liturgical and functional needs of an active and vibrant community.

A sesquicentennial observance affords the natural opportunity for an institution to deepen its awareness of its own identity. This is especially timely today as educational institutions wrestle with what is often perceived as tension between traditional identity and diversity. Educators are virtually unanimous that we must move urgently and steadily to prepare our institutions and our communities to live in a society, a nation and a world that is culturally diverse. The world, to be sure, has always been culturally diverse. What is different now is that we have both an unparalleled opportunity and a thrilling challenge to understand, to learn from and to profit from the increasing interplay of cultures.

Personally, I do not find a community's sense of identity and its appreciation of diversity at all antithetical. Properly understood and lived, Villanova's tradition should be especially open and congenial to the cultural possibilities facing us today. We often hear, speak of and, indeed, experience the warm, welcoming and friendly nature of the Villanova community. This is neither new, nor is it perfect, but we perceive it to be essential to Villanova: openness to differences and to diversity ought to be a natural extension and expression of our tradition.

A sesquicentennial observance affords the natural opportunity for an institution to deepen its awareness of its own identity.

Similarly, St. Thomas Chapel, which represents the religious and Catholic character of Villanova, is an inclusive rather than exclusive symbol. The vision of Catholicism which is characteristic of the Augustinian tradition from the time of Augustine himself has been one in which Catholic thought and life have interacted openly with society and culture. Many of the greatest moments in the life of the Church were those which resulted from the Church's intimate contacts with multiple cultures and other religions.

Villanova's strong commitment to the tradition of the liberal arts is another aspect of our Augustinian tradition which should only reinforce the community's appreciation of diversity. For centuries the study of the liberal arts (including the sciences) has been identified with open and critical inquiry nor can it be otherwise today. The genuine community of inquiry ideally envisioned in Villanova's tradition will not suffer fragmentation as it opens itself to differences, rather it will find its identity enriched in the pursuit of Villanova's motto truth, unity and love.

COMMENTARY

'Nova must let its hidden diversity shine through

By ELI GOLDBLATT

Very silly things have been said in the last year about "multiculturalism" and "politically correct" thinking. I fear that conversation at Villanova about "diversity" will be drawn into the same barnyard brawl.

In this media-fostered conflict nobody asks what the issues are — the winner simply kicks up the most feathers. Let me make a single claim about the need to have a variety of backgrounds and viewpoints represented in the Villanova community. Acceptance of "diversity" is crucial to the life of every person who works and plays on our campus. Without that acceptance, we become a self-censoring lot of slavish conformists.

> People who are not "vanilla" do not "diversify" a community by their very presence.

The joke I have heard about Villanova since I first arrived on campus is that it is "Vanillanova," so pure white that it has only one taste. People from many political points of view have used that expression to me, as though lamenting homogeneity makes it less oppressive. And yet what I have been struck with, again and again, is that the interests and experiences, the hopes and origins of Villanova people are markedly more diverse than anyone lets on.

I can't tell you how many students have revealed to me in conferences that they really "don't belong here." "Why?" I ask, and most answer that students are intolerant of difference, hostile to a desire to question the world and maybe change it. If I could just get all these people together.

Let me go public with the curious secret so many Villanovans harbor. All you folks out there who don't like the feel-good attitudes peers mouth in bars and organizational meetings — why not ask a friend if he or she has ever had doubts about the way things are supposed to be? If you've secretly yearned to have a discussion about a novel or a provocative article or a personal predicament, but you were afraid your roommates would laugh at you for "getting serious," why not turn off the television and talk about it anyway? If you're tired of pretending that you're as rich as the kid down the hall, why not ask yourself why rich people (who, after all, are a decided minority) should be our guide to right living? And, dollars to doughnuts most people you know have less money than you think.

People who are not "vanilla" do not "diversify" a community by their very presence. Non-white, non-Catholic or non-Western peoples can't be the sole bearers of the burden of difference. The only way our campus will benefit from its diversity is to embrace it, and that means recognizing and respecting profound differences that exist even among the white middle-class students who have acquiesced in the picture of themselves as an undifferentiated and apathetic mass.

Villanovans must stop wearing homogeneity as a badge of pride and start recognizing the wealth of backgrounds, economic conditions, ambitions, learning styles, talents and views of the world that already exist here and can be fostered. Once we accept that human beings are, as a rule, a shockingly diverse bunch, then people who have traditionally been absent from the Villanova club are far more likely to want to join and thrive and contribute to a celebration of our mixed tastes.

Support your beliefs

To the Editor:

Villanova graduate, state representative and pro-life hero, Steve Freind was honored at a small dinner on campus when classes reconvened after spring break. Hats off to Kristen Haaf and the other students in Villanovans for Life for paying tribute to this modern day "profile in courage." During the 100-hour campaign dubbed Operation Desert Storm, over 20,000 young Americans were killed in sterile, godless structures that are not only legally protected, but are also subsidized with our tax dollars. Freind, the kind of man that Villanova was founded to develop, remains in relentless pursuit of justice for the unborn and recognition of the sanctity of all human life.

You, the students of Villanova, will soon have the torch passed to you. You are further obligated to stand firm in your convictions because you have been guided along the straight paths. Remember, peace and justice does not begin in Central America or in the Middle East, it begins in the womb right here in our land. Every time a child is sucked out of the womb with a high-powered vacuum cleaner, the presence of God in our world is being rejected.

Welcome the unwanted and stand firm when modern society tells you that child sacrifice is a woman's right.

To the Editor:

Since 1987 the Student Coalition Against Apartheid and Racism (SCAAR) has raised campus wide awareness of the issues of apartheid in South Africa and its relation to racism in the United States. With programs such as meetings with representatives of the ANC and films and panel discussions with faculty, we have informed and educated Villanova concerning apartheid and current issues concerning South Africa.

This year, we are looking to expand on our past efforts and incorporate new ideas and perspectives in SCAAR. All, who have an interest in the issues SCAAR covers and those who would like to actively participate in making SCAAR work this year, are asked to attend our Sept. 17 meeting. We will meet this Tuesday, Sept. 17, at 7 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice Education.

Brook Farm exhibit portrays utopian life

By PEGGY AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

How often do we find a piece of history in our backyard, calling out for us to experience it? From now until Oct. 11 we can go to Falvey Memorial Library and step 150 years into the past.

We have all been told that college is the best four years of our lives. We live and work together for a common cause, almost in a utopia. It seems that the idea of a perfect community has always fascinated people. Falvey's display, "Brook Farm: A Retrospective and Celebration" allows us to view a utopian experiment of long ago.

Brook Farm is a utopian community that has interested people for years. Dr. Sterling Delano, of the English department, said that this is the first time an exhibit of this magnitude has taken place in a campus library. Falvey Library is very excited about this exhibit, which not only focuses on Brook Farm but also on other important events in 19th Century America.

> Falvey's display, "Brook Farm: A Retrospective and Celebration" brings us into a utopian experiment of long ago.

In a Villanova graduate school newsletter, Delano said that he had several reasons for wanting to put together the Brook Farm exhibit. One is that he is quite interested in the "pervasiveness of the utopian communal experience in American life." He is also interested in the reasoning behind people's desire to become part of a utopian community. Delano has studied 19th Century American utopianism and American Renaissance writers. He is the author of many articles and a book on these subjects.

The community at Brook Farm was founded in 1841 in West Roxbury, Massachusetts by George and Sophia Ripley. The community was nearly destroyed by a fire in 1846 and ceased to exist in 1847. It was an experiment in communal living, people working together toward the common goal of societal perfection. Some famous residents include Nathaniel Hawthorne, Ralph Waldo Emerson and feminist Margaret Fuller.

Students walk through Falvey Library each day and many probably walk right by the display cases on the second floor because they do not know what they are missing. The cases are full of photographs, letters, first edition

New commuters face realities

For many juniors, a new age is dawning. Gone are the days of tight squeezes in dorm rooms and waiting on lines for telephones and showers. Hall meetings and Resident Assistants (R.A.) are but faint memories. It's time to open a new chapter in the traditional Villanova experience. It's time to join the ranks of the upperclassmen and call yourself an off campus resident (O.C.R.)

Yes, ever since that trek to du Pont Pavillion to purchase the coveted parking sticker and that endless wait on line to change an address at the Registrar's Office, the life of the O.C.R. has certainly begun. Most will agree that the off-campus experience is well worth the work. Cooking, cleaning, laundry and the quest for parking spaces in the Main Lot are but small prices to pay for the mammoth increase in independence and freedom.

> Cooking, cleaning, laundry and the quest for parking spaces in the Main Lot are but small prices to pay for the mammoth increase in independence and freedom.

Students move off campus for many reasons. Bad luck in the housing lottery probably heads the list, but many students also seek the excitement and challenge of new responsibilities. Many agree that living on campus for two years offers an invaluable experience, but after that, the urge to expand into the real world (if only a little bit) quells any desire to remain in the residence halls.

So after a hetic summer of amassing roommates, looking for places to live, signing leases and moving in, the real fun begins as students search for kitchen tables, sofas, forks, glasses, beds, dishes and food — all those amenities that make a cozy home. After one masters the art of domesticity, the rest should be quite simple, right?

Wrong. Now the task of juggling schedules begins. Staying on campus for 16 hours a day is no longer a fate worse than death — it is a grim reality for those who have classes and meetings randomly throughout the day. The

Augustinian demonstrates 'Nova's worldwide influence

By MATTHEW J. BRENNAN
Editor in Chief

What do the Augustinians do after their ordination? Do they teach at Villanova? Do they visit the Vatican? Do they move to Merrimack College? Do they Christian theologize? Many priest may arrive at these places but they also may travel worldwide and relocate permanently in one of the Augustinian Order's many foreign missions or parishes. The Rev. Thomas Purcell, O.S.A., recently returned to Villanova on a visit from his home. Nagasaki, Japan. Purcell graduated from Villanova in 1943 and taught here from 1947 to 1952.

One of three to receive "the call" on Oct. 10, 1952, a foreign people and language confronted Purcell. But the Japanese welcomed him as one of their own.

After the intense study of Japanese at a Jesuit University in Tokyo, Purcell moved with his companions to Nagasaki where he learned the dialect and began to work in the newly created Augustinian parish. The Augustinians began this mission two years after the atom bomb annihilated Nagasaki including 8,000 Japanese Catholics.

The aftermath of atomic destruction accompanied the unfamiliar environment including radiation victims and deplorable living conditions. Purcell and his Augustinian comrades would contribute in the reconstruction of the city and with it the Japanese people.

Japanese Catholics were no strangers to adversity. In fact Christianity had existed in Japan for over 300 years, even though Japanese rulers outlawed religion for close to three centuries. In 1865 while directly defying government prohibition of religious practices, 15 elderly Japanese visited a French church built for the merchant sailors trading at the fishing port.

"They told the priest 'we are of the same heart as you,'" Purcell said. "They then kneeled and prayed in Latin and Japanese."

Soon after, other Japanese arrived at an English merchant church and became frightened by

Meet the dean of Engineering

Would you recognize the dean of your school if you saw him or her in Connelly Center? Or is your deam some anonymous signature at the bottom of a drop and add slip? Do you know the name of another school's dean? In order to create a real community here at Villanova, we should make a point of becoming acquainted with some of its members. Why don't we start with Dr. Robert Lynch, dean of the School of Engineering.

Lynch, an alumnus of Villanova, received his bachelor's degree in civil engineering in 1953. He then attended the University of Pennsylvania for his master's and achieved his doctorate from Notre Dame. As an officer in the Navy, Lynch served on an anti-submarine destroyer in the Atlantic.

Pursuing his professional career, Lynch worked as a structural engineer for Blauvelt Engineering Co. as well as McCormick, Taylor and Associates, Inc. His work involved him in the designing of local landmarks such as Veteran's Stadium and the Packer Avenue Marine Terminal. The next stage of Lynch's career brought him back to Villanova, where he became a dean in 1975.

In almost 30 years of experience with the School of Engineering, Lynch has seen many changes in teaching styles and resources. Classroom technology has never been so advanced. Computer projections, video tapes and other

In the crisp morning air Aug. 31, the campus sprung into action as the 1991 Freshman class took their first steps into college life. The freshmen embarked upon the New Student Orientation Program Saturday afternoon, wondering what the next four days would tell them about life at Villanova. By dividing the class into 76 student groups, the program hoped to familiarize students with the campus and provide opportunities for socialization.

> Orientation provided the students with a chance to become familiar with others and enabled them to ward off feelings of isolation.

The 1991 Orientation Program went smoothly and seemed to be successful, according to Dean of Students, Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A. Orientation was coordinated by Stack and Kathy Byrnes, the new Student Life Professional and assistant dean of Students. They were assisted by Patti Lawless, Student Chairperson, Aaron Nicodemus, Administrative Coordinator, the Steering Committee, 76 Orientation Counselors and 21 Administrative Assistants.

Some improvements were made to enhance this year's orientation program. The additions included a video presentation on "Campus Rape," followed by a group discussion. The Radnor police were on hand for a Public Safety Presentation suggesting how students can be "good neighbors" to the community. Orientation also included the traditional Welcoming Mass, Picnic Dinner and meetings with the academic deans. Entertainment was provided at night and featured "Murph" — the Physical Comedian, Coffeehouse with Brian Seymour and the Flamin' Caucasians Dance Band.

The Orientation Counselors (O.C.s) generally felt that orientation was a great success and despite some initial timidness, most of the freshmen became very enthusiastic. According to Mike Donahue, most students became involved in the activities and the campus took on a "basketball the Protestant priest's wife. Not only did the Japanese fear the West, but they also did not know that Protestant priests could marry. "Before they fled, they told the priest, that they had waited for 300 years and that they were the same as him. They had their own underground Christian groups within their neighborhoods for 200 years," said Purcell.

The Japanese government soon discovered the underground defiance of their strict religious laws and found 5,000 Christians who were to be put to death. But the French and English protested the death penalty and finally in 1873 the government declared freedom of religion. "The people in my parish are the direct descendents of these people," Purcell explained proudly. "The church is still very minor in the country, only 1 percent of the population is Christian. We still rely on the United States for Augustinians to run things."

Purcell's parish provides instruction for non-Catholics and Catholics alike in Nagoya, a desire for a nap or a chance to catch up on "General Hospital" cannot overcome the looming notions of traffic lights and the worst nightmare of all — road construction!

But wait, there is hope. Connelly Center is now the place to be because anyone who is anyone off campus calls that hallowed "ski lodge" home. Sleeping in public is no longer an embarrassment, it is a necessity. "Last year, I only went to Connelly to use the bank machines or see a movie with my friends. Now I feel comfortable to just come and hang out between classes. I recognize everyone here," explained one junior.

The parking lot saga is a bit less pleasing. Now commuters quickly realize that waking up at 8:25 a.m. for an 8:30 a.m. class cannot happen according to all laws of time and space. Punctuality is the order of the day as the Main Lot seems to get smaller every day. It is not uncommon to see cars lurking in the aisles waiting to pounce on the first available space. Some students attempt to get ahead by following other students as they walk to their cars. Other students have threatened to post lookouts in the elevated security stations in the parking lot. Whatever way you choose to park, you may be sure that it is an exercise in creativity.

All in all, the exodus to freedom is a great experience. One junior said, "I can have as many people as I want over for as long as I want. There are not visitation hours to abide by or resident assistants or security guards to answer to."

Like any other life situation, off campus living has its trials and tribulations. Most would agree that the joys far surpass the tragedies. But then again, the semester has only begun.

SPC presents films

By GRETCHEN FISHER

Villanova students now have a reason to look forward to Mondays. This fall, the Cultural Film Series will feature a lineup of ten movies concerning the unforgettable decade of the 1960s. Entitled "A Nation in Turmoil: From Woodstock to Watergate," the series features an added bonus of lectures which will preface each evenings' event. The lectures will be given by guest speakers knowledgeable about the specific subject of the night.

Sept. 9, Chris Sharrett spoke on the all-time favorite "Rebel Without a Cause" starring James Dean. The next movie, on Sept. 16, the classic "Dr. Strangelove," will be accompanied by a discussion with Len Shyles and Adele Lindenmeyer.

Sept. 23, Bobby Seale will elaborate on the documentary "Berkeley in the Sixties." Joan Lynch, a specialist in feminism, will explore "The Graduate" Sept. 30, and Jeanne Allen, also a specialist in feminism, will focus on "Julia" Nov. 18.

Writer/philosopher John Caputo will discuss the politics of "the other" during his presentation before "Little Big Man" Oct. 7. Barbara Wall and Andrew Smith will explore "Hearts and Minds" Oct. 14, and Matt Kerbel will elaborate on "All the President's Men" Dec. 9. The Vietnam War will be explored by veteran Jim Kirschke during his presentation before the award-winning "Born on the Fourth of July," which will be shown Nov. 11. game atmoshere" during the cheers. Orientation provided the students with a chance to become familiar with others and enabled them to ward off feelings of isolation. Two orientation counselors, Bruce Matzinger and "Jolly John" Mulligan, said that orientation was not only rewarding for the freshmen but for the counselors as well. They called the four days a "positive experience" for everyone, four days where they could remember themselves as freshmen and better understand how the new students felt. According to O.C. Chris Dincuff (a.k.a. "Dink"), the freshmen seemed to benefit from orientation and enjoy the socialization activities. He received a letter from a student in his group, thanking him and expressing how beneficial the four days were.

Orientation provided a chance fo the students to begin to speak out in discussion and feel more at ease when meeting other students. As one O.C. put it, "if you can do the Father Abraham cheer before strangers, then you can speak out anywhere." Many O.C.s said they hope the freshmen hold on to the lessons learned during orientation. According to several O.C.s, it is essential to keep your spirits up, try not to close yourself off from meeting new people and, above all, have a good time.

The display, according to the library guidebook, attempts to be "a tribute to and a reminder of the spirit that animated an age — a spirit that has been more evident in certain periods than at others, but one which has been, from the beginning, fundamental to the unique phenomenon known as the American experience."

His diet has changed dramatically since his meals at Dougherty. An average meal consists of ikizakana or sashi fish an abundantly available food source at the fishing ports situated on the China Sea. Ask what the allure is in raw fish, Purcell smiles and says, "It goes down like jello."

Purcell also observed that Asian languages might sometimes be intimidating. But he also explained that even the young children speak Japanese well. So for those people who might be interested in pursuing Japanese as a second language, Purcell encourages their interest and stresses verbal discourse.

"If at all possible learn the kanji or characters. The kanji are Chinese characters that make up the Japanese language. Sinsai (meaning professor in Japanese; Purcell uses it as a reference to Prof. Masaka Hamada, the head of Villanova's Japanese program) is a wonderful teacher from Kawasaki, a suburb of Tokyo, who will teach you. Like any language, memorization along with discourse is the key to mastering Japanese," said Purcell.

visual aids are invaluable supplements to class notes. Lynch hopes that, in time, Villanova will be able to provide students with satellite link-ups and other state of the art resources.

Although Lynch has not noticed a change in the students during his Villanova career, he feels that the opportunities awaiting graduates are different. He is optimistic about the American engineering major. With the recent breakdown of communism, job markets may open up in Russia and Germany. Lynch also believes more jobs may become available in energy, reconstruction, environment and space, once the U.S. government finds the funds to address these issues. "The American engineer will be an endangered species because they will be in constant demand," said Lynch.

New Foreigner singer speaks

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

Foreigner's lead singer, Johnny Edwards spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive interview for the Villanovan.

After the discrumbled yet saddened departure of longtime lead singer, Lou Gramm, Foreigner found itself at a cross roads. Their past two albums, Agent Provocateur and Inside Information, trailed the band toward adult-contemporary music. They began to be lumped in with such uncomfortable company such as Chicago. It became apparent with hit singles, "I Want to Know What Love Is" and "Say You Will" that the guitar crunch and raunch, that they once had, dissipated. Now in 1991, new frontman Johnny Edwards has jump started the band, giving it new life and regaining its stature in the world of rock.

Villanovan: How did you hook up with Foreigner?

Johnny Edwards: "Basically I had tapes floating around. I was promoting my own band called Northrope. We were based in Sacramento. We spent three years shopping around. Nothing happened, so I left. Then a friend of mine at a record company said I should send in a tape for the Foreigner gig. So I did, but I didn't really pay too much attention to it. I soon moved to L.A. to start another band, Wild Horses, who has a new LP out as we speak. We ended up getting offers from three different record companies. We signed to Atlantic, (laughs) . . . low and behold two weeks later, Mick (Mick Jones, Foreigner leader; guitarist; keyboardist) called me up. We met in a hotel lobby and flew out to New York that night."

V: How did you find it, filling a major lead singer's shoes? Suddenly you are in the Sammy Hagar (Van Halen) — Johnny Van Zant (Lynyrd Skynyrd) position?

J.E.: "You just have to decide in your own mind what you want to achieve. It's a sacrifice on your part to give up some of your own identity as an artist. I wouldn't have done it, if Mick didn't give me the freedom that he did on this record. Although we had to retain a few identifiable trademarks, if we were gonna (sic) call it Foreigner. But, I feel I hold my own. The live situation is the best. I have a good time proving myself each night. People sit back for the first couple of songs to check things out. So far, I don't hear anybody complaining."

V: Did you feel the pressure on you about being accepted by Foreigner fans?

J.E.: "The good thing about Foreigner is that they don't have a fierce cult following much like Metallica does. Foreigner appeals to the mainstream audience who appreciate straight English/American rock. People don't seem to feel slighted, I don't get a lot of that."

V: Was the record company welcoming?

J.E.: "I don't know. (laughs) That's a good question, their hard to read. If you're on their label they're always gonna (sic) back you. But, Mick has been so successful that they gave us a lot of leeway. I think we threw them off a bit. After the last two albums, they were wet to promote an adult-contemporary rock much like Chicago. But, when I entered the picture things were different. One of the reasons they picked me was to get back to the rock feel that they had in the beginning. I feel responsible for that and that makes me feel good."

V: Did you vocally practice with some old Foreigner songs?

J.E.: "Not really. I performed two or three of those songs in earlier bar bands. I knew that I could sing them. I got away from that style, cause I was looking for an original sound. I tried to get away from sounding like Foreigner/Bad Company, bands I had obviously been influenced by."

V: Are the guys in the band still in touch and on good terms with Lou Gramm?

J.E.: "No, (laughs) . . . they're not. The last few years were tension filled. After the 4 album and tour, that's when the rotting of the band started to set in. Lou saw himself as a rock singer and then the band's next single was 'I Want to Know What Love Is,' it touched off a lot of nerves with everyone. Although, Lou held the band as a safety net. He didn't directly come out and say, 'o.k. this is what I'm gonna do.' There apparently was no enjoyment left for him. But, it wasn't fair for the rest of the guys in the band. I don't know Lou. I'd like to meet him, cause we got (sic) a lot in common."

V: How would you compare yourself vocally with Lou Gramm?

J.E.: "I think I have a raspier voice. I also have a bit of a lower voice. He's a natural tenor. I'm a natural baritone. I can reach the same notes but when I do it, it's with a bit more edge, more tension."

V: Who were your earliest influences in the realm of vocal styling?

The Flamin' Caucasians performed in du Pont Sept. 3.

Caucasians jam du Pont

By AARON NICODEMUS
Staff Reporter

Orientation's Option Night gave the new students several choices for entertainment on the program's third day. They could choose between Brian Seymour and a film in the Connelly Cinema. None was more exciting, though, than the Flamin' Caucasians concert in du Pont Pavillion. Considered the number one party band in the Delaware Valley, the Caucasians lived up to their billing. In a two-hour show, the band pumped out hit after hit, only stopping once to catch its breath.

Most of the Flamin' Caucasians songs are covers of popular oldies, like "Wild Thing," "Twist and Shout," "Louie Louie" and "Wooly Booly." Some of its songs fall short of the originals, but a party band cannot be everything at once. Although their songs are not new, they play with such energy and power that people just get up and dance. Over 600 new students packed in front of the du Pont stage to hear the show.

The Caucasians show had a fat, powerful sound without much background noise.

Unlike past du Pont shows where the sound system distorted the music, the Caucasians show had a fat, powerful sound without much background noise. They went from one song to another without hesitation and kept everyone moving.

The Caucasians have performed for several consecutive years at Villanova, and have never failed to please. They are not the average cover band. They do not have a set song list, and they play requests as often as possible. They also are fairly successful, having played as the house band for WMMR for five years, for the Philadelphia 76ers home games and for numerous night clubs and resorts, as well as for the Morton Downey, Jr. Show.

The Flamin' Caucasians are a classic example of being in the right place, at the right time. In the middle of the "hard rock revival," the band caters to the classic rock audience.

If this is the kind of inexpensive entertainment that you want to find, the Flamin' Caucasians play many shows up and down the Main Line, as well as in Center City. While they are not the Rolling Stones, Led Zeppelin, the Beatles and Bruce Springsteen rolled into one, they are a fun concert to experience.

Tasty Outlook for new season

By COLEEN KENIREY
Staff Reporter

The Villanova Theatre will launch its new season Oct. 9 with the opening of "Ice Cream." British playwright Caryl Churchill's creation will be the first in a series of five plays which will be part of the "Season of Just Desserts." All of this season's selections address the issue of responsibility in its various forms and each approaches the subject from a unique angle.

Churchill's contribution is a comedy which follows an American couple to England in its search for the past. The author explores modern values as her characters are drawn into a web of murder by their newly-found relatives. "Ice Cream" will be performed Wednesdays and Sundays, Oct. 9-20.

An American drama by Arthur Miller, "All My Sons," will follow as the second production of the season. Set in the post-World War II period, the play centers around Joe Keller, whose ruthless actions cause conflict between he and his son. Miller's probe into the human emotions of greed and guilt can be seen Nov. 20-24 and Dec. 4-8.

From Feb. 5-9 and 12-16, the Theater will present William Shakespeare's "All's Well That Ends Well." It is the story of the aristocrat Bertram and Helena, the woman who loves him and proves to be superior in virtue and cunning.

All of this season's selections address the issue of responsibility in its various forms.

In the next production, Athol Fugard examines a boy's coming-of-age in "Master Harold and the Boys." Set against the backdrop of South African apartheid, the play reveals the relationship between the boy, his mother and their black employees. The play will run Feb. 25-29 with a studio production March 1.

The final offering of the season will be "Damn Yankees," a collaborative musical comedy by Richard Adler and Jerry Ross. Running March 25-29 and April 1-12, "Damn Yankees" looks at a baseball fan who sells his soul to the devil for the opportunity to win the World Series.

Fall movies offer originality

By AARON NICODEMUS

Defenseless

Directed by Martin Campbell
New Visions Pictures

One might think a movie that combines the talents of Barbara Hershey and Sam Shepard might be worthy of high praise. Their reputations alone might carry a film. Yet even with such promise, "Defenseless" turns out to be another average film.

The story opens with a high-priced lawyer (Hershey) representing (and having an affair with) a real estate mogul who owns property all over town. One of his buildings is rented by Blue Star Productions, a B-rate pornographic movie studio. Since Blue Star's films have starred minors (one girl is just 14), it is preparing for prosecution. When Hershey's client turns up dead, the questions about who murdered him and why are to be answered by Shepard, who plays the detective assigned to the case.

Hershey's lover is married to a Southern belle, played by Mary Beth Hurt. Hurt is Hershey's college roommate, as well as her best friend. Her role is pivotal to the film, and is adequately, but not outstandingly, played. The same can be said for the quality of all the acting in "Defenseless."

There are many twists to this plot, but none of them are surprises. Although "Defenseless" desperately tries to keep the viewer on edge, it never does. The ending is not a surprise, and the action building up to this finale does not hold the audience's attention. Hershey and Shepard plow through their roles with little style. Their interaction is dry and too matter of fact. Since they seem to be bored with their characters, so does the viewer.

"Defenseless" does have some merit. It's entertaining and it will be enjoyable to guess the conclusion. Watching Barbara Hershey physically punish two men with her bare hands seems ironic compared to the film's title, though it is fun to watch. But as for "Defenseless," wait for the video.

Dead Again

Directed by Kenneth Branagh
Paramount Pictures

Some movies make you cry, some make you think, and some simply make you want to leave the theater. "Dead Again" easily falls into the third category. If you spend your hard earned money on "Dead Again," you may get a laugh but you will not see a quality movie.

The confusing plot begins when detective Mike Church (played by director, Kenneth Branagh) is hired to locate a missing, beautiful woman who has lost her memory. They meet a mysterious hypnotist named Frankie who reveals that they have all spent past lives together. It turns out this woman, called numerous names throughout the film, was murdered in 1945. Her husband was arrested, sentenced and electrocuted a short time later. Now the dead have been reincarnated in new bodies to eventually seek revenge on their enemies. The remainder of the movie jumps between the present and the past (in black and white).

As the film progresses, the viewer is supposed to become entranced in the lives of the characters, both past and present. The effect, however, is just the opposite. All the same actors, playing different roles in different times without any charisma makes effect a failure. Amidst all the pageantry, one cannot help but giggle.

"Dead Again" does not lack originality, but it does take itself too seriously. The melodrama builds into a climactic ending that has audiences gasping in laughter, not suspense. Not one character is convincing, and the plot is too intricate to follow. If it had meant to be a comedy, "Dead Again" could have been the sleeper hit of the fall season. As it is, this film will most likely be reincarnated as a cult classic.

J.E.: "My first concert was Humble Pie, I thought if I could sing like Steve Marriot it would be just great. Nobody gets me as fired up as he does. But I grew up with English blues rockers John Waite, David Coverdale, Paul Rogers, Robert Plant along with a lot of Motown guys like Otis Redding and Ray Charles. But, it was the English guys that really turned my ear."

V: The new record is really kicking. Foreigner seems to have gone back to more guitar oriented rock. Do you see the future of the band heading in that direction?

J.E.: "We set out to do that. If we released a ballad as a first single, we felt it would kill the band's aptitude as a touring rock act."

V: Speaking of the first single, "Lowdown and Dirty," it seems as if it has been a standard for years. It has that everlasting sound. How was that captured?

J.E.: "Mick's pretty good at coming up with these riffs. Most guitarists try to over shoot with complicated licks for the listener. Mick's not a flashy guitarist. He can come up with riffs that are fresh yet based on the same ol' bag of tricks."

V: The new songs hold up real well. The transition of the new vocals seems so smooth. Was it as easy as it sounds?

J.E.: "None of this was very easy. Having to second guess the record company and the audience of what we should sound like and what we wanted to sound like. We made some attempt to sound like the old band. We spent a year recording and writing so ideas were flying left and right."

V: How do you feel the new material will transfer live?

J.E.: "When we do the live set, it's interesting. It's an incredible list of hit songs. There are incredible bursts of energy. The new stuff doesn't get that response yet. "Lowdown" has gotten a lot of airplay and that always goes over well. But it really depends on the grooves, we hit the right groove and they jam out."

V: When do you plan to hit the road and who will you go out with?

J.E.: "We're looking for a happening upcoming band to help sell tickets due to the recession crunch on the rock scene this year. It's pretty ugly out there. Even Guns N' Roses didn't do what they thought they would. But some bands feel they don't fit in cause they think it's gonna be a whole set of 'I Want to Know What Love Is' and 'Waiting For a Girl Like You.' We've just got to get out there and reprove ourselves as a driving rock force."

Quit smoking.

Vandross expresses love

By CHRISTINA FRANGOS
Assistant Entertainment Editor

SPOTLIGHT

SPOTLIGHT: Luther Vandross has long been a contender in the R&B category as a premier male vocalist. His latest effort, "Power of Love," seems to be heading in the same double-platinum direction.

Vandross has adopted a new flair for synthesized sound. Power of Love is a strong, promising compilation of Vandross' sensual, if not spiritual voice mixed with modern rhythm tracks and upbeat backing vocals. This is evidently a winning combination for the reigning king of love songs, because his new brand of "feel good" music has stumped critics and fans alike.

The first-released title track, "Power of Love/Love Power," is incredibly uplifting. It is reminiscent of Luther's ancient hit "Sugar and Spice," but better with the rhythm arrangement genius of Marcus Miller. Faith in love is the prevailing message here. As Vandross commands, "You've got to believe in love/ It's a feeling that's next to none/ Can't stop until we are one/ With the power of love." But the true power of this song is its second and surely better half, "Love Power." These verses include backup vocals by Cissy Houston and upcoming soul star Lisa Fischer.

Vandross' love fantasy lives on in "The Rush." Another side of Vandross is shown here. Always promising love is positive, he is enigmatic about the "rush" it creates. Thought provoking and raw, the song exemplifies his talent and range.

Maybe a new sense of confidence and maturity are what has changed Luther Vandross. Titles like "Don't Want to Be a Fool" and "I'm Gonna Start Today" are evidence of this when compared to Any Love's "She Won't Talk To Me" and "Are Your Gonna Love Me." Perhaps Vandross appeared as a capitalizing sap with his last release, "The Best of Luther Vandross: The Best of Love;" a two-disc collection of his personal favorites. Whatever the case may be, Vandross's vocal strength and personal confidence are exuded with each melody. He will be appearing at Madison Square Garden in New York Oct. 2 and 3. Later concert dates starting in New Jersey and Connecticut will be announced.

FLASH: Prince appeared on the Arsenio Hall Show Monday night in promotion of his new album, Diamonds and Pearls. Aside from co-host Patti LaBelle and the brief appearance by audience member Sheila E., he was the sole guest. His new band, the New Power Generation, sparked his new sound, somewhat funkier but as sensuous as his previous works. After four costume changes, confetti falling from the ceiling and tambourines distributed to the crowd, who can deny that Prince is back? What made the mini-concert a hit, however, was Prince's performance of new songs as well as old favorites. One disappointment was the lack of an interview after the show. Fans would have to wonder what the conditions were for Prince to agree to play. No interview, perhaps. Misleading? Definitely. The new album will be released Oct. 2.

SPARKS: Oprah Winfrey celebrated the fifth anniversary of her Emmy-award-winning talk show this week. The show has been a personal and professional triumph for Winfrey, who overcame talk show legend Phil Donahue in their afternoon time slot ... Fellow talk show host Geraldo Rivera is revealing all in his new autobiography Exposing Myself. If the gamut of abnormal and exciting people he meets with each day are not enough, fans of the once acclaimed TV journalist can learn more about the man behind the scandal. While the publicity Rivera receives from the book may be compensation enough, all proceeds go to the Maravilla Foundation which sends underprivileged children to college ... Maury Povich will star as the host of his own talk show this fall. It seems that his previous coverage on "A Current Affair" was simply too frivolous for the inquisitive husband of television news reporter Connie Chung. Perhaps the couple's personal business won't raid the news scene this season.

Solo Sambora needs soul

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

ROCK QUARRY

Richie Sambora might be a bit too confident. His success with Bon Jovi has earned him respect as one half of a brilliant pop songwriting team. His guitar playing, although respectable, was never featured. This is simply because he was always one part of a machine, a hit making machine. On his new solo venture, Stranger in This Town, Richie imitates artists such as Eric Clapton, who guest spots on "Mr. Bluesman" and guitar wizard Jeff Healy.

Sambora's vocal performance surpasses his guitar solos. Songs such as "River of Love" and "The Answer" stretch his vocal capabilities beyond the occasional background lyric off a Bon Jovi ballad.

The sincere problem that staggers Sambora is the mask he wears desperately trying to present himself as the blues man that he is not. In tunes "Church of Desire" and "Father Time," he merely appears — a cartoon, similar to that of Ralph Macchio's character in "Crossroads."

Sambora's cover is blown as he tries to sneak a Bon Jovi track, left over from the New Jersey studio sessions, "Rosie," into the listing. It is incredible that someone who is known for empty pop compilations expects to be respected as a serious, soulful blues figure. From his Stevie Ray Vaughn outfits to his Clapton-wanna-be guitar notes, it is saddening. At least he chose good role models.

David Bowie, one of the world's most elaborate performers, gets back to the basics once again with his straight ahead rock-and-roll foursome, Tin Machine. After a heated dispute over the art, which originally exposed male genitalia on ancient greek Kouros statues, Tin Machine II lives up to its expectations, to some extent.

Bowie's sagging solo career seems to have refurbished interest in this rock outfit. But, does Bowie have any kick left in him? He does not seem to have the beautifully channeled anger that he had on "Under the God" from Tin Machine. Regardless, his lyrics have improved as well as his rhythm guitar playing.

The band has tightened as a unit which is evident on tracks, "One Shot" and "You Can't Talk." Guitarist Reeves Gabriels serves up a well rounded sound which seems a bit more orchestrated from the last effort.

Bowie's vocals seem to flow easily as his vocal strength remains at a relaxed pace which works on "Goodbye Mr. Ed" and "Shopping for Girls." The focus is lost at points which lead the band into a mood-rock category without the melody, however.

The ironic point of this album is its best two tracks which involve Bowie the least. A blues song, sung by drummer Hunt Sales, labeled "Stateside" and an unlisted, untitled instrumental strike to the core of the band's unbridled energy.

Perhaps Bowie is holding the Machine back. Perhaps the band has not peaked. Tim Palmer's production is also a bit stale. Some guitar is lost along with Sales' tremendous drum sound. It proves that Hugh Padgham, who produced the first single, "One Shot," should have produced the whole album.

GOIN' UNDERGROUND: Currently flowing through the market is a high quality recording of Guns N' Roses' performance at the Rock in Rio II show in Rio De Janero, simply entitled Brazil. Added on the disc is a two-song clip of their performance at Farm Aid III. Songs from their upcoming albums, Use Your Illusion I & II are featured along with favorites from Appetite For Destruction. The packaging runs parallel with the sound quality, donning a close up of Axl Rose, complete with notes that reveal all six members' real names.

SINGLE SPOTLIGHT: Big Audio Dynamite II has risen to its expectations as its first single, "Rush" is released from its new album, The Globe. The combination of DJ sampling, along side guitar riffs and a backbeat reminiscent of the Clash put some flavor into what has been a fairly tasteless year for music.

PEBBLES: U2's new album, Achtung, Baby is due early in November. The leading single will be entitled, "The Fly" and will be released to radio stations in late October. They plan to tour extensively, but not until the summer of 1992 ... Michael Jackson's long-awaited LP Dangerous will arrive in October. However, the video for his lead-off single, "Black or White" will premiere in late September ... Tuesday marks the final and confirmed release date for the Guns N' Roses albums, Use Your Illusion I & II.

Censorship tested on "Just Say Anything"

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

Just Say Yes
Various Artists
Sire Records
 1/2

In 1987, Sire Records created a series of progressive dance tracks that has grown into the cult collection entitled Just Say Yes. To date, the series is composed of five CDs that aptly chart the immersion of new-wave, alternative bands of the late '80s and early '90s.

The goal of Sire's winter CD music sampler is to expose the bands that are controversial and therefore overlooked by major record companies. On the surface, the tracks are filled with hypnotic rhythms and synthesized sounds, but underneath lies universal themes such as materialism, freedom of speech and world-harmony.

Perhaps one of the most outstanding features of the series is the variety of music that is presented. Ofra Haza's club mix of "Wish Me Luck" is an obvious dance floor favorite, yet "Help Us, Somebody" by Chris Thomas is a smooth cry for redemption.

On any other, less-focused album, the placement of the tracks may seem strange, but on the fourth volume, Just Say Da, the combination is more than appropriate. Some regular artists are Depeche Mode, Erasure, Morrissey, The Mighty Lemon Drops and, oddly enough, rapper Ice-T. These performers give the series the diversity from which Just Say Yes was created.

> Perhaps one of the most outstanding features of the series is the variety of music that is presented.

The fifth edition entitled Just Say Anything is dedicated to the basic right of freedom of speech and all the tracks push this right to the ultimate limit. Hence, the Parental Advisory Explicit Lyrics sticker on the cover of the fourth and fifth editions. "In my book, parental guidance is always suggested. If you need a sticker to tell you that you need to guide your child, you're a dumb f---ing parent anyhow," comments rapper Ice-T.

"Censorship of any artist's work, whether for moral or political reasons, should be reacted to with pure indignation and rage. Theirs is the religion of self-expression, of making sense out of an altogether too strewn-about world," said Jeff Heiskell of the JudyBats. Even the titles of the individual albums suggest the evolution of freethinking during the past five years. They begin with Just Say Yes, Just Say Yo, Just Say Mao and end with Just Say Da and finally, Just Say Anything.

The majority of the songs are remixes of tunes heard on the albums of these progressive, rock and rap bands. For example, Depeche Mode's "Personal Jesus" is dubbed the "Kazan Cathedral Mix." Danielle Dax's "Big Blue '82" has been formed into the "Zen Mix." Therefore, die-hard fans of the collected performers get an added treat as they listen to old favorites.

Just Say Yes, the series, is not for the average listener, nor is it for the politically inept. To merely listen to the music for the sound would be to miss the deeper meaning from which the series was born. These artists establish independence through their music and security through their lyrics. All are unafraid of the mainstream who often determine what the public hears. They are willing to take a stand against injustice and strongly urge that others do the same. It is amazing that an album can have that type of affect on the listener. Just Say Yes has reached the point to where all other socially-conscious albums strive to be.

Although Just Say Yes will not jump out at you in the record stores, it is a collection that deserves much more attention than it gets. The dance tracks are ideal, and the rock songs play hard. Sire's Winter CD Music Sampler is one of the most complete and polished series on the market today.

Cabaret Corner

The Bullet Boys will appear at Chestnut Cabaret Sept. 14.

Bullet Boys will appear locally

By E. VAUGHN VOGEL
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Appearing at the Chestnut Cabaret Sept. 14 is LA's own Bullet Boys. Their music has been called "power groove rock," played by a band that laughs a lot.

The band is comprised of Marq Torien on vocals, Mick Sweda on guitar, Lonnie Vencent on the bass and Jimmy D-Anda on drums.

Torien, the smooth frontman, brings his own intensity to the show which bludgeons the senses mercilessly. His stage presence shows hints of internal chaos, while hearing him confirms the notion.

Together, the band proves to be a combustive force which hits you in the gut, the face and the heart and leaves you smiling, waiting for more.

Appearing with the Bullet Boys are Black Eyed Susan and The Scream. The Scream, a blues-based rock and roll powerhouse includes Bruce Bouillet, John Alderete, Walt Woodward and Philadelphia's own John Corabi.

Bouillet and Alderete, who have been recognized for their prowess as guitar players in their former band Racer-X, have joined two talented musicians. This union has become an authentic, rock solid mix that enjoys a wide musical spectrum.

CABARET FLASH: The Average White Band will be performing at the 23 East Cabaret Sept. 14. AWB's music can best be described as a mix of jazz and vintage soul. Their music suggests influences of Marvin Gaye, The Isleys, James Brown and Cannonball Adderly.

Their sound is not a mimic of American Soul, but rather a creation of their own R&B played with a sense of real conviction.

Lion offers live entertainment

By E. VAUGHN VOGEL
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The Main Lion is developing a strong reputation for the quality live entertainment. Local talent as well as nationally known bands, have graced the Main Lion's stage in the past.

With live bands almost every Wednesday through Saturday, it is no wonder that the Lion is becoming popular with college students.

Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays feature free Happy Hour all-you-can-eat buffet nights with B B Q, American and Mexican cuisine. Combine low cover charges and fantastic music and all of the ingredients are present for a terrific night club and sports bar. With a large bar, pool tables, pinball, a dance floor, air hockey and plenty of room to relax, the Main Lion will keep you entertained.

Vince Vance and the Valiants made their way to the Lion Sept. 5 bringing their own amusing style to the stage. With a wholesome, fun-loving, musical stage revue, Vince Vance and the Valiants performed classic radio hits in colorful costumes with graceful choreography.

The group performed a wide mix of tunes from their large repertoire of classic golden hits. Vance performed music from a range of artists such as Elvis and Madonna.

Although the band lacked the musical talent characteristic of the Lion's typical performances, Vance made up for it with witty humor and crowd interaction. The best performance of the night came from a bar patron who uninhibitedly sang Buddy Holly's "Peggy Sue" in front of an entire crowd, sending them into an uproar.

The Main Lion offers College Night every Wednesday night with drink specials and college music, perfect for the student with a tight budget.

The Student Programming Council (SPC) has planned a wide variety of fun-filled activities for the weeks ahead, including numerous comics for that good laugh and a '50 s style drive-in movie slated for Sept. 20.

Perhaps your lifelong dream is to be a Club MTV dancer. The wild video Dance Party being held tomorrow night is the perfect chance for students to strut their stuff. According to Jeanne Maguire, assistant director of the SPC, over 1,000 people will run out at 8 p.m. to the Jake Nevin Field House for this fun-filled, annual event. The cost per person is $3.

The SPC is sponsoring a free white water rafting trip to the Poconos Sept. 22. Sign-up is in the SPC office located in Connelly Center.

There will be an All-Day Nintendo Challenge Sept. 30 and Oct. 1 in the Quad. Large booths, with numerous games, will be set up and all are welcome to sign up and compete. Along with the competitions, there will be a chance for someone to win a trip to Disney World for the National Championship Nintendo Challenge. The SPC will also be sponsoring a chance to win a car, a GEO Storm.

Other events to watch for are the Athletics Pep Rally to be held Oct. 3, in the du Pont Pavillion. This event will honor all the sports teams, and will include numerous speakers and performances by the band. Also, a Christmas Tree Lighting is scheduled for Dec. 2, at 5 p.m. in the Kennedy Mall. More doctors recommend extra-strength HP.

More and more PhDs across the country are recommending Hewlett-Packard financial and scientific calculators to their students. And for some very strong reasons.

"The HP 48SX Scientific Expandable has powerful graphics tools that are remarkably helpful to students learning mathematical concepts. And with the equation solver feature, it's excellent for applying mathematics to engineering," according to Dr. William Rahmeyer, a professor of civil and environmental engineering at Utah State University.

"The HP Business Consultant II has an equation solver and extensive math functions. These free the students from computational tedium so they can think and interact on a higher level," says Dr. Lee V. Stiff, a professor of math education at North Carolina State University.

Colombo sparks Cats to 48-7 win

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Assistant Sports Editor

What a way to start the season for the Cats.

With the help of four Maine turnovers, an attacking defense, the passing of Tommy Colombo, and the receiving of tight end Scott Donald, the Wildcats opened up a 27-0 halftime lead and totally buried Maine in the Yankee Conference opener for both teams. On the strength of the victory, Villanova is now 16th in the country for Division 1-AA.

"This was totally unexpected," said 'Nova Head Coach Andy Talley. "Maine is always a tough place to play and we thought we would be in for a real war. But we played extremely well and had no turnovers."

The play of junior quarterback Colombo really set the tone for the whole game. He was 20 of 33 for 263 yards with two touchdowns and no interceptions. "Tommy Colombo was terrific. He was the difference," said Talley. For his accomplishments, Colombo was named Yankee Conference Offensive Player of the Week and the Boston Globe Player of the Week.

Tight end Scott Donald also had a career-high day with six catches for 84 yards including three touchdowns.

You knew it was the Cats' day when kicker Bill Hoffman put 'Nova on the board first with a 41-yard field goal directly into the wind. Then it was Colombo's turn to take over as he hit Donald from 23 yards out and again from two yards out to put the Cats up 17-0.

Tommy Colombo was terrific. He was the difference.
Head Coach Andy Talley

Running back Pat Kennedy, who rushed for 113 yards on just 16 carries, scored on an 8-yard run and Hoffman nailed another field goal, this one from 40 yards out, to send the Cats into the locker room up 27-0. Brad Parpan then came on for Colombo and closed out the scoring by hitting Donald for a 12-yard touchdown pass to make it 48-7.

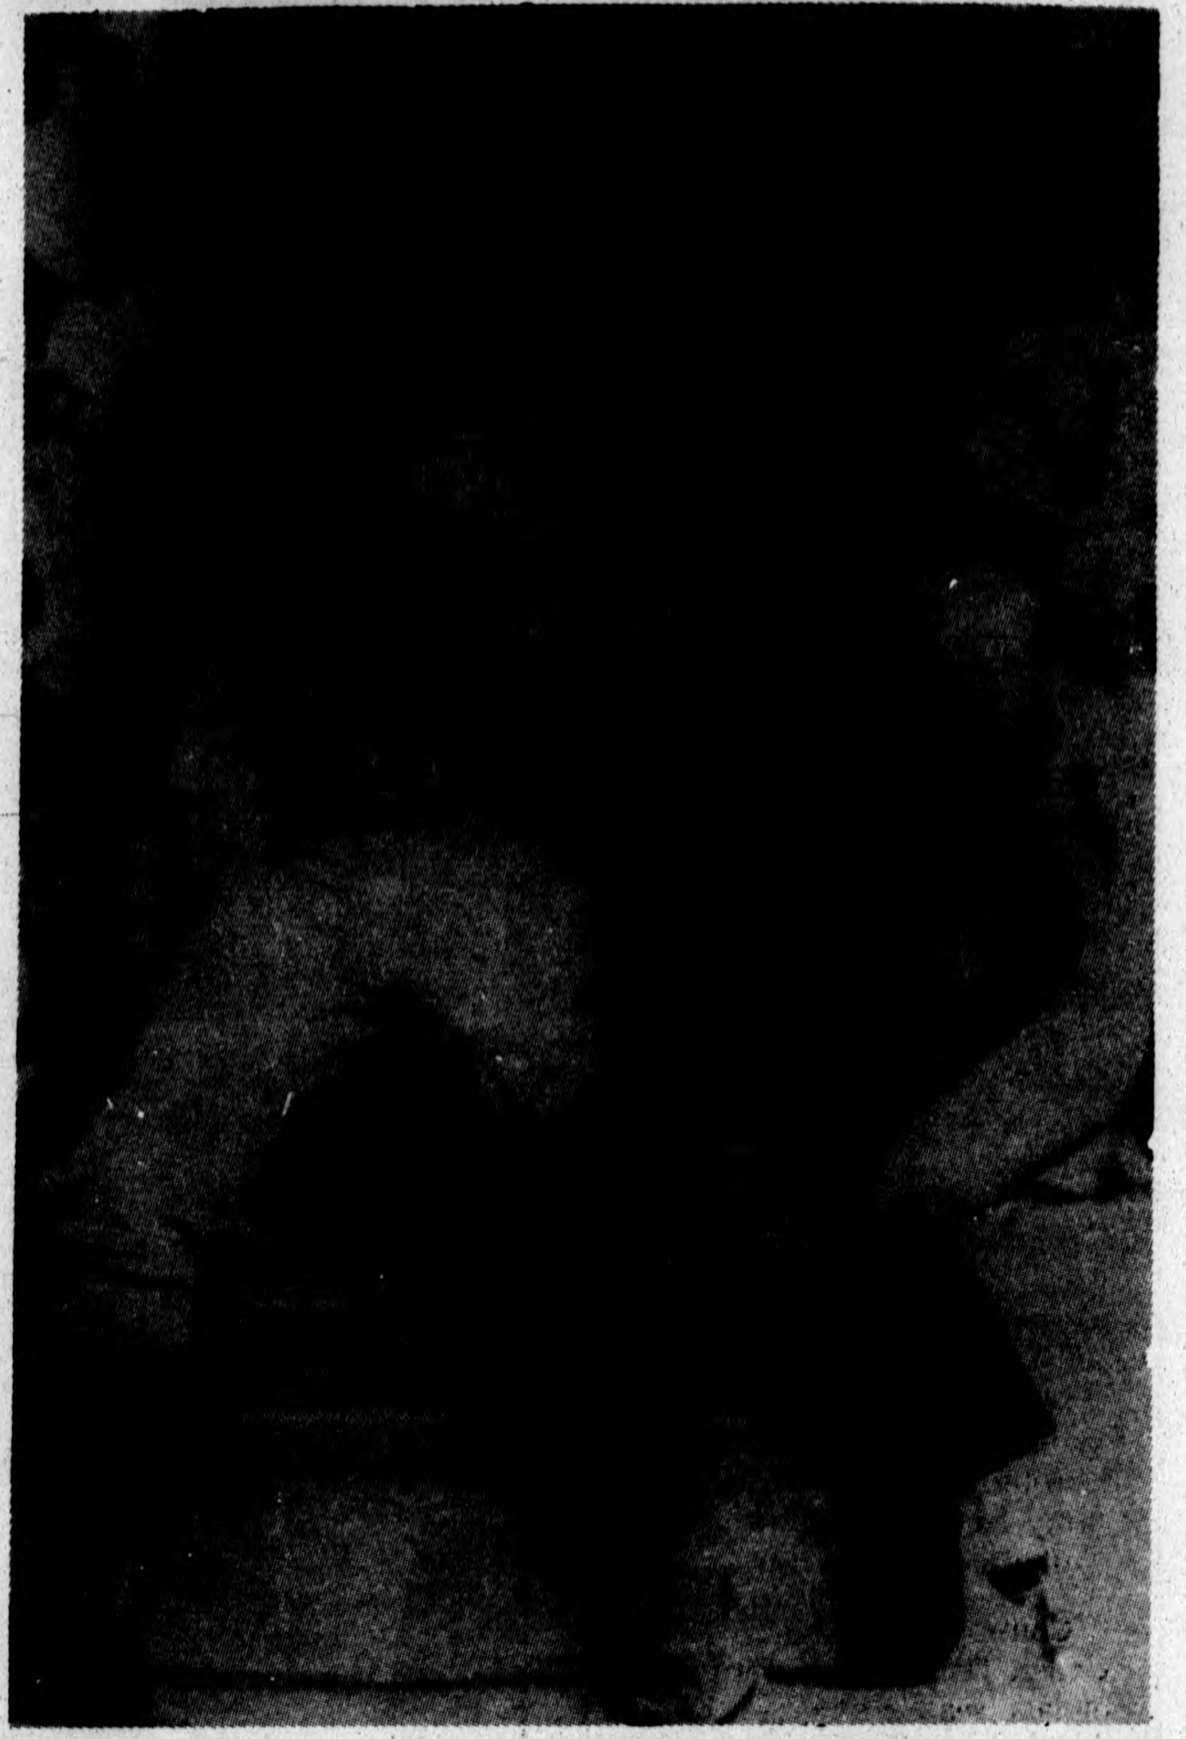
As for right now, Colombo is the starter but Talley said he will decide game by game who will play. "Tommy has more knowledge of the offense plus he sees the field better but Brad is also an excellent quarterback. Tommy knows that if he is not playing well that I might bring Brad into the game," said Talley.

Not to be outdone, the defense did a tremendous job in completely shutting down the focal point of the Maine offense, senior All-Conference tailback Carl Smith. Smith, who led Division 1-AA in rushing and scoring in 1989, was held to just 23 yards rushing on 13 carries.

"He is an NFL prospect. We knew that to beat Maine we had to stop Smith," said Talley.

The next game for the Cats is tomorrow at 1:00 p.m. when the squad will play a non conference game at Bucknell. Bucknell is a team that was hit hard by graduation and will be very young. But running back Brian Henesey, from Radnor High School, returns as the go-to-guy for Bucknell.

"This game will test our maturity. We are taking every game one at a time and we will play hard," said Talley.



(COURTESY OF SPORTS INFORMATION)

The Cats defense should once again be strong, due to experienced all-conference linebacker, Curtis Eller.

Volleyball wins tourney

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Staff Reporter

The Villanova volleyball team ran its record to 5-1 last weekend as the host Wildcats captured the Asics Invitational Tournament. 'Nova defeted Towson State, George Mason and Cincinnati to win the two-day event held in the Jake Nevin Field House.

Junior co-captain Vicky Dispenza garnered Most Valuable Player honors as she consistently provided outside hitters Mara Austins and Pam Clifford and mid-hitter Becky Kulbago with accurate sets. Dispenza also made the All-Tournament Team, as did Clifford and Austins.

The team looked impressive as it rolled over Towson State (15-8, 15-5, 15-10) in the opening match of the round-robin competition. The Cats showed tremendous poise and determination in overcoming a two-game deficit to defeat a tough George Mason squad in a five-game thriller (12-15, 9-15, 15-12, 15-7, 17-15). 'Nova went on to beat Cincinnati (15-9, 13-15, 15-6, 15-6) in the final round.

A successful season is if every time we go out to play, we play the best we possibly can.
Head Coach David Barkley

Coach David Barkley, now in his fifth season, called the George Mason match a "turning point" which he hoped would "push the team to the next level."

Barkley said the bench is much improved from last season. He said strong team unity and good, early season chemistry combined with the added depth should enable the team to improve upon last season's 21-18 record and a fifth place finish in the Big East Tournament.

Barkley views the Big East as a season-long dog fight. He sees Georgetown as the team to beat. The Hoyas are returning every player from last season's unit. Defending champion Pitt should also challenge for the title. Barkley expects 'Nova to finish anywhere from first to fifth place.

The team's primary goal is to win the Big East Championship and claim the automatic NCAA Tournament berth that accompanies it.

"A successful season is if every time we go out to play, we play the best that we possibly can," Barkley said. "And if that means winning the Big East, then that's what we're going to get."

In order to achieve these goals, the Cats must receive consistency as well as leadership from senior co-captain Jennifer Neville and setter Dispenza. While Barkley does not like to single out any particular players, Neville and Dispenza are key figures in terms of experience, let alone ability.

Barkley described his players as a hard-working yet fun-loving group that likes to win. "This team expects to win when they get on the court," Barkley said.

This confidence was evident during the George Mason match. Trailing two games to none, freshman Amy Burke sustained an ankle sprain. The Cats never seemed down, though after rallying to force a fifth game they again fought back by erasing a 13-7 deficit to pull out an emotional 17-15 victory. While Burke will be out for about two weeks, the Cats remain optimistic about the season ahead.

If 'Nova executes properly and maintains its "teamness," Barkley says there is no telling how far they can go.

The Cats host Lafayette College tonight at 7 p.m. at the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse.

Cats looking toward Yankee Conference crown

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Assistant Sports Editor

Heading into the 1991 season, the Wildcats have high expectations. They are coming off a 6-5 mark, when they tied for second in the Yankee Conference at 5-3. But for Head Coach Andy Talley that would be a disappointment this year.

"We have three objectives for this year. First, we want to have a winning season. Second, we would like to win the Yankee Conference, and our third goal is to make the playoffs," said Talley

Offensively, the Cats are solid and experienced in the backfield. Junior Jeff Johnson and senior Pat Kennedy comprise "The Presidential Backfield." Kennedy (6-1, 200) led the team in rushing last year with 791 yards and Johnson (6-1, 205) battled through knee injuries on his way to 399 yards rushing.

The quarterback job was up for grabs through the summer with sophomore Brad Parpan (6-4, 200) and junior Tom Colombo (5-7, 162) battling neck and neck for the starting job. Talley announced that Colombo would start against Maine and Bucknell, but cautioned that "he will take it one game at a time" in deciding his starter. So look for both Parpan and Colombo to receive quality playing time.

Talley is also impressed with his receiving corps. Split end Scott Thompson (5-11, 183) is back for his senior season, after redshirting last year. Junior Straughn Lumpkin (5-11, 178) will play at flanker but is lost for three weeks after he suffered a ligament strain in his right knee during the Maine game.

The defense should be the strong point for the Cats this year according to Talley. The defensive line will be anchored by junior tackles Willie Oshodin (6-4, 240) and Chris Grychowski (6-5, 250).

We have three goals this season. First, we want to have a winning season. Second, we would like to win the conference, and our third goal is to make the playoffs.
Head Coach Andy Talley

First team All-Yankee inside linebacker Curtis Eller (6-0, 220) will once again be a force on the defense. The secondary is led by senior strong safety Kevin Long (6-2, 195), who led the team last year with five interceptions.

Going into the season, Talley worried about the special teams. Both kicker Tom Withka and punter Perry Hodge have graduated, leaving the kicking duties to sophomore Bill Hoffman. But Talley admitted being surprised when Hoffman nailed a 41-yard field goal into the wind against Maine. There is no question as to the strength of Hoffman's placekicking, but his punting can improve according to Talley.

The Yankee Conference should be as competitive as ever. New Hampshire is his pick for first, but he also thinks the Cats, Delaware, Connecticut and Massachusetts will have something to say about who earns the number one spot.

The Cats are currently ranked 16th in the nation in Division 1-AA. But will the ranking go to the Cats' head?

"No, it's nice to be nationally ranked. We want to be recognized," said Talley.

The schedule should work in the team's favor. After three winnable road games, the Cats will have five of their next seven in the friendly surroundings of Villanova. And, with a talented and disciplined squad, the Cats will not be satisfied without a Yankee Conference championship.

Water polo appears strong

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Villanova Water Polo team has added strength and depth since last year, and is hoping for its best finish ever. Last year, the team placed seventh out of the nine teams in the Mid-Atlantic Water Polo Conference. The conference generally places four teams in the top 20 poll. The toughest team in the conference is Navy, which has gone to Nationals for the last five years. Villanova Coach Dan Sharadin's goal is for his team to place fourth at the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships, giving them a berth in the Eastern Conference Championships.

The Wildcats will compete in their first match against Washington and Lee during a tournament in Annapolis, Maryland Sept. 21. The season is comprised of approximately 20 games and lasts through the middle of November. The water polo team holds the Wildcat Invitational at home starting Sept. 27. Other teams in the tournament include St. Francis College, Johns Hopkins, George Washington and Cornell.

The Wildcats will gain a majority of their offensive firepower from returning high-scorer Kevin Engstrom. Sharadin describes Kevin's arm as "a cannon," and it was accurate enough to earn him a spot on the all-league team last season. Marc Verotsky will have a lot of pressure on him in the starting center position, but Sharadin is confident, and says, "Marc has been improving by leaps and bounds." Captain Steve Abbott has powerful legs, an advantage he'll need to utilize while guarding the opposing team's center. Adam Zakarian is the co-captain of the team, and he will man the goal. Jeff Bodle will also see action in the net. Other senior players include John Shallow, Sean Cassidy and Tom Atkinson. Cassidy and Atkinson made the All-Conference Academic Team last year, and Zakarian maintains a 3.25 G.P.A. while holding 23 credit hours as an Engineering major.

Sharadin is most pleased with the strong incoming recruiting class which has added depth to the team. The top recruit is Jim Floerchinger, a sophomore transfer from Navy. The other six recruits are freshmen, five of which are from California, a hotbed for high school water polo.

Sharadin, in his ninth season as head coach, invites spectators to check out the exciting game of water polo by attending the games at the du Pont Swimming Center.

Soccer opens with loss

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Staff Reporter

The 1991 women's soccer team opened the season with the unenviable task of playing two national powerhouses back to back. Led by co-captains Karen Del Sarto and Amy Thelen, the Wildcats were looking to send shock waves throughout the country by upsetting North Carolina State and Duke.

Coming off a 7-8-2 year, Head Coach Don Paxson returns most of last season's squad, including All-American Tina Conti and sophomore Rachel Moreau, the team's top scorers last season. In addition, four-year starter Dawn Clancy and senior forward Kim Brickner provide stability to a young team which starts four freshman and features eight newcomers overall.

In the first game of the annual Puma Wolfpack Classic Sept. 7, the Cats ran into a potent N.C. State squad led by 11 scholarship players and a host of All-American candidates. Assistant Coach Dr. Barry Young pointed out the Wolfpack's major strengths.

"They're very fast and extremely aggressive," Young said. "When you combine the two, that makes N.C. State tough to handle."

In the first period, the Wildcats bottled up the Wolfpack offense, as the teams broke for the halftime intermission in a scoreless tie. Four minutes into the second half, the 'Pack struck as forward Fabienne Gareau beat goalie Karen Del Sarto. Under heavy fire all afternoon, the Villanova defense surrendered three more goals, and N.C. State breezed to a 4-0 win. Keeper Del Sarto faced 18 shots at goal and posted 14 saves, while the offense mustered only seven shots at the Wolfpack goal.

The next day, the Cats battled Duke University — and once again, the defense held steadfast in the first half shutting out the Blue Devils until 63:23. Duke provided constant pressure with its skillful passing and quick feet.

"They (Duke) were much faster than N.C. State," said Young. "Yet, Duke was not as aggressive. They relied on accurate passing to set up their shots."

The defense turned away numerous Blue Devil opportunities, but the offense managed few offensive attacks. The Cats were outshot 24 to five, and yet the stingy defense only allowed one goal in their second loss of the season.

Having played through the toughest part of the schedule (N.C. State is ranked seventh in the country, Duke is ranked 12th, the team's outlook remains upbeat and positive.

"We feel good about ourselves," said Young. "We start four freshmen. We've just played two exceptional teams. We're proud of the way we've performed."

The women's soccer team next travels to La Salle University and then to Lafayette College. Its home opener is Sept. 14 at noon against the Redmen of St. John's.

Football Preview

Villanova at Bucknell
September 14, 1991
Cristy Matthewson Memorial Stadium

'Nova hopes to continue its excellent play as it faces the Bucknell Bison in a non-conference game tomorrow. The Bison return seven starters (two offense, five defense) from a 7-4 team last year.

If the Bison are to move the ball against a solid Wildcat defense, they will have to rely on RB Brian Henesy, who gained 815 yards and five touchdowns last year. But Bucknell has no returning starters along the offensive line, which could suffer at the hands of a physical defensive front.

'Nova Quarterback Tom Colombo and a speedy receiving corps will attempt to exploit the Bison secondary, which returns only one starter from last year. If Colombo plays like he did against Maine in the opener, it could be a long day for the Bucknell defense.

Seven players selected in amateur draft

The Villanova baseball team is coming off one of the finest major league drafts in its history, sending seven players to big league teams: Junior Mike Neill was a second round pick by Oakland and signed a mid-June; Bill Bliss was picked in the third round by the Cubs; Gene Schall was a fourth round pick of the Phillies; Dennis McCaffrey was a 14th round choice of the Angels. Larry Kingsbury was a 30th round pick of the Cubs; and Jim Sears signed as a free agent with California.

Neill and Schall named all-America

Neill and Schall were named first-team all-American by Baseball America. Both players were in the top 10 nationally in batting average.

Cats' hoops schedule rated toughest

The 1990-91 Villanova men's basketball team played the toughest Division I schedule, according to Gordon L. Wise and associates. The Cats received a 62.2 power rating compared to Iowa State's second place rating of 58.2. Boston College and St. John's were the only other Big East teams to appear in the rankings.

Farrell appointed to hockey post

Pat Farrell, 'Nova ice hockey assistant coach for two seasons, has taken over the head coaching position after Bruce Craig resigned in order to devote more time to his family. The Ice Cats open their season in late October.

lectured Mumford warning him that he, "could have been killed."

Lt. J. Gregory of Radnor police said, "It was a case of poor judgement. It was a set of circumstances where the media blew it out of proportion. He made a mistake."

As a result of the infraction, Mumford was dismissed from the basketball team for a "violation of team philosophy." Despite the suspension from the team, Massimino and the University would have allowed Mumford to retain his scholarship and continue his studies at Villanova.

Mumford has decided to transfer and will attend the University of California-Irvine, where he must sit out a year and then will have two years of eligibility remaining.

He also was thought to be a solid contender to unseat incumbent senior point guard Chris Walker after gaining experience in his inaugural season. Mumford averaged 3.2 points per game while appearing in 24 games.

Yankee Conference Preview

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Assistant Sports Editor

Massachusetts enters the 1991 football season looking to repeat as Yankee Conference champions. But the Minutemen will have their work cut out for them as the conference looks to have as many as five legitimate title contenders. The Yankee Conference, one of the strongest Division 1-AA conferences in the country, has traditionally been one with great parity. In fact, during the 1980s there were at least two teams tied for first in eight of the ten years.

New Hampshire, the consensus first-place preseason pick, returns 20 starters including all 11 on the offense. The Wildcats started the year 5-0 in the Yankee conference before dropping three straight to finish at 5-3. Delaware, Villanova and Connecticut also have title aspirations this year. Here is an in-depth look at the teams in the Yankee Conference:

MASSACHUSETTS
1990 Record: 8-2-1 (7-1)
Head Coach: Jim Reid
Number of Returning Starters: 15
COMMENT: Massachusetts is hoping that someone can fill the shoes of quarterback Gary Wilkos who has graduated. Dave McGovern, who played in four games last year, missed the entire spring practice due to injury. The defense will be counted on to carry the load, but a repeat of last year's 7-1 conference mark is unlikely.

NEW HAMPSHIRE
1990 Record: 7-3-1 (5-3)
Head Coach: Bill Bowes
Number of Returning Starters: 20
COMMENT: On paper, the Wildcats are loaded. As for how they will do this season, we will have to wait and see. UNH returns its entire offense from a year ago, whichled the league in offense. It includes senior quarterback Matt Griffin and first team all-conference tailback junior Barry Bourassa. The squad is definitely the favorite in the Yankee and will be the team to beat.

DELAWARE
1990 Record: 6-5 (5-3)
Head Coach: Tubby Raymond
Number of Returning Starters: 18
COMMENT: One team that year in year out is always in contention is Delaware. The Blue Hens are very well coached and cannot be counted out in any game. Raymond is very high on his defense and is counting on third-year starter Bill Vergantino to lead the offense at the quarterback position. This is a team with the potential of being great, and if any coach can put it all together, it is Raymond.

CONNECTICUT
1990 Record: 6-5 (5-3)
Head Coach: Tom Jackson
Number of Returning Starters: 16
COMMENT: The Huskies are facing a transition period offensively with quuarterback Cornelius Benton taking over for first team All-Yankee Matt DeGennaro who graduated. The defense has to replace a lot on the line, according to Jackson. There are many uncertainties facing UConn, but it has enough talent to contend.

MAINE
1990 Record: 3-8 (2-6)
Head Coach: Kirk Ferentz
Number of Returning Starters: 17
COMMENT: Maine has one of the best backfields in the conference with the return of senior running backs Carl Smith and Paul Capriotti. This will be the strength of the team. The defense is a question mark right now and will need time to gel. Maine cannot be considered a contender at this point and will not be if the defense does not progress.

RHODE ISLAND
1990 Record: 5-6 (2-6)
Head Coach: Bob Griffin
Number of Returning Starters: 18
COMMENT: What had the makings of a great season turned into a nightmare for Rhode Island in 1990. After getting out to a 3-0 start, the wheels came flying off as the Rams dropped five straight. This season, URI will be solid on both sides of the ball. Nevertheless, the strength of the Yankee will limit any success the Rams may have.

RICHMOND
1990 Record: 1-10 (1-7)
Head Coach: Jim Marshall
Number of Returning Starters: 17
COMMENT: The bright spot for Richmond is the return of second-team All-Yankee linebacker Eric Johnson. He will anchor a defense that is young but experienced. The only place Richmond can go is up, but playing in such a tough conference will make it difficult. Add that to the fact that the Spiders end the season with six of their last eight games on the road. 1991 could be a very long year for Richmond.

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
1990 Record: 5-6 (4-4)
Head Coach: Dan Allen
Number of Returning Starters: 15
COMMENT: The Terriers will have a new look this season not due to choice, but necessity. 3,135-yard passer Stan Greene graduated and will be tough to replace. Therefore, Allen will look for the ten returning starters on defense to carry the club. Overall, BU is not in the upper division right now, but they are a team not to be overlooked.

The women's tennis team opened its season against Mount St. Mary's College Sept. 8. Mount St. Mary's defeated Villanova 6-3, despite strong performances from seniors Michelle Bush and Krista Chamberlain.

"After having only four days of practice, the team played pretty well," Assistant Coach Steve Neff said.

Bush provided a victory at the No. 3 singles while Chamberlain won at the No. 4 seed. Freshmen Kerry Dillon defeated her opponent in the No. 6 singles.

Victim tells her story

Editor's Note: This letter was written by a Villanova student who was the victim of rape. The name has been withheld.

We hear those awful stories on other campuses, but it never hits close to home. You see it in the newspapers, on the six o'clock news, but you never actually know anyone that needs that 1-800 hot line for rape victims. YOU ARE WRONG!

It happened to me and you know me. Maybe you borrowed my notes for class today, maybe you ate lunch with me in the Pit yesterday or perhaps you pass me everyday in Bartley circle. I may even be your roommate. Rape does exist on our sheltered Villanova campus. I am only one of the many victims whose lives are turned upside down every semester right here in the midst of our Wildcat Pride.

When this past summer came, most of us went home to old buddies or, if we were lucky, to the shore for some fun in the sun. Not me. I packed memories that no person should ever have to carry and went home to support groups, therapists and an unbearable shame.

I have no choice. Because of one man's fury and frustration, my decisions are no longer mine.

After what I thought were easily the worst ten minutes of my life, it only got harder, circumstances grew steadily worse. When I got home, I showered and scrubbed until my skin was raw. I washed my clothes and threw out my panties. I didn't realize I was destroying my only evidence. The bruises on my inner thighs, back and arms weren't "big and dark enough" and they "could've been from anything." I knew what the bruises were from and the deepest, darkest of my bruises cannot be seen and will never heal.

I began showering at least three to four times daily, and this lasted for weeks. It was the first of the stereotypical responses I found myself having.

When I drank, I became depressed to the point that I was suicidal. How could I go on living when I would never be desirable again, I would never be respected again? I was dirty and ugly, how would time heal this?

When I tried for the healthy escape of sleeping, I'd smell his sweat, I'd feel his force. Each night for nearly five weeks I relived the experience. Sleep was no longer an option for escape. I would go for days without sleep even within the safety of my bedroom. Although it is not every night now, in the privacy of my slumber, he still joins me.

I couldn't walk across campus because everyone looked at me. They all knew. And what if he saw me? He'd know that I told my friends, the few I couldn't keep it from, and he'd get me for it. His threat would come true. He would kill me.

Eventually I had to get out of bed. I had to do something for myself. What I didn't realize was how worn the shoulders I was leaning on had become. I spent every possible moment of those first five weeks with my best friend. I never saw what I was doing to this special person until it was done. The one support I had was burnt out.

If I did this to my strongest, truest friend, how could I let myself do it to anyone else? I stopped sharing all of my secrets. I hated myself for destroying a wonderful person and wouldn't let myself trust anyone else. I stopped telling my counselors details about the situation. I even had the specialist at school amazed at how strong I was. I was never actually so strong; just determined to get on with my life. By trying to submerge the problem I found it manifesting.

The loneliness got worse than the rape itself. When I drank, it was always too much and I'd end up on my weathered friend's front step. As put by Billy Joel, "isn't it a kind of madness to be living by a code of silence when you've really got a lot to say."

I live by my code of silence; it seems that some things are better left untold. How many other intelligent women are walking our campus after they were turned into scared little girls? Thanks to that code of silence, we'll probably never know.

Campus rape focus of safety measures

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

Four rapes were reported to Villanova's Department of Public Safety in 1990, outnumbering four other Philadelphia-area colleges.

Drexel, LaSalle and the University of Pennsylvania reported zero rape incidents, while Temple University reported one rape in their annual statistics reports required of all colleges by federal law.

Temple encountered two alleged sexual assault cases since the start of the 1991-92 academic year. A student was raped in her dormitory room Sept. 15 by a man she knew. This alleged assault follows an initial incident where a 19-year-old student said she was raped inside the Alpha Phi Delta fraternity house by a man she knew and another she did not.

Rape is the most underreported crime in the country but continues to plague the University and other college campuses, said Jeffrey B. Horton, director of Public Safety. Communication between the man and woman is important, people need to understand that no means no, he added.

"If attackers are in doubt [that no means no], they should think of the harm they're causing when forcing victims to do something againts their will," said Dr. Helene Feinberg-Walker of the University Counseling Center.

Rape is an act of violence, in which a person is sexually assaulted against his or her own will, according to a date rape pamphlet distributed by the Department of Public Safety.

Rape is a "power play" in which the goal is to overpower, intimidate, and degrade the victim, said Walker.

The Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) reports that only 10 percent of sexual assaults ever get reported to the police. The University of Michigan Prevention and Awareness Center attributes this to victims feeling that the justice system will not help them as much as it will harm them.

The implication is that it is the victim's fault that she was attacked. A recent law has made it irrelevent to ask the victim about his or her past history during a rape suit, said Walker.

According to the FBI, one in three women and one in 10 men will be raped sometime in their life.

One of the most important factors that Walker must address when helping victims of rape is self-blame. "They feel they misjudged a situation and it's their fault ... especially with acquain-

Senate meets today

By PATRICK WHITE
Staff Reporter

The University Senate will hold its first meeting of the 1991-92 academic year today at 4 p.m. in the East Lounge of Doughterty Hall. University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., is scheduled to attend. The meeting is open to the public.

The agenda for the meeting includes discussion of the power of interpellation, Senate operating policy, welcoming of senators, correspondence from the president and new business.

The Executive Committee of the Student Senate held a separate meeting Sept. 11 to discuss the agenda for today's meeting and details of how the Senate will operate. The meeting was attended by Student Government President Mark O'Rourke, Student Senators Preston Hrisko and Kathy Breen, University Senate Secretary Carolyn Lea and several members of the faculty.

Rape conviction reinstated

By KRISTIN JULASON
News Editor

The state Superior Court reinstated the conviction of former Villanova student Stephen Maloney on charges of involuntary deviant sexual intercourse and indecent assault Sept. 10, reversing a county judge's previous ruling which granted Maloney a new trial, said Delaware County Assistant Distrist Attorney Thomas Lawrie.

The charges stem from an Oct. 28, 1989 incident in which Maloney allegedly forced a female student to perform oral sex on him in a dorm room on campus.

In May 1990, Delaware County Judge Joseph T. Labrum Jr. threw out the conviction because he claimed members of the jury had read about the case in a newspaper article and also because witnesses had mentioned a separate, second indecent assault case against Maloney in court testimony. Maloney was acquitted in that second case on charges of indecent assault and simple assault by County Judge A. Leo Sereni in a non-jury trial in May 1991.

Lawrie appealed the judge's ruling for a new trial to the state Superior Court, claiming that jurors had seen, but not read, articles about the case and therefore there was no basis for a new trial. The Superior Court ruled in favor of Lawrie and remanded sentencing back to the Delaware County Court of Common Pleas.

Lawrie said Maloney is expected to appeal the conviction to the Pennsylvania Supreme Court. If the Supreme Court refuses to hear the case or if Maloney loses the appeal, he could face a minimum of 3-5 years in prison.

Defense Attorney John Duffy was out of the country and could not be reached; Maloney declined to comment on the ruling.

Author probes Kennedy assassination

By MARGARET KAMINSKI
News Editor

Robert Gordon, member of the House Select Committee on Assassinations and author of the books "JFK: The Case for Conspiracy" and "High Treason," examined the mysteries surrounding the assassination of President John Fitzgerald Kennedy [JFK] in a lecture on Sept. 17 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

The highlight of the standing-room-only lecture was the showing of a close-up film of the assassination which prompted Congress in 1975 to introduce legislation to re-open the case and continue investigation of the event.

The findings of the designated assassination committee concluded with 95 percent certainty that the death was a result of a conspiracy, contrary to the original Warren Report, Groden said.

"It has been 28 years since the [Oct. 22, 1963] assassination of JFK and we still don't know the truth," Groden added. Groden speculated that a high-ranking splinter group of the Central Intelligence Agency [CIA] and the "mob" most likely conspired to kill JFK.

As evidence, Groden presented National Security Agency Memorandum No. 263, signed by Kennedy and dated 11 days before his death. It called for the evacuation of 1,000 troops out of Vietnam and a full pull-out completed by 1964.

"JFK knew Vietnam was a mistake and didn't listen to his advisors," Groden added.

Coupled with Kennedy's firing of top CIA leaders after the catastrophic Bay of Pigs invasion of

WASHINGTON, D.C.

The special prosecutor involved in the Iran-contra affair deserted his plans to reinstate the convictions against Oliver L. North. This decision prompted a federal judge to dismiss all charges against the formal Marine lieutenant colonel, ending the five-year, $27 million prosecution.

The decision could also threaten the conviction of North's superior, John M. Poindexter, a member of the White House national security staff. North declared himself "totally exonerated — fully and completely ... I've had my last hearing forever, I hope."

North and Poindexter were both granted immunity by Congress in 1987 in order to testify in televised hearings concerning the diversion of Iranian arms sales profits to the Nicaraguan contras. Two years later, North was convicted at a trial, but an appeals court questioned the basis of two of the convictions ordering the trial judge to ensure North's Congressional testimony would not be used to convict him.

MANILA, PHILIPPINES

On Sept. 16, the Philippine Senate voted 12-11 to halt the United States' military presence at the Subic Bay Naval Station.

Contrary to this decision, President Corazon C. Aquino, with the support of the U.S. government, has called to bypass the Senate ruling and let the people decide in a national referendum if the American base is wanted.

The vote is scheduled for early December, but until then both countries will plan a transition where the American forces would withdraw and turn the base over to the Philippines as stated in a 1988 agreement.

Tens of thousands of demonstrators displayed support for and against the military base, but no violence erupted.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

On Sept. 17, the sixth day of Senate Judiciary Committee questioning on the nomination of Clarence Thomas, several committee members said they expected the committee to recommend Thomas to become the second black justice of the Supreme Court by a 10-4 or 9-5 vote at the conclusion of the hearings at the end of the week.

The Judiciary committee is scheduled to hear further testimony for and against Thomas through the end of the week, but the outcome seems to be clear.

Thomas, a 43-year-old federal appeals judge, was criticized throughout his testimony by several liberal Democrats. They accused Thomas of being evasive and of disavowing several controversial statements he made while an official of the Reagan and Bush administrations.

MIAMI, FLA.

One Sept. 16, a federal prosecutor began opening statements for the government's case against Manuel Antonio Noriega. Assistant U.S. Attorney Michael P. Sullivan charged for the first time that the former Panamanian leader met secretly with leaders of the Medellin drug cartel in Colombia eight years ago and arranged to protect their cocaine shipments through Panama.

Sullivan also outlined a far-reaching "criminal enterprise in which Noriega allegedly turned his country into a safe haven for the world's largest drug organization."

MOSCOW

The interim government that is running the Soviet Union has decided to tentatively endorse the outline of a proposed economic union in an effort to hold together what is left of the country.

The author of the plan, Grigory Yavlinsky, recognized that winning final approval would be difficult.

The plan would allow the 12 remaining Soviet republics to assert their independence while preserving a common monetary and financial system across the country.

Freshmen measure up statistically

By JENNIFER BORDA
Staff Reporter

The Class of 1995 is comparable in Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT) scores to other classes at the University, said Stephen Merritt, dean of Admissions.

Merritt said that the middle 50 percent of SAT scores for incoming freshmen ranged between 1025 and 1216. The highest score possible on the SAT is 1600.

Thirty-four percent of the freshmen were ranked in the top 10 percent of their senior high school class, and 62 percent were ranked in the top 20 percent of their class.

The outstanding characteristic of the freshmen class is their commitment to social causes, Merrit said. "Many of the students were involved in community service projects in high school."

The University has two main goals when selecting applicants.

"First priority is to enhance the quality of the freshmen class each year," Merritt said.

> Thirty-four percent of the freshmen were ranked in the top 10 percent of their senior high school class, and 62 percent were ranked in the top 20 percent of their class

The University selects students of the highest academic status through high school transcripts, SAT scores and class rank. These statistics "judge students against their peers and give an idea of how well the students will perform at Villanova," said Merritt.

The University also considers recommendations, extracurricular activities and essays because these "tell a lot about a person's character and will ensure that the student will be a successful and involved citizen in the Villanova community," Merritt added.

The other goal of admissions is diversity, he said. Each recruiter has a specific territory, such as minority students, the West Coast, South and Central America. The University recruits at 750 high schools through on-campus programs, phone calls and informational letters to perspective students.

"If you are a child of an alumnus it is taken into account because it's important to support the alumni. But, we would not take someone who was not qualified," Merritt said.

Kappa, Sig Ep sponsor tourney for Cancer Society

The first annual Beach Volleyball tournament was held by the Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity and the Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority Sept. 14-15. The $1,500 raised from the event will benefit the American Cancer Society.

The event was originally scheduled to take place in the parking lot across from Jake Nevin Field House, but it was determined that the 200 tons of sand imported for the tournament would take up too many parking spaces. The location was then moved to the lot behind duPont Pavilion.

Thirty-four men's teams and 13 women's teams competed in the weekend games with team Gilrain winning the men's competition and team Clifford winning the women's.

"We really hadn't done anything yet with Kappa and we decided that this would be a nice event," said Dave Fox, a Sigma Phi Epsilon member.

Although the Saturday afternoon weather was threatening, the games were not delayed. The tournament was a single elimination but every team was guaranteed two games. Each team paid a $50 registration fee which included T-shirts to team members.

During the weeks preceeding the tournament, fraternity and sorority members collected donations from local businesses, which totaled over $700 in cash, said Kerry Romeo, a Kappa Kappa Gamma member.

In addition to cash donations, some businesses sponsored the tournament by paying for necessary equipment or donating raffle prizes. Bell of Pennsylvania grounded the anchors for the volleyball nets, which would have cost between $600 and $700, said Fox.

Blue Rt. to relieve traffic

By FLORENCE VACCARO
Staff Reporter

Traffic problems around the University will hopefully be alleviated by the end of this year when construction of the Blue Route highway is completed.

The Blue Route, formally known as Interstate Highway 476, will be a "north-south expressway" across Delaware County, which will "relieve congestion along Illinois Route 341" according to the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation.

While the current construction does block access to the campus creating traffic problems, the completed I-476 will "take off some of the pressure" on the already overburdened Route 320, said John Gallen, director of Facilities Management. The Blue Route "will allow cross-country traffic to pass through" the University's campus more easily, he added.

Gallen said that the main traffic problem occurs at the intersection of Lancaster Avenue (U.S. Route 30) and Ithan Avenue, near duPont Pavilion.

The problem has been aggravated by the closing of the bridge on Route 320, near St. Mary Hall, due to an accident earlier this summer.

Nursing annual mass and awards ceremony held

University Press Release

The College of Nursing recently held the Second Annual Alumni Mass and Awards Ceremony to recognize the outstanding contributions of alumni to the profession of nursing. The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., president of the University, was the celebrant of the Mass and the Rev. Robert J. Welsh, O.S.A., 28th president of the University, was the homilist.

Dean M. Louise Fitzpatrick, Ed.D., R.N., presented each honoree with the College of Nursing Medallion, the highest award bestowed by the College for distinguished achievement. Elizabeth Hannigan Whittam received the Medallion for Excellence in Nursing Practice; Lynn Elizabeth Davis was awarded the Medallion for Contributions to the Nursing Profession; and Theresa Falcao Bernez was presented with the Medallion for Outstanding Service to the College of Nursing.

Sophomore student Karey Ann Timmons was the recipient of the Julia B. Paparella Scholarship, which is presented to a freshman or sophomore student who has demonstrated academic ability and a service orientation to the College of Nursing.

Judith Jordan Turken, M.S.N., R.N., president of the Nursing Alumni Society, presented Lynne Zaccaria, R.S.N., 1980, with the Nursing Alumni Society Scholarship, awarded to a baccalaureate alumna or alumnus who is pursuing graduate study in nursing at Villanova.

Assistant Professor Mara Schwenk, B.S.N., 1964, received special recognition for her 25 years of service as a faculty member.

Fitzpatrick presented Robert Capone, director of the University Alumni Office, with the College of Nursing pin in recognition of his outstanding support and assistance to the College of Nursing.

Elizabeth Hannigan Whittam, B.S.N., 1984, received the Medallion for Excellence in Nursing Practice in recognition of her work in the field of pediatric oncology. Employed at Memorial Sloan Kettering Hospital in New York, Whittam's expertise in pain management enhances her role as clinician for Pediatric Home Support and as a nurse practitioner in the Pediatric Long-Term Follow-up Program. Whittam was the recipient of the 1991 Lane Adams Award for Nursing Excellence from the American Cancer Society. In addition, she has co-authored articles on childhood cancer.

Lynn Elizabeth Davis, B.S.N., 1969, recipient of the Medallion for Contributions to the Nursing Profession, is director of the AIDS Center and assistant director of Nursing at University Hospital, the State University of New York at Stony Brook. Davis has developed a model system for the provision of comprehensive care to AIDS patients, and has supplemented the range of resources available to these patients.

The Medallion for Outstanding Service to the College of Nursing was presented to Theresa Falcao Bernez, B.S.N., 1974, for her efforts in recruitment of students to the nursing program. Bernez has been instrumental in encouraging many young candidates to enroll in Villanova's nursing program. In addition, she has been a valuable link between future students, the University and its alumni, in developing a sense of "belonging" to the Villanova community.

A gala reception, attended by 200 alumni and friends of the College of Nursing, followed the Alumni Mass and Awards Ceremony.

New Public Safety changes introduced

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Staff Reporter

Public Safety has implemented several new safety measures for the 1991-92 school year, including the distribution of personal safety codes for identification, parking stickers instead of hang tags and the availability of overflow parking from the Main Lot.

Personal safety codes were issued the week of Sept. 10 to all students who wished to register for one, said James Conway, crime prevention officer and investigator for Public Safety. The safety codes are printed on keychains bearing the Villanova seal on one side and the number of Public Safety on the other.

Students are encouraged to attach their keys to the keychain and to put their code numbers on the inside covers of their books. Officers will check the identification codes during book "buy-back" time at the University bookstore.

"In the spring of 1991, 25 bookbags were stolen from Dougherty Hall in three days" by people who wished to "cash-in" on the stolen books, Conway said. Public Safety hopes the use of identification codes will reduce that number.

Parking stickers, instead of parking hang tags, were also introduced this year, said Jeffrey B. Horton, director of Public Safety. The stickers, which are affixed to car windows, are much more difficult to steal and will reduce the number of lost, stolen or fraudulent tags reported each year.

> In the spring of 1991, 25 bookbags were stolen from Dougherty Hall in three days [by people who wished to] cash in on the stolen books.

Stickers are also available to permit students to park in overflow lots in the rear of duPont Pavilion and on South Campus. "It may be inconvenient for the student, but at least they'll have a space," said Horton.

Students that do not have the proper parking sticker or that are parked illegally will be issued parking tickets, which range from $10 to $50, Horton said. A parking committee is still available to hear appeals of such tickets, he added.

SATs dispel cultural bias

By College Press Service

Admissions counselors across the country are waiting to see whether the revised Scholastic Achievement Test (SAT) will reflect students' abilities, especially those of minorities, more accurately.

The College Board, which administers the SAT, will publish the new version in 1994.

"We're eagerly awaiting it," said Joyce Smith, associate executive director of the National Association of College Admission Counselors. "Most of us want to know how the changes will affect the results."

SAT results have been the talk of academia this week after the release of the 1991 national average scores, which dropped two points each to 422 in the verbal section and 474 in the math section.

In his release of that information, College Board President Donald Stewart said the scores reflected "a disturbing pattern of educational disparity."

That disparity mostly involves African-American and Hispanic minorities, who still fall short of scores achieved by whites and Asian-Americans. Still, African-Americans and Mexican-Americans are the leading groups for steady increases in their scores.

"Every time you see a standardized test result from a black student, the average score will be lower than the majority's score," said Walter Jacobs, director of academic support services for the College Board, at a recent educational conference in Orlando, Fla. "Some people say this is just another example that the black man can't cut it. ... On the other hand, we see that blacks are the one group constantly progressing toward better scores."

Educators hope the new test will help close some of the gap. The 1991 test averages showed the following:

— Since 1976, African-Americans and Mexican-Americans have shown an overall point increase of 50 and 23 points respectively. But, their overall average score still falls about 200 and 130 points shy, respectively, of scores achieved by whites and Asians. Their total average scores are 930 and 940 respectively.

— Scores achieved by whites overall have dropped 14 points since 1976. The average for all groups taken together has dropped seven points.

— Men still score higher than women (923 average vs. 861 average), especially in the mathematics section of the test.

— Students who took more academic classes during their educational careers scored about 50 points higher than the national average in both the verbal and the math sections.

"Those who took physics, for example, had average verbal scores of 464 and average math scores of 538, considerably above the national averages for each," said Robert Cameron, the board's senior research associate. "Those who took calculus had the highest math average, 599, and the highest verbal average, 502.

"As more of our society is being included in the test, the more likely you are to see scores decline," Cameron said.

That greater inclusion and the SAT's inability to reflect different cultures in its test question content has helped spark the exam's rewrite.

"There's always been some suspicion about the way the test questions are written," Smith said. "The College Board now has established a review board for minority education that looks at items for bias against women and ethnic groups."

Law graduates find job market tight

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Staff Reporter

The employment rate for graduating students from the University School of Law has remained competitive despite the downturn in the legal employment market since the 1980s, said Robert P. Garbarino, J.D., associate dean.

Seventy-two percent of law school graduates from the Class of 1991 reported employment. The employment rate is comparable to that of the Class of 1990, but this may be an understatement since the law school's Career Services Center has not contacted the entire Class of 1991.

Although jobs in the legal profession are scarce, Villanova law school students continue pursuing and receiving employment, said Elaine Fitzpatrick, director of the law school's Career Services Center. An updated employment report will be published in mid-October when the results of the Bar Exam are submitted, she added.

Campus date rape

tance rape when the victim knows the person, who is similar to herself, goes to the same university and is trustworthy," she said.

Walker found that students who seek rape counseling at the University usually were attacked during high school or over the summer. She said it takes one or two years for people to be able to talk about their rape incident.

"The victims do not have to come [for counseling]. Often they prefer to put it aside and feel they should handle it on their own ... They suffer alone or with friends," she said.

The Department of Public Safety encourages victims of rape to seek counseling.

Victims have several choices in dealing with the situation, Horton said. They can prosecute the attacker because rape is a felony, go through the student judicial system, or do nothing, he added.

Tracey Hentz, the new female investigator for the University, has called attention to the rising problem of campus rape. Hentz investigates sexual assaults on campus and conducts crime prevention seminars to educate students in the area of rape. She is also working with Mara Marowski, a member of the Date Rape Task Force, who is organizing a student-run support group for victims of rape, attempted rape and other sexual assault.

In many sexual assault cases drugs and alcohol are involved and affect both people's awareness and judgment. "People have to be responsible and not drink too much. Overindulging in alcohol reduces the ability to understand that there is a problem," said Horton.

Public Safety and the counseling center have published acquaintance rape prevention tips as part of their personal safety plan. The tips focus on direct communication between men and women and responsible behavior on dates and at parties.

The plan advises people to avoid dark, secluded places on a first date and to be suspicious of anyone pressuring them to do something they do not want. People are advised to be assertive, to say "no" when they mean "no" and "yes" when they mean "yes."

"Know and demand your rights as an individual," reads the safety plan. "Regardless of a person's attire, position in the community, social status, or other factors, anyone can be a rapist."

Hentz's crime prevention seminars will take place in both the male and female residence halls. "Guys need to be educated that in our society there is pressure on guys to 'score.' When that mentality sets in, it becomes depersonalizing," Walker said.

In a University of Pennsylvania pamphlet on acquaintance rape, women are advised to keep in mind that nonverbal actions can be misinterpreted. "Men may perceive provocative dress and flirtatious behavior as an invitation for sexual advances, although the dress and behavior are not wrong," states the pamphlet.

If someone is victimized, security officials advise the person to go to a safe place, call the police and family, and go to a hospital emergency room for medical care. Prosecuting the assailants is essential to establishing norms that this behavior is not acceptable and protecting other potential victims, according to acquaintance rape information.

Colleges seek innovative orientation activities

By College Press Service

Say goodbye to boring campus tours — freshman orientation is becoming a downright adventure. From milking cows to whitewater rafting trips, colleges are coming up with creative new ways to ease the freshman worries.

Faced with crowded campuses, students from diverse cultural backgrounds, and social issues such as date rape, AIDS and alcohol abuse, many colleges and universities are focusing on strong orientation programs to bring unity and inspiration to incoming freshmen.

While outdoor adventures for new students are gaining popularity on some campuses, other schools find one-to-one bonding among advisers and students equally effective. Some schools include parents in the orientation process, while others encourage freshmen to involve themselves in volunteer projects.

"Orientation is also a time for parents to think of separation in a way that's positive, not in a way that promotes fears," says Kate Greenfield, dean of academic programs at Albright College.

At Sterling College in Craftsbury Common, Vt., officials believe that challenging outdoor activities help academic study. First-year students, known as "grassrooters," get acquainted through morning orientation activities during the first week of classes. They arise each day after dawn and break into groups for outdoor tasks.

Challenges include morning farm chores such as milking cows, woodlot jobs, roping and hauling logs and building cross-country ski bridges. The week is closed with a night hike over the nearby Lowell Mountains.

"Seeing the dawn is a new experience for most of them," said Sarabelle Hitchner, director of Admissions.

Another school, Kalamazoo College in Kalamazoo, Mich., boasts an orientation program called Land/Sea that is modeled after Outward Bound. Students experience the joys and frustrations of three weeks of group living in the wilderness as they engage in a vigorous round of hiking, canoeing, climbing and rappeling.

One week is spent learning how to sail a 60-foot brigantine around the Great Lakes, while the other two are spent in the woods and bluffs of a nearby Canadian park. Officials say a bond is formed that lasts long after students return to campus for classes.

For the 14th straight year, the Outing Club of Whitman College in Walla Walla, Wash., will offer "Whitman Scrambles," which consist of nine one-week trips scheduled for the last week of August and led by teams of upperclassmen. Only six to 10 freshmen go on each trip that may include whitewater rafting, backpacking, camping or biking. The trips are sponsored by the Outing Club and run about $150 per trip.

At St. Lawrence University in Canton, N.Y., orientation is preceded by optional "pre-trips" which consist of three-day, limited enrollment outdoor adventures in August that may include short hikes for beginners, a challenging trek across Mount Marshall for skilled outdoorsmen and a hiking and camping trip to Armstrong Mountain.

Kennedy

Cuba, both the CIA and some of his advisors were angered by his "soft actions toward communism," Groden said.

At that time, John and Robert Kennedy headed the most successful crackdown against organized crime, stifling the mafia's large gambling operations, said Groden.

Groden also discussed the details of an alleged government cover-up involving the tampering of Kennedy autopsy evidence.

Interviews with numerous doctors who attended to Kennedy recall the back of his head as "practically blown off," Groden said. This was graphically supported through the close-up film the moment the bullet or bullets struck Kennedy's head which Groden termed an "explosion." A few frames later, First Lady Jacqueline Kennedy reached to the tail end of the presidential car to "fetch a piece" of Kennedy's skull that flew out on impact, Groden added.

Contrary to this evidence, governmental autopsy photographs show a small bullet wound in a different location on the head. Groden said the photographs were doctored by an artist to support the original governmental conclusion that the bullet was shot from the back and by a sole assassin, Lee Harvey Oswald.

The government also said all the bullets were shot from the sixth floor of the Texas School Book Depository, which was located behind Kennedy's car. But when witnesses at the scene were questioned, 80 percent of the people recall bullets coming from an area known as the "grassy knoll," which was located in front of the presidential car, Groden said.

Groden recently acted as a special consultant for the upcoming Oliver Stone motion picture "JFK" starring Kevin Costner.

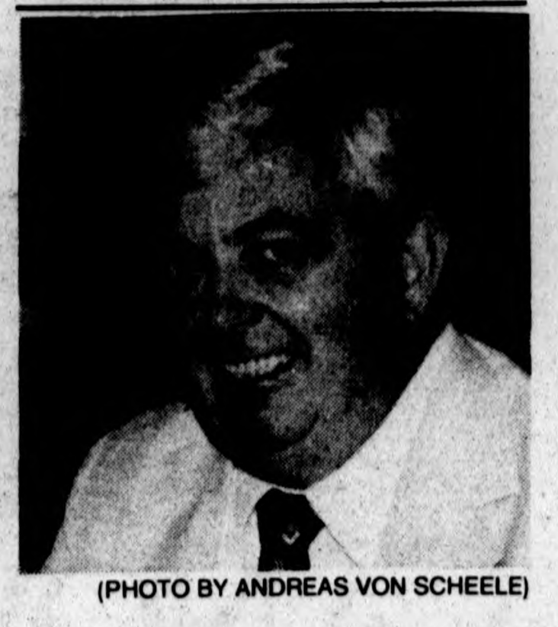
Law School history published

University Press Release

The School of Law announces the publication of the Villanova University School of Law History. The first copy of the book was presented to the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., by Dean Emeritus Harold Gill Reuschlein and Associate Dean Robert P. Garbarino.



(PHOTO BY ANDREAS VON SCHEELE)

Steven P. Frankino, dean of School of Law

With Reuschlein as the principal author, the history represents the combined efforts of Reuschlein, Professor Emeritus J. Edward Collins and Garbarino.

"The history chronicles a fascinating story of the hiring of Dean Reuschlein in the Spring of 1953 and the opening of the School of Law by September that same year," said Law School Dean Steven P. Frankino. "In that short period of time, Dean Reuschlein assembled a highly-talented faculty, including Arthur Pulling. Just retired director of Harvard Law School Library, Pulling was acknowledged as 'in a class by himself'." An opening class of 68 students was assembled with the help of a scholarship program in which college presidents selected the recipients.

"In record time, the School of Law received accreditation by the American Bar Association and the Association of American Law Schools," said Frankino. "Included in the book are other fascinating details such as the Moot Court Team, in the school's second year of existence, defeating the teams from Temple and Penn's Law School; the first Villanova Law Review was published in 1955 with Garbarino as editor in chief; and in 1961 a chapter of the Order of the Coif was granted to Villanova Law School — the first law school associated with a religious university to be awarded such membership."

Rape prevention

The acquaintance rape victim who speaks out on today's front page deserves congratulations and thanks. By enlightening the University about her rape experience, she has courageously served our community. She has shared some of her most painful moments. Rape does occur at Villanova, and we should all be aware that the problem is more than provocative headline. Rape is a crime of violence that affects the life of the victim forever.

Acquaintance rape is forced unwanted intercourse with a person you know. It is an act of humiliation, violence and power that can be with someone you know casually, someone you have just met or someone with whom you have a relationship. In 60 to 75 percent of all rape cases, the rapist is a friend, date, family member, neighbor, or co-worker. Students must not look at rape as an inner-city crime; it has happened at Villanova and it can happen again.

Tracey Hentz, the new female investigator for the department of Public Safety, has emphasized the fact that there are often expectations for "guys to score." Students also frequently ask each other whether they have "hooked-up." Both of these mentalities "depersonalize" relationships and perpetuate the potential for miscommunication. Students must not succumb to these social pressures, and they must know and communicate their wishes assertively.

However, the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students, has never had an incident of rape brought to his attention that has not involved alcohol in some way. Alcohol has the tendency to hinder judgement, so both parties must assume responsibility and know their limitations when drinking. Vulnerable situations often arise when a person exceeds those limitations, but under no circumstances is it permissible to take advantage of such a person.

Former Villanova student Stephen Maloney, convicted of raping an acquaintance on Homecoming weekend in 1989, must now face the consequences of his actions.

Maloney's case exemplifies what can happen if you think that "no" means anything other than "no."

Villanova must educate its student population to respect each other and to communicate better when dealing with interpersonal relationships. Only then will date rape be prevented.

"Hoopla" lauded

Here's to the Athletic Department for encouraging literacy in Philadelphia by offering its support to the Free Library of Philadelphia's "Hoopla for the Library" promotion. The project used basketball as a motivator to encourage over 10,000 children to use The Free Library's 53 branches, raising overall circulation by one-third.

Villanova's cooperation was high on the Library's agenda from the outset, due to the strong graduation rate Wildcat basketball maintains. Director of Women's Athletics Mary Ann Dowling represented Villanova in "Hoopla" since its inception in the Spring. She served as a member of the project's committee dating back to its planning stages.

However, 'Nova offered much more than one administrator to the Library's "Basketball and Books" efforts. "Hoopla's" finale event last evening not only included players, mascots and prize donations from Philadelphia's Eagles, Flyers, Phillies and 76ers, but it was also graced with the presence of the Villanova Wildcat and cheerleading squad. Four tickets to a 'Nova/Georgetown basketball were also donated and raffled off last night.

The event was unprecedented in raising the rate of youth reading, and gaining contributions to the non-profit library. It received large-scale national as well as local media coverage due to its overwhelming success.

Villanova's contributions undoubtedly helped ensure "Hoopla's" success.

Students attempt to help peers

To the Editor:

So you freshmen and sophomores are feeling cozy in your on-campus housing, are you? Well don't get too comfortable. Sooner or later (probably sooner) you'll have to face the "real life" of off-campus housing because Villanova doesn't have enough room for you.

Here are some facts on off-campus housing (pay attention freshmen — you probably haven't heard these yet).

The reason why you're forced to go off campus as juniors is that the Blue Route construction in Radnor Township has hindered the development of Villanova dormitories.

Ordinance No. 89-27 forbids more than two students from living together in a single-family dwelling. This makes it kind of interesting when the houses you are renting have five bedrooms.

And, once you get that off-campus house, you also get to drive to Villanova every day, and that means you may get tickets from the Radnor Township police — lots of tickets. Here's a suggestion on how to get less tickets. Take that Villanova sticker out of your back window.

Finally, did you know Villanova has been gerrymandered into three separate voting districts, thus making Villanova students politically powerless? Can you say, "gerrymandered?" Radnor Township can.

All of you freshmen should be jumping up-and-down on your plush on-campus beds yelping, "What can we do about these terrible injustices?"

The answer to that question for the past 10 years has been ... (drum roll please) ... absolutely nothing.

But this year is different. Political science professor and Villanova tennis coach Bob Langran is running for Radnor Township's Board of Commissioners, and he's promised to look vigorously into those issues as well as several other concerns of Villanova students.

Here's the catch. The only way Langran can win is if the people of South Campus (as well as other students in the 7th Ward) register and vote.

If you want to hear Bob Langran speak on how he hopes to resolve the off-campus housing problems, and if you want to find out more about registering to vote, come to the second-floor lounge of Good Counsel Hall at 8 p.m. Wednesday, Sept. 25.

You know the facts. Isn't it time to change them?

To the Editor:

This year's Student Government is looking forward to addressing the concerns of the student body, and is intent on acting as the eyes and ears of the students in all areas of the University.

Over the summer, Student Government met with Villanova President The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., numerous times as well as the deans of the different colleges and chairpersons, directors and representatives of every organization and department. By meeting with these persons, Student Government has established a concrete dialogue with many important areas of the University.

Some areas where it has helped to make a difference include: working with Dr. Griffin, director of Falvey Memorial Library and John Gallen, director of Facilities Management to improve the air conditioning and heating in the library. We have also met with Robert Capone, executive director of the Villanova Alumni Association, Dr. Ted Aceto, director of Athletics, Head Football Coach Andy Tally and Head Basketball Coach Rollie Massimino to help promote Villanova athletics, and to set up a fall pep rally and Senior Day for the last home football game.

Another endeavor that we are looking to implement is the use of Bartley Cafeteria for extended study hours.

I want the students to know that their Student Government is actively seeking to improve the quality of student life on Campus. Students should stop by the office — #204 Dougherty Hall or call 645-7203 if they have any complaints or suggestions. Integration of blacks and whites not to be feared

By MAT A. TOENNIESSEN

As the nation watched the Senate confirmation hearings of Judge Clarence Thomas for the Supreme Court, it seemed to be hearing much about the fact that he is black, yet not a "true" black, that he is against affirmative action, yet gained from that very thing. It's not hard as you read and watch the event to see that race is as much an issue as ever in the United States. Buzzswords like "self-help," "Reverse discrimination," and "Afrocentrism" are heard daily.

Watching television over the last few weeks, I saw no less that seven news stories dealing with the latter subject, Afrocentrism in our schools.

Simply put, Afrocentrism is the teaching of history and other subjects with an African slant, instead of a Eurocentric one. In cities like Los Angeles, Detroit and especially Atlanta, young black males are being segregated into classes by themselves to be taught by black males, who function as role models for these students, most of whom do not have a male role model at home. I'm not against this plan, but as a history student I am concerned about how it is used to distort history.

History, like our own life experiences, can be distorted in our mind to fit our perceptions.

In these Afrocentric classes, Egypt is taught to be the center of the ancient world, with the population of Egypt being black. Eurocentric ideas, thoughts and discoveries of the time and later are credited to blacks. History is not alone in being affected by Afrocentrism. In math classes, children are being taught Egyptian hieroglyphics instead of Roman numerals.

This movement is not limited to grade schools. At City College of New York, Dr. Leonard Jeffries teaches in his African American Studies course that; Cleopatra was black, (when in fact she was northern Greek), that the Statue of liberty was modeled after a black woman, (even though Frederick August Barthholdi modeled it after his mother). Jeffries also teaches that the American movie industry is controlled by "Russian Jewry and their financial partners, the Mafia." Together they have "put together a financial system of destruction of black people."

Jeffries espouses a belief that people of European descent are "ice people," cold, individualistic, materialistic and aggressive. Jeffries also states that Europeans are inferior due to a lack of pigmentation and that they brought the world the "Three D's," domination, destruction and death. He said that the "rich Jews" financed the world slave trade, ignoring the fact that African tribal leaders both promoted and profited by the slave trade.

In both colleges and grade schools, classes are taught from a black perception. "Black" English, slang and even profanity are encouraged as being part of the black American culture. Would Colin Powell have risen as far as he did if he didn't speak in "mainstream" English?

Preparing our children to enter the mainstream is the purpose of education. Yet today we have the NAACP and other interest groups accusing Thomas and Powell of not being "real blacks," and good role models for our children, then who are, the crack dealers in our inner cities?

This Afrocentric teaching, spelling black with a capital "B," and the term African American are attempts to gain an identity and a past for black Americans. The irony is that Martin Luther King once stated, "The Negro is an American. We know nothing of Africa."

By rewriting history, blacks seem to hope that they will gain a footing in American society by first getting one in the past. Historian Michael Sturmer stated that, "Loss of orientation and search for identity are brothers ... Anyone who believes that this has no effect on politics ignores the fact that in a land without history, he who fills the memory, defines the concepts and interprets the past, wins the future."

But to win the future by rewriting history, the dominant culture must be put down. Thus, Christopher Columbus' 500th Anniversary celebration of the destruction of the native peoples of the area. (This ignores for instance that Columbus helped stop the practice of human sacrifice in the lands he founded. An issue that many groups use as an example of bad influence by the Europeans).

Thomas Jefferson is attacked for not only owning slaves, but for also signing onto the Constitutional idea that blacks counted as 3/5 of a person. This ignores the fact that the 3/5 clause was a political decision. The Southern states wanted blacks to count as a whole person since the plantation owners could then vote those votes for slavery. The Northern states wanted the slaves to count as zero to preserve the anti-slavery majority in Congress. Reducing the value of the black vote from a whole person to 3/5 of a person was therefore an anti-slavery position which helped blacks.

History, like our own life experiences, can be distorted in our mind to fit our perceptions. Facts often get lost in the shuffle. In looking at history, one should be aware of how the person views and researched the past. If Alex Haley, author of "Roots" had traced his father's rather than his mother's roots, he would have gone back 12 generations not to Gambia, but to Ireland. Haley chose to research his mother's history, so we are given that perspective.

Recently several lawsuits have been filed against Afrocentric teaching by The National Organization of Women (NOW) and the NAACP as being segregation, as well as detrimental to black youths. Authur Schlesinger Jr., in his new book, The Disuniting Of America: Reflections On A Multicultural Society states that, "If the Klu Klux Klan wanted to devise an educational curriculum for the specific purpose of handicapping and disabling black Americans, it would not be able to come up with anything more diabolically effective than Afrocentrism. Will this increase their self-esteem when black children grow up and learn that many of the things the Afrocentrics taught them are not true?"

After decades of forced segregation, to have blacks voluntarily segregating themselves in classes, dorms, fraternities and sororities seems a declaration of the failure of not only forced integration, but of forced busing and certain affirmative action programs.

To have black Americans insist on being called African Americans is also a slap in the face to the idea of a united and cohesive country. There are no African-Americans, no Hispanic-Americans and no Asian-Americans. We are all one thing ... Americans. We should start acting like it not only in education, but in all phases of life.

Women's liberation movement attacks Blondie cartoon

By ELLEN GOODMAN

On Labor Day Morning, 1991, Blondie Boopadoop Bumstead, 35-years-old and holding, had an epiphany over her coffee cup. Worn out from cooking and cleaning lo these many decades, the suburban housewife of comic strip fame suddenly figured a way out of her domesticity. "I could go out and get a job."

Bing! Light bulbs flash! Cameras roll! Sweetheart, get me "The Today Show"!

Not since Nora left the Doll's House, has one wife's change garnered quite this much attention. But Nora was ahead of her time. Blondie isn't exactly a trendsetter among her peers. More than three quarters of the women in her age group (where she has lingered longer than Jack Benny) are already in the workforce.

Nevertheless, this is something of a landmark. Blondie began comic strip life over 60 years ago as a gold-digging flapper. Back then, Dagwood Bumstead was the daffy heir to a railroad family that owned, as it was said, the right side of the tracks, the wrong side, and the tracks themselves.

When the Depression deepened, these true lovers got married despite Poppa Bumstead's disapproval. Disinherited, Dagwood got a job. They moved to the suburbs, had two kids, a dog and remained in their 30s ever after.

In some ways the Bumsteads have been emblems of the American family and the American economy. Dagwood, for all of his ditziness has had one job his entire work life. Even in the '80s, as other American companies downsized and streamlined, this long-abused white-collar worker kept his job. While other companies were being taken over, Dithers and Co. dithered along. Even Dagwood's metabolism and eating habits managed to stay the same.

As for Blondie, over the years this white-collar wife also kept her supportive role. She never did get proper credit for her invention of the Dagwood sandwich. She never got any kudos for getting her husband out of the house every morning and into the carpool.

But now that she's decided to get a job, she's doing the "nets," making all the talk shows. Even the secretary of labor is interested in how this newest entry will fare in the workplace: "Some of the skills Blondie had will have to be re-honed." Indeed.

Once again, Dagwood and Blondie are getting back in touch with what's happening to the American family that lives paycheck to paycheck: two paychecks.

How then can we help Blondie to mark her momentous entry into the working woman world after all these years? A few tips and tidbits are in order.

In any case, with luck, this was the last week Blondie will ever have to ask Dogwood for pocket money.

The good news is that things are better for working women. The gap between male and female wages has narrowed. The bad news is that one reason it's narrowed is because men's wages are falling.

Despite all those years at home with Dagwood and the kids, Blondie's earning capacity won't be much worse than that of other women. If she is typical, her earnings will peak at about age 40-45 at $22,000. This is, however, just about what the average man earns between 25 and 29.

On Sept. 9, this longtime kitchen worker decided — at least for the moment — to become a caterer. She will join the fastest growing part of the American economy, women-owned small businesses.

This will supply her with a lot of flexibility. She can be there when Alexander and Cookie get home from school or from the mall. But she'll get none of the perks: vacations, pensions, health insurance. If Dagwood can hold on at Dithers, if Dithers doesn't wither, they will discover the basic economic fact of life in the '90s: two workers equal one good job.

About the household drudgery she's trying to avoid? Well, if she follows the pattern, Blondie will do less housework than before. But she'll still do most of the work that gets done. Home will become her second shift.

In any case, with luck, this was the last week Blondie will ever have to ask Dagwood for pocket money. If the studies are right, as a employed spouse, she'll start sharing financial decisions. Her job will give them an extra ounce of two-job security, keep the refrigerator stocked with sandwich stuffing, and if Blondie makes it in business, they may even afford to get the kids out of the strip and off to college.

Oh yes, one final piece of advice to this wife. Ms. Bumstead, when you get out there in the work world, for gawdsakes, don't let the guys still call you Blondie.

Is diversity more than liberal vs. conservative?

By DAVID BERNSTEIN

"Diversity" is the new shibboleth of the self-appointed campus race monitors. They demand "diversity" of almost every kind, race, gender, sexual orientation, even physical ability. What these folks won't countenance, however, is diverse opinions.

As a black college student at the University of Maryland, I learned this truth the hard way. As a black conservative, I was ostracized by the very people who claimed to value difference because I was, well, different. They didn't mind that I was black, of course, but College Park's politically correct student leadership seemed to prefer ideological lockstep within their "diverse" student body.

> Each time a minority student leader demands "solidarity" from his peers he makes it more difficult for others of the race to get such an opportunity.

Fortunately, I was never subjected to the kind of overt intolerance that many black conservatives endure, but there was always a palpable disdain for me and my views among other minority students. One black sophomore, for example, explained to me that "white people are puttin' those ideas in your head." Another of my peers wrote in the student newspaper that black conservatives must be "neutralized" (whatever that means). Still another person once complained, "you just don't understand." It came as no surprise, then and when the president of Maryland's Black Student Union refused to work with me and the other black College Republicans when we wanted to bring conservative black speakers to campus.

Like many black college students, I found the student leadership's attempts to insulate me from diverse opinions condescending and antithetical to the idea of a university education. Black collegians should learn to appreciate the rich heritage of intellectual debate and dissent that has defined the black American experience. Men like W.E.B. Du Bois, Frederick Douglass, Booker T. Washington, Malcom X and Martin Luther King, Jr. did not share a single set of ideas. Each came to their own conclusions through study and honest reflections. If any of us hope to understand the "black thing" referred to by those popular T-shirts, we must try a little study and reflection of our own.

In 1905, W.E.B. Du Bois scolded a young black girl when he explained that, "There are, in the United States today, tens of thousands of colored girls who would be happy beyond measure to have the chance of educating themselves that you are neglecting." He further warned her that, "Ignorance is a cure for nothing ... every time a colored person neglects an opportunity, it makes it more difficult for others of the race to get such an opportunity. Do you want to cut off the chances of the boys and girls of tomorrow?"

The campus diversity mongers should ponder Du Bois' words. Each time we refuse to consider diverse opinions, we are "neglecting an opportunity" to learn. Each time a minority student leader demands "solidarity" from his peers he makes it more difficult for others of the race to get such an opportunity. And ignoring or extinguishing "western culture" in the curriculum is truly a cure for nothing.

Perhaps more importantly, this desire for intellectual unanimity and separation threatens to undermine more than 25 years of civil rights gains. Black Americans are closer than ever to being treated by white society simply as individuals, but now many minorities themselves assert that race is the defining characteristic of every person.

How quickly we forget this was the very attitude that made slavery possible, that has kept apartheid alive in South Africa and that delivered Jews into the Holocaust. I, for one, would rather the average American did not believe that all blacks act in a particular way because they are black.

Similarly, I would rather not toss aside many of the great works of science, philosophy and literature just because their authors were white. Black collegians can understand and appreciate James Madison, John Milton and Charles Darwin — just to mention a few examples — as well as any white student. To suggest otherwise is racism in its pristine form.

My college experience has not left me as discouraged as it might have because I believe there has been a quiet reawakening of independence among most young minorities. During the past year I have met several other young college graduates who agree that we need more genuine diversity, diversity of thought. Together we have begun a magazine, appropriately entitled Diversity, which will explore issues of race and culture free from pressures to conform to the new, self-imposed stereotype. I hope this modest effort will spark other young minorities to break free from the orthodoxy as well.

Student deaths reported poorly

To the Editor:

I am writing about the article "Summer Marked by Death," by Margaret Kaminski. I believe this article to be very poor journalism.

First, both John and Larry were written about in the same article, giving them only a couple of paragraphs each as a memorial. Although I can not speak for Larry (By the way, you didn't even mention his first name. You just referred to him as Lenahan), I know John contributed much to this campus. However, the only thing that was mentioned was his "alleged accident" involving alcohol and that he was a civil engineer. John was a founding father of the newest fraternity on campus, plus he was actively involved in student activities as well as philanthropic ones.

Also, the article jumped right from the account of John's death to that of Larry's, and began with

> "Lenahan fell off the side of a boat during a fishing expedition on July 18 off the coast of Long Island where the body has not been found ..."

Both John and Larry deserve more of a memorial than the one given by your paper.

This was a blatant disregard of good journalism, and reflects poor taste of the newspaper and its editors for printing such an article.

Arab/Islamic lectures enlightening

To the Editor:

I was thoroughly shocked and sorely disappointed to see the commentary by Morton Klein on the Arab and Islamic program published in the April 19 edition of the Villanovan. Not only was his commentary replete with "falsehoods and distortions," but its publication in the final issue made it impossible for the Center for Arab and Islamic Studies to respond to Klein's comments before the semester ended.

I have attended many of the lectures sponsored by the Center for Arab and Islamic Studies this semester, and have found them to be very enlightening. It is true that where politics in the Middle East are concerned, objectivity is often problematic, since passions run so high in that region. Nevertheless, I feel strongly that the Center has been accurate in its portrayal of the social, political and economic problems facing the Middle East. Simply because Klein disagrees with the Center's perspective on these problems is no excuse to misrepresent or discredit the Center and its staff.

Morton Klein has been present at many of the lectures on the Middle East that I have attended, and it has become evident to me, through his comments, that accuracy in Middle East reporting is his smallest concern. Promoting the interests of the current Israeli government is obviously his foremost priority, for when anyone in the lectures questions Israel's present or past actions, Klein has reacted defensively. He has insolently interrupted speakers, and even tried to attack their credibility.

When Michael Lerner of Tikkun Jewish Bi-monthly spoke in the Connelly Center in April 1991 proposing a peace plan on the Palestinian issue, Klein was incensed. Klein immediately perceived Lerner's plan (a viable one, I thought) as an attack on Israel, and in his questioning of Lerner clearly tried to undermine him. Lerner's lecture was not sponsored by the Center for Arab and Islamic Studies (the SPC sponsored the event), but through his reactions to Lerner's proposals, Klein's true motives were revealed. When Lerner raised the issue of Palestinian self-determination to supplant Israeli military occupation, Klein lashed out. Through Klein's reaction to this speaker and to others, it has become apparent that he is only interested in promoting his own views, not listening objectively to the views of others.

I think the Center for Arab and Islamic Studies, with its dynamic and distinguished faculty, is enriching to the cultural and intellectual life of the University. Hopefully, Klein's propaganda will not be taken seriously by the student body.

St. Thomas of Villanova Church improves structure

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Assistant Features Editor

Amid the tumult and novelty of returning to campus, catching up with friends and beginning new classes, some students may not have noticed the changes being made to a familiar campus landmark. But as 'Novans settle into the familiar patterns of college life, many have become aware of the structural alterations being made upon the St. Thomas of Villanova Church. Those who consider the church a central aspect of Villanova lifestyle have begun to wonder how these changes will affect them.

The impressive Neo-Gothic structure of the church has been an enduring feature on the Main Line since 1887. Its stately spires have come to symbolize the religious commitment shared between Villanova students and the parish of St. Thomas of Villanova, Rosemont. Numerous Parish and University programs have been centered in the church, creating not only a strong religious community, but also an intense amount of strain on the building's structure. The Renovation Committee of St. Thomas of Villanova has planned improvements which will not only reinforce the gothic design of the building, but also achieve a greater sense of University and Parish unity.

The Restoration Committee is composed of representatives from the University, the parish of St. Thomas of Villanova, the Augustinian community and Villanova's Campus Ministry. Working with the architectural firm of George Yu Associates, the committee has drafted a plan for design and structural changes in the church. Preliminary construction began on the church in May, 1991, and the renovation efforts are currently on schedule. The completion date is slated for May, 1992, in time for Villanova's graduation ceremony.

In every aspect of the planning process, the committee's guiding principle has remained, "Restoration wherever possible; renovation wherever necessary." Director of Campus Ministry the Rev. Shawn Tracy, O.S.A., is the chairperson of the Renovation Committee. He has defined the goal of restoration as "an effort to have a worship space in which Christ's communion can be realized and celebrated. We hope to retain the spirituality of this sacred space, and even, if possible, enhance it."

Many of the renovations planned for the church have been prompted by structural difficulties observed in recent years. Crowding in the aisles during communion and after mass made an improved floor plan a priority. Slamming doors, creaking pews and dim lighting subtracted from the liturgical mood of the Mass, making facility renovations a necessity. A sloped entrance walkway will provide convenient and attractive access to all churchgoers, and facilitate the needs of the handicapped.

According to the Renovation Update, a publication of the Renovation Committee, changes made in the physical layout of the church will focus on increasing visibility and movement and creating a greater unity between congregation and celebrant. The floor of the entire church will be laid in stone and all pews will be replaced. The present altar will be elevated. A baptismal font will be established in the narthex (rear

Alumni presents balance

By JANE CIANCI
Staff Reporter

Ask anyone if they know the oldest building on campus and they will give you the same answer, Alumni Hall. Located right in the middle of Main Campus, Alumni Hall has many advantages — just ask anyone who lives there. Life in Alumni Hall has a special flavor and character from a quiet study atmosphere to the ever-dependable "alarm clock" of NROTC students on Mendel Field at 6 a.m.

Most students like living in Alumni. In fact, it boasts both freshmen and upperclassmen as its residents. "I like it because it's convenient," said junior Tiy Smith. "It's right in the middle of everything. It's really conducive to meeting people."

Many agree that the good aspects outnumber the bad in Alumni Hall. Sophomore Nicki Thelen explained, "The laundry facilities are in very bad shape. The building is very quiet. There's never anyone around. The location is perfect — that's why I stayed here two years in a row."

No one will argue that Alumni Hall is a friendly place offering the possibilities for new relationships and "hallmate bonding" so necessary to dorm life. "I'm really glad to come to Alumni this year because the girls aren't competitive here. Everyone gets along well. There's always a new event happening," said sophomore Tara Coughlin.

One cannot deny that Alumni Hall lacks some luxuries found on South Campus. Some students miss the air-conditioning and private telephones. Freshman Michelle Zanette said, "The rooms are small, and there's no air-conditioning. But it's a good location and it's really quiet. I

Get to know the 'Nova Nursing dean

By MAUREEN MEYER
Staff Reporter

Although Dr. Louise Fitzpatrick, dean of the College of Nursing, was educated primarily in the clinical aspects of the field, her special interests lie in the "evolution of the nursing field and its historical influences." This interest has made Fitzpatrick an invaluable credit to the Villanova academic community since her appointment as dean in 1978. Prior to arriving at Villanova University, she earned graduate degrees in public health and nursing administration and a doctorate in higher education administration from Columbia University. It was there that she was able to focus her attention on the history of the field of nursing. Later, she authored and contributed to several books and articles on this particular subject.

> In her high school yearbook, Fitzpatrick listed "nursing instructor" as her choice for a career.

As a child, Fitzpatrick wanted to be an elementary school teacher. Though she later focused on public health nursing in her studies, she never forgot her predisposition for education. In

The Philadelphia Museum of Art will host its fifth annual College Day Saturday, Sept. 28, from 11 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. College students are invited to visit the museum free of an admission charge with the presentation of their student I.D. on that day.

College Day provides a chance for students to explore one of the finest art museums in the country, while meeting students from other area colleges and universities. Guided tours exploring various aspects of the museum's collections will be offered throughout the afternoon. Students will also have a chance to win free posters and museum memberships at raffles in the museum's Great Stair Hall. All day long, memberships will be on sale to students for $16, a 20 percent discount off the regular price.

The Philadelphia Museum of Art contains a diverse collection of artworks from around the world. The museum features exhibitions of American painting and decorative arts from the colonial world to the present; European painting, sculpture and decorative arts from the Middle Ages to the present; and a remarkable collection of Medieval and Renaissance arms and armor. Architectural installations are a prominent feature of the museum, including an Indian temple interior, a Japanese teahouse, a Chinese palace hall and several European and American rooms from 17th- and 18th-century buildings.

Quad caters to active lives

By LAURA SCHILLER
Staff Reporter

No matter what time it is, night or day, there is always something happening there. On hot, steamy nights, hundreds of people can be found in the quad, just "hanging out." During final exams, students who can't cope with the solitude of "all-nighters," have been known to set up housekeeping in the quad. The quad . . . one of the many reasons that students, particularly upperclassmen, choose to live in Sheehan and Sullivan Halls.

Residents of these two popular dorms sacrifice a considerable amount of "comforts from home." Bathrooms and showers, for the most part, truly reflect what life was like in the 1950s at Villanova. The absence of private phones and air-conditioning can be expected if one chooses to live in the "most popular dorms" on campus. Those stalwart South Campus residents would disagree . . . but who hangs out in front of Good Counsel?

Not many freshmen initially live in Sullivan and Sheehan, but those who do find that life in and around the quad can become addicting. For Junior Kristin Sullivan, a third year resident of Sheehan, "something is always happening." Last year, the quad was the site of the 'snowball fight to end all snowball fights' (consequently, a snowball thrown now incurs a $100 fine). And who can forget that self-sacrificing soul who, in his quest for the ultimate distraction from his final exams, set himself on fire. No joke . . . just ask the lunatics who videotaped him.

> The quad . . . one of the many reasons students, particularly upperclassmen, choose to live in Sheehan and Sullivan Halls.

Aside from the obvious social attractions of living on the quad, there are favorable and not-so-favorable points as well. Business majors find living in Sheehan and Sullivan a necessity. Only in these two dorms can one get up at 8:25 and still arrive on time for 8:30 class in Bartley. Dean Libutti, a long time resident of Sullivan Hall, particularly enjoys not having to set his alarm clock. After three years, he knows that he'll be awakened by that oh-so-dependable-and-oh-so-noisy alarm clock . . . the Villanova NROTC.

However, because these dorms are the center of activity, the Resident Assistants there have to be "on the alert" more than the R.A.s on other parts of the campus. According to Resident Assistant Adam Pasieka, "if you haven't written up one person as an R.A. in Sullivan, you know you haven't been doing your job." (Okay, you can't say we didn't warn you!)

So, for those of you living down in the comfort and air-conditioning of South Campus, when it comes time to make a choice (for those of you with numbers that give you the opportunity), reconsider your housing options and try life "on the quad." Who knows what surprises will abound there?

Lecture examines mystery surrounding JFK's death

By PEGGY AGOLINO and GRETCHEN FISHER
Staff Reporters

In just seven short seconds on November 22, 1963 the course of our country's history was irrevocably altered. The nation's idol, President John F. Kennedy, was assassinated under circumstances which, 28 years later, have yet to be fully solved.

"What we lost on November 22, 1963 cannot be measured. On that terrible day in Dallas, we forfeited our innocence, idealism and confidence. We cannot begin to restore these until we have exposed the truth." This is a quote from Kennedy assassination expert and author Robert Groden's latest work. High Treason deals with the conspiracies and discrepancies in evidence which surround the Kennedy assassination. Groden has received much respect and recognition for his work, including the number two spot after 14 weeks of the New York Times bestseller list.

On Tuesday, Sept. 17, Groden, who is considered the world's leading authority on the photographic evidence on the Kennedy murder and is a leading critic of the Warren Report, shared his knowledge of the assassination with the Villanova community. Those who attended the three-hour lecture witnessed the famous Zapruder film along with other evidential slides. Groden proved that the evidence surrounding the assassination has been highly tampered with. He points to high-ranking officials from the CIA to Lyndon Johnson, Nixon and the mob as players in a conspiracy so intricately webbed with lies and cover-ups that the turth may never be fully revealed. Another interesting point explored was the extent to which Lee Harvey Oswald and Jack Ruby were involved in the actual assassination. Groden feels they were merely pawns in this game of the highest stakes.

Groden, who resides in the Philadelphia area with his wife and four children, has been interested in the case since his 18th birthday, which fell on the day of the assassination. He has been actively researching since 1965, and published his first book on the case, JFK: The Case for Conspiracy in 1976. As a result of his showing, for the first time on national television, the Zapruder film of the assassination, he was invited to Washington, D.C. to present photographic and other evidence before the Virginia Congressional Delegation in the U.S. House of Representatives. The Kennedy case was reopened two days later and the House Select Committee on Assassinations was established.

Groden is currently writing his fourth book and has recently finished assisting Oliver Stone as a consultant on the set of his new movie, which will be a dramatization of the events surrounding the assassination. The movie, which will star Kevin Costner, is as of now simply titled "JFK."

The Villanova room was filled to capacity with interested listeners from the University and the surrounding communities. Much of the time was spent with Groden answering questions from the audience. An interest in JFK was

South Campus attracts 'Novans

By VALERIE JONES

Go take a hike. Is this an insult? Maybe, but for those students who are South Campus residents, long hikes are a part of life.

Confer with almost any South Campus student and he or she will tell you that the worst thing about it is the trek down Ithan Avenue to cross Lancaster Avenue or down the trail to get to class.

"I fear getting run over crossing Lancaster Avenue. I think the cars purposely speed up at that intersection," said freshman Dave Cahauet.

Aside from the walk, most residents have only good things to say about South Campus. As far as freshman, Jarmaine Bromell is concerned, he could "live here for the rest of his life."

"I don't mind sacrificing walking for my room after seeing the dorms in other parts of campus. This is the best place to live, and the walk isn't that long. The only thing that would make living here better is if we had our own gymnasium," said Cahauet.

Freshman Scott Heffron also agrees that living down South is "more of an inconvenience," but, "the rooms definitely make up for the walk."

Roommates Sue Roth and Lisa Duch agree that "having air conditioning, telephones and clean, new dorms makes it all worth it."

"The only problem is that we fight over the air conditioner. She likes the arctic, but I prefer an equatorial temperature," said Roth.

More doctors recommend extra-strength HP.

More and more PhDs across the country are recommending Hewlett-Packard financial and scientific calculators to their students. And for some very strong reasons.

"The HP 48SX Scientific Expandable has powerful graphics tools that are remarkably helpful to students learning mathematical concepts. And with the equation solver feature, it's excellent for applying mathematics to engineering," according to Dr. William Rahmeyer, a professor of civil and environmental engineering at Utah State University.

"The HP Business Consultant II has an equation solver and extensive math functions. These free the students from computational tedium so they can think and interact on a higher level," says Dr. Lee V. Stiff, a professor of math education at North Carolina State University.

So go check out the HP calculator line at your college bookstore or HP retailer. You'll agree, there's no faster relief from the pain of tough problems.

would probably come back here next year if I had the choice. I wouldn't want to live on South Campus and have to walk so far to all my classes."

Resident Assistants in Alumni Hall can easily sense the overall spirit pervading every floor. Margie Coll, head resident in Alumni said, "There's really a good spirit here from year to year. People really love living here. There's a lot of social interaction here between men and women although it's an all-female hall."

Other students cite the small rooms, old bathroom facilities and noisy garbage collectors as the main drawbacks. But the general consensus seems to be that Alumni Hall is a great place to spend one, two or even three years of life at Villanova.

UPENN presents 'Phantom'

Courtesy University of Pennsylvania

On All Hallows Eve for the past 20 years, University of Pennsylvania's venerable Irvine Auditorium has been transformed into the Paris Opera House. Ghosts, ghouls and goblins from hall and campus, creep through cellars and slither out of ivy draped towers to converge on the spooky gothic hall. All await the arrival of the notorious "Phantom of the Opera."

The Phantom will appear in the 1925 silver screen classic. This film, starring Lon Chaney, Sr., continues to pack a punch as the epic horror film of all time. The campy, melodramatic subplot is a cult classic among contemporary audiences. The dramatic sound track will be a sonic experience for all in attendance. The Penn's historic Curtis Organ will roar, cou and whisper, emotions ranging from angelic to the cataclysmic.

In honor of this 20th anniversary, the hall will be gaily decorated for the occasion, with a giant (balloon) chandelier as one of the crowning touches, converting Irvine into a miniature opera house — transporting moviegoers from the banks of the Schuylkill to the banks of the Seine.

Presiding at the Curtis Organ's four ivory keyboards with over 300 control knobs at the 8 p.m. performance will be Lee Erwin. A legendary character, Erwin is the remaining veteran player of silent movie days. He is the most in-demand theatre organist today, among the few past masters of the almost extinct art of theatre organ playing. He kept this art form alive after the talkies had supplanted silents by accompanying soap operas and performing on the Arthur Godfrey Show. The Society is pleased to introduce Adlai Waksman at the 10 p.m. performance. He is the newest and brightest talent in the new generation of silent film accompainiment.

General admission is $5. Proceeds will benefit the preservation of the Curtis Organ.

her high school yearbook, Fitzpatrick listed "nursing instructor" as her choice for a career. She still considers academia her main focus within the field of nursing.

Fitzpatrick is proud of Villanova's nursing program, which will celebrate its 40th anniversary next year. She considers it "one of the finest undergraduate nursing programs in the country, if not the best." Fitzpatrick boasts of an impressive faculty with an ever-increasing number of Ph.D.s, good clinical facilities and a reputable master's program. In the coming years, Fitzpatrick hopes that Villanova will be able to develop its focus on the ethical dimensions of health care, and make more of a contribution to the moral implications of the field.

According to Fitzpatrick, the University's strong liberal arts foundation and religious orientation provide an encouraging environment for the study of nursing. She views nursing as equal in importance to various ministries that can be found at Villanova. Fitzpatrick has participated in many diverse areas of Villanova life. She has served as a Eucharistic Minister for Campus Ministry, and she describes herself as a "big Villanova basketball fan." When Fitzpatrick considers all of the elements of her life here and her role on campus, she describes Villanova as, "the greatest place in the world."

Church restoration proceeds well

of the church). The stained glass windows will be refurbished as needed. The Stations of the Cross will be repaired, and new systems will regulate sound amplification, climate control and lighting.

For the duration of the construction, Sunday evening masses will be held in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center. Moving from the dignified a mosphere of the church to a room which is home to Orientation rallies and the Christmas bazaar might be a difficult transition for some. But Tracy feels that the liturgical mood of the St. Thomas of Villanova Church is still evident during the Masses held in the Villanova Room. "The Connelly Center workers have been most cooperative in opening up resources and space for the good of the Villanova worshipping community," said Tracy. "We want to allow the environment of our temporary church to be as conducive to prayer and communal spirituality as possible."

For more than a century, the St. Thomas of Villanova Church has remained a focal point within the University and the community. Though we look forward to the unveiling of the restored church, let us not forget that faith is just as easily celebrated beneath gothic architecture as it is within a University meeting room. The religious spirit of students and parishioners has long been the driving force behind the impressive facade of the St. Thomas of Villanova Church.

Amazingly enough, most South residents do not give that much of a fuss over eating the food in the Spit (Donahue Hall) which is South's cafeteria. Cahauet says that aside from the lack of Mexican food, "the food in the Spit is not really that bad." Doug Guller prefers the Spit to the Pit because, "our cafeteria is better looking, has lots of windows, and is newer."

South Campus, which consists of mainly freshmen this year, is usually full of activity. Students can be seen playing basketball behind Stanford, or frisbee, football and soccer in one of the many open fields.

"It's easy to find things to do because there are a lot of freshmen down here, so everyone wants to meet each other," said Scott Heffron.

"And," adds his roommate Doug Guller, "the girl to guy ratio is great."

Although they dominate, freshmen are not the only residents of South Campus. Both Stanford and Good Counsel have their fair share of sophomores and juniors, with a variety of each in the other dorms as well.

Juniors Brian Jones and Phillip Braun are living in New Male for the third year in a row. Braun said the location can be both an advantage and a disadvantage in that "the atmosphere on Main Campus is more gregarious," but on South Campus "it is more conducive to studying if you have a lot to do."

> Aside from the walk, most residents have only good things to say about South Campus.

"One of the main reasons we stayed, though, is because of Father Joe who lives on our floor. He's a great guy to live with. He takes care of us, and cooks for us, and he talks to us when we need to. He's a good friend we didn't want to leave," said Braun.

"Next year, if a lot of the other sophomores decide to live here, I will definitely stay because I love it!" said freshman Amy Bandzes.

the prevailing reason for attending the lecture, although many were also familiar with Groden's work. An avid fan of Groden's traveled from Lancaster to hear the lecture. Steven Jones states that he is very interested in the assassination and has been reading and researching for 15 years. He had previously met Groden, read his book and describes him as "an excellent speaker and expert on his subject."

Obviously there are some people who are still trying to keep the circumstances of the murder a secret, evidenced by the fact that three attempts have been made on Groden's life in his course of research.

In explaining his devotion to finding the truth behind that fateful day in Dallas in 1963, Groden states, "We owe it to our history, our future and our children to pursue finding answers about what really happened and to resolve this black mark on history. It may be too late for justice for Lee Harvey Oswald, but it is never too late for the truth."

In closing, a quote from High Treason, co-authored by Harrison Edward Livingstone, "In the end, the truth will emerge. Slowly, painfully perhaps, but it will emerge."

Hunger Awareness Week

Coordinated by Campus Ministry and run by student chairpeople, the HAW program informs fellow Villanovans of the situation of world hunger and challenges them to respond. Activities such as the Run for Hunger, The Hunger Banquet and letter-writing campaigns to our legislators converge in a week of consciousness-raising.

Balloon Day

This spring counterpart to our fall Hunger Awareness Week has a two fold purpose: to benefit the hungry through a fund raising carnival, and to provide our community with a day where we can celebrate the beauty of nature and the gift of each other.

Liturgical Life

In all of these ministries, training is provided so that students are ready to serve the community with faith and skill.

LECTOR - Proclaim the Word of the Lord to the community.

HOSPITALITY - Welcome members of the community at the celebration.

EUCHARISTIC MINISTERS - Share the Bread and Cup with the community.

PASTORAL MUSICIANS - Come sing or play an instrument and lead the assembly in liturgical song.

Spirituality

Besides the accessibility for sacraments, spiritual direction and counseling, Campus Ministry provides:

- preparations for baptism and confirmation
- Pre-Cana Weekends for engaged couples
- day and weekend retreats
- prayer groups and Scripture study
- a week of renewal
- HEC (a service retreat with, and for, persons with physical disabilities)

Ratt analyzes the metal scene

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

Ratt's lead singer Stephen Pearcy spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive interview for the Villanovan.

Ratt cracked into the metal scene in the early '80s giving birth to hits, "Lay It Down," "Dance, Dance, Dance" and the ever-popular, "Round and Round." Now in 1991 with personnel changes, altered musical styling and new producers, the band stops to catch their breath and turn around to look at the past.

Villanovan: You and your band hit it big when metal was just entering the music scene. How do you perceive that period?

Stephen Pearcy: It was quite different. There were a lot of bands, but not one on every block like there is now. It's hard to distinguish the real thing from the so-called "poser." There are some good bands, then there are some that rely on tape and don't even play on their own records.

V: "Round and Round" was a stepping stone for Ratt. What made that song so different?

S.P.: I really couldn't tell you. I don't think much has changed with our writing. I think we've gotten a bit more aggressive and changed styles a bit. When you write your first album it's different cause those are songs you've been writing for years. "Round" was the biggest single we ever had and I'm glad it won't go away.

V: Do you see your material as being 'hook' oriented or more straight ahead riff material?

S.P.: I think its both. I don't know who labeled it as "heavy metal" but they better have their ears checked. This is why we labeled it Ratt-N-Roll to stay away from those stereotypes. We weren't the first band to integrate melodies and hooks, it was just different at the time.

V: Looking back at material such as "You Think You're Tough" in comparison with the newer single, "Lovin' You is a Dirty Job," what musical progression do you see?

S.P.: I see a lot of progression. I wrote most of the material on our first EP, (Ratt, 1981) myself. But when Warren (DeMartini — lead guitarist) started writing songs like "Round" and "Morning After" things really picked up because he's progressed extensively. The hard blues riffs, which seem very fashionable these days, have always been there with Warren. He just put them out at the right time.

V: Although Ratt has been thrown into the metal genre, the group seems to have a hard rock base somewhat reminiscent of early Kiss. Is this what you aimed for?

S.P.: We just wanted to be liked! (laughs) ... We didn't just want an arena full of dudes, we wanted females and everybody. There's gonna be a lot of changes. We just finished a small but decent tour of the United States. We're releasing, Ratt-N-Roll 8191 the best of package. We're gonna take a break and then when Warren feels like making a Ratt record, he'll give me a phone call. We've incorporated a keyboardist into the band. It's pretty much strict hard rock keys that hold everything else down.

V: Ratt has branched out, especially with the last two albums (Reach For the Sky and most recent Detonator). Songs such as "One Step Away's" melody and "Way Cool Jr.'s" horns add diversity to Ratt's musical realm. Was all of this intentional?

S.P.: Yes, definitely. Dancing Undercover and Reach are totally underrated albums. I think Detonator should have come off better. We put a lot of time into that record and we're proud of it. We're always trying to change. I think the band is totally underrated myself. We've headlined in arenas for years. We've had top 20, top 10, top five singles and albums. But times change.

V: Amongst the Skid Rows and Slaughters of the world, what put

Films hint social change

By COLEEN KENIREY
Staff Reporter

This fall the Cultural Film Series offers a glance back at American society during a time of radical social change and free thinking. The theme, "A Nation In Turmoil: From Woodstock to Watergate," reveals the common element of the 11 films which revolve around the events of the 1960s and the early 1970s. The films, along with the accompanying guest speakers, will explain the motives behind the passionate activists of this period.

The film which introduced the series was the 1950s James Dean classic "Rebel Without A Cause" because it foreshadows the counterculture of the 1960s. The second offering, Stanley Kubrick's "Dr. Strangelove," is a black comedy looking at the fear of the nuclear bomb as the cause of the anti-war movement.

The first of the remaining nine films is "Berkeley in the Sixties," to be shown Sept. 21-23. This 1989 production depicts the change of political activism from nonviolence to more direct protest methods which happened at the time of the Vietnam War. Jack Doody will introduce the film and Bobby Seale will be the guest speaker.

Mike Nichols' 1967 film "The Graduate," starring Dustin Hoffman, will be presented Sept. 28-30. It is a skeptical view of the counterculture's ability to promote social changes. October will open with a showing of "Little Big Man" from Oct. 5-7. This film parallels the exploitation of the American Indians with the problems in Vietnam.

The Vietnam documentary "Hearts And Minds" will be shown Oct. 12-14. This will be followed by Alan Parker's 1989 Academy Award-winning look at the murder of three civil rights activists in the South of 1964, "Mississippi Burning," which will be shown Nov. 2-4.

The next film, shown Nov. 9-11, will be "Born On The Fourth Of July" which is based on the true experiences of Ron Kovac upon his return from Vietnam. This drama was directed by Oliver Stone, a Vietnam veteran himself, who first gained notoriety with his realistic portrait of innocence lost in war, "Platoon."

"Julia," the next presentation of the series, departs from the period of the 1960s and 1970s by focusing on the independence and friendship of women during the protest movement in 1930s Europe. From Nov. 23-25 "Woodstock" will be shown. This is a documentary of the enormous 1969 music festival that represented the end of the counterculture movement.

The fall season will end with the Dec. 7-9 presentation of "All the President's Men," which is based on the Woodward and Bernstein investigation of the Watergate scandal. Each film will be shown at 7 p.m. Saturday, 3:30 and 7 p.m. Sunday and Monday at 7 p.m. on the specified dates.

Solo artist Karen Goldberg enlightened the Bell Air Terrace last week.

Terrace presents Goldberg

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

Connelly Center's Belle Air Terrace began its entertainment season last Tuesday with veteran folk singer/songwriter Karen Goldberg. Goldberg, who has opened for the likes of 10,000 Maniacs, David Wilcox and The Dregs is a natural for the college circuit. Her sound is mature and simple but at the same time socially conscious. Her lyrics raise awareness while providing an enthusiastic and powerful live show.

A veteran of the college circuit for 18 years, Goldberg defines colleges as the basic for solid music. At a college her main goal is to entertain the crowd where as at a bar there is a constant pressure to "sell beer." She feels as though she can conduct her performance "with integrity" and that she has the ability to convey a message to her audience. At a college level the students are old enough to form opinions but still young enough to have an open mind and to experience new music.

Influences of Bonnie Raitt, Joni Mitachell and Stephen Stills are abundant and obvious. Although she sticks mainly to straight acoustic jams, she did mix in a few blues tunes to balance the sets. Goldberg started the show with "So Blows the Popular Breeze," a song she had written after visiting Eastern Europe and then followed with the "Princess Blues," a song written about typical wealthy high school girls. Famous covers that Goldberg did included Tracy Chapman's "Fast Car" and Suzanne Vega's "Luka." Playing to a warm and receptive crowd, Goldberg had a chance to talk to the crowd as a performer would in a cabaret or small club.

An organization that Goldberg strongly supports is the PETA foundation. Pamphlets on animal rights and cosmetic testing are displayed at every performance she gives. To Goldberg, animals have been exploited on a daily basis and she feels it is her duty to make her audiences aware of the problem.

After spending winters in Key West, Goldberg sees how exploited paradise has become. Goldberg, herself, lists Sting, Shawn Colvin and Steely Dan as musical acts she would choose to listen to mainly because of their social-consciousness. Karen Goldberg is a strong force on the college circuit and was able to share with our campus an experience and sincere form of music.

Sting brings back Police spirit to Philadelphia

Sting gave an overwhelming performance at the Spectrum on Sept. 11.

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

"I'm not going to bulls--t you, Philadelphia, but you are the best audience we ever had," announced master musician Sting as he smiled and shook his head in amazement to an audience of 20,000 worshippers. "I played New York last week, (sighs sarcastically) ... and forget it. You guys are tremendous," he claimed as he tore down and then rebuilt the Spectrum on Sept. 11.

Sting has been on tour since last February, totaling eight months, in support of his highly praised third studio solo effort, The Soul Cages. From the opening sweet melodies of "All This Time"/"In the Midnight Hour" his magnetism shines through.

The three-piece band, with the addition of Sting's historic bass playing, possessed an overwhelming diversity. Their ability to capture the gentle touch of medley, "Why Should I Cry For You?/ Be Still My Beating Heart" to the electrifying scream of the Jimi Hendrix cover of "Purple Haze" proved utter professionalism. Musicians David Sanchez (keyboards) and Dominic Miller (guitar) supported Sting with sounds that made the show the great success that it was.

There are many sides to Sting, this is what makes him so intriguing.

Sting surprisingly played a wealth of Police material, in a show that normally focuses solely on solo material with a taste or two of the past. Renditions of "Walking on the Moon," "King of Pain" and the medley of "Bring on the Night/When the World is Running Down Make the Best of What's Still Around" set the crowd in a frenzy. Classic "Roxanne" was performed in both rock and reggae style while a 10 minute version of "Every Breath You Take" featured reggae singers from opening act Special Beat singing back up. "Message in a Bottle" closed the set to a crowd sing-a-long forming the strong bond of unity between the performer and his fans, for a meaningful but short relationship.

Sole encore of "Fragile" ended the evening on a passive but graceful note, reaffirming Sting as rock's most sincere and intellectual performer. There are many sides to Sting, this is what makes him so intriguing. Whether he's jumping off of the drummer stand jamming his bass, swaying from side to side to an island beat or strumming a small acoustic guitar while whispering lyrics into the microphone his dramatic brilliance is quite evident.

Creative films reach broad audience

FROM THE REELS

Commitments

By AARON NICODEMUS
Editorial Assistant

"The Commitments"
Directed by Alan Parker
20th Century Fox

In its very essence, rhythm and blues music captures the imagination and touches the soul. It can say something different to each listener, yet the presence and power of its message is felt by all. To put it simply, blues are a part of us all. "The Commitments" shows blues to be a universal song, one that picks people up and literally knocks down the walls.

Set in Ireland, the film opens with a young North Dublin lad named Jimmy Rabbite, who decides he wants to manage a band. No ordinary band, he promises himself, but one with that "extra something." He convinces two of his buddies to join him and then places an ad in the paper for "musicians with soul." Soon they are joined by an actual bluesman, Joey "the Lips" Fagan, who claims to have jammed with the best America has to offer. The band eventually reaches 10 members, complete with a horn section and back-up singers.

The Commitments reaches a broad audience, entertaining movie and music fans alike.

Jimmy then tries to make his band, comprised of white Northern Dubliners, into "soul men." "The Irish are the blacks of Europe and Dubliners the blacks of Ireland, he tells them. "Northern Dubliners are the blacks of Dublin, so from now on, I want you to say, 'I'm black, and I'm proud.' " With this as the band's theme, they become dedicated to playing 'Dublin soul.'

"The Commitments" is a quality film for several reasons, among them its realistic and still humorous portrayal of the hard streets of Northern Dublin. Each character comes across as genuine, and they interact well together. The soundtrack for this film is also outstanding, as it gives powerful renditions of some of Motown's greatest songs.

"The Commitments" is a true delight. The film reaches a broad audience, entertaining movie and music fans alike. It does more than trace the short life of an Irish pub group; it tells the story of men and women and their quest to make their lives unique and meaningful. "The Commitments" is arguably one of the best movies of the year.

Barton Fink

By MAT A. TOENNIESSEN
Staff Reporter

"Barton Fink"
Directed by Joel and Ethan Coen

One word describes "Barton Fink," the new film from directors Joel and Ethan Coen ("Raising Arizona") — bizarre.

In the vein of "Blue Velvet" and "Wild At Heart," "Barton Fink" takes the viewer on a ride through a talented writers' attempt to make it in 1940s Hollywood.

John Turtorro ("To Live And Die in L.A.," "Do The Right Thing"), plays Barton. Having just written a well reviewed Broadway play, Barton is offered a screen-writing job at Capital Pictures for $1,000 a week. Torn between his desire to create a "new theatre for the common man" in New York and the lure of Hollywood and a big paycheck, he heads west.

Living out of a decrepit old hotel, (donning the slogan: Stay a Day or A Lifetime), Barton starts to find his way through the maze of studio film making. This being the days of contract players and powerful movie moguls, Barton is contracted to write a wrestling film, an idea he despises.

The studio chief, played with the appropriate amount of sleaze by Michael Lerner, tells Barton that, "at Capital Pictures the writer is the key!" Barton then finds himself under the control of a power hungry, writer-hating producer.

As the film progresses, you are presented with odd scenes and images without warning.

Back at the hotel, Barton can't write. He spends his days staring at a picture on the wall, his nights trying to keep the mosquitoes off him and the time in between feeling lost in Los Angeles. Enter his next door neighbor Charlie, played by John Goodman. Charlie, a common insurance salesman, or so we think, tells Barton, "I could tell you stories." Barton ignores this even while saying that he wants to write about the common working man. Charlie and Barton become drinking buddies and it is at this point that the film shifts gears.

Consider the following: dead secretaries, drunken writers, peeling wallpaper, a fight on a dance floor, a mysterious unopened box, a girl on a beach, burning hotel rooms, bloody mattresses, missing heads and feet kissing.

As the film moves along you are presented with these scenes and images without warning or preconditioning. However, the directors take us through this strange and often disturbing path while still managing to keep the viewer glued to the screen. This is no small task given how fast the film changes moods.

"Barton Fink" won Best Film, Best Actor and Best Director at the Cannes Film Festival and there is talk of Academy Award nominations. So if you like unusual, thought provoking films that give you more than enough topics for discussion afterwards, "Barton Fink" is a film for you.

Son Seals plays blues

By E. VAUGHN VOGEL
Assistant Entertainment Editor

If anyone was destined to play the blues, it was Son Seals. Having grown up in the back of his father's blues club, he was continually surrounded by famous blues artists.

Son's music possesses imagination and passion with a powerful guitar and a sharp delivery defining the modern Blues. Two of his albums, Midnight Son and Live and Burning are widely regarded as classic examples of Chicago Blues.

As a live performer, Seals' stage appearance has grown substantially since the 1970s. "He shakes, simmers, rocks and drives ... spontaneous raw energy, with Son holding his accelerator all the way to the floor," said Guitar Player magazine. And that he does, from the first song to the last.

Seals has appeared live with George Thorogood, Stevie Ray Vaughan, Johnny Winter, Bonnie Raitt and Clarance Clemons and guested on PBS TV's "Soundstage" with Elvin Bishop.

Son Seals continues to astonish audiences all across the United States and Europe. The fiery intensity of Seals' driving blues and stunning originality in song writing, as well as his overwhelming stage presence, mark him as one of the most gifted artists on the blues scene today.

Son Seals can be seen live at the Chestnut Cabaret Saturday, Sept. 21. Doors open at 8 p.m.

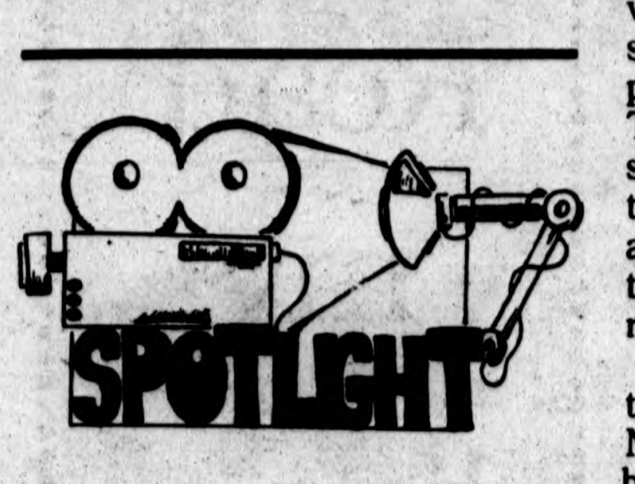
CABARET FLASH: Appearing at the 23 East Cabaret next Thursday is one of Philadelphia's top bands Dynagroove, producing an infectious, irresistibly danceable brand of funk rock. With Erik Horvitz on lead guitar and vocals, Mike Beeson on drums, John E. Lee on bass, Bob Jordan on guitar and Rick Robinson on sax, Dynagroove is Philadelphia's band to watch in the 1990s.

Dynagroove has opened for such top acts as George Clinton, John Lee Hooker, Andrew Tosh, the Hooters, Tommy Conwell and the Young Rumblers and Cyndi Lauper.

Dyangroove, one of the area's most promising bands, can be seen live at the Chestnut Cabaret Thursday, Sept. 26. Doors open at 8 p.m.

Keaton returns as Batman

By CHRISTINA FRANGOS
Assistant Entertainment Editor



SPOTLIGHT: Michael Keaton has had an extremely diverse career. Remember the incredibly funny "Night Shift"? Paired with Henry Winkler, the young actor was phenomenal. Jumping right into "Mr. Mom," he was adorable and still funny. But looking only upon Keaton as a comedy man denies him the notoriety he deserves as an actor.

Keaton is not just a comedian. He proved this in the small scale "Clean and Sober." Though not huge, "Sober" was a personal triumph for Keaton showing fans and Hollywood bigwigs that he is more than just witty. His emotional range and serious screen presence conveyed a stronger, more able actor.

"Beetlejuice" came along in 1988 and rendered Keaton as crazy and incredibly flexible. That wild fantasy of a movie ran toward success without any warning signals. Not only a money maker, the film was critically acclaimed as well. But Keaton would not allow himself to be sterotyped once again.

When "Pacific Heights" rolled around Keaton's audience was ripe for the picking. No one knew what to expect from him and he surprised us again. His somewhat psychopathic role was intriguing. The part, much like Jack Nicholson's norm, added a new mystique to Keaton's genre. Little did audiences know this new mystique would set Keaton up for the role of a lifetime.

The golden opportunity referred to is the blockbuster, "Batman." Never has a hype so astounding been created for a movie, specifically a movie based on a comic strip. But the true phenomena of "Batman" was its leading man, Michael Keaton.

Holy Bat jokes! Could it be true? Certainly. Michael Keaton was the last person to be connected to the ever-muscular bat hunk. That is what made his portrayal so awesome. Keaton was sophisticated, strange, mysterious — all the prerequisites for the reigning comic book hero. Of course Jack Nicholson as "The Joker" made Keaton's job much easier, but the actor earned his right to the title and is now going back for a rematch.

"Batman 2" is on its way, hoping to top the batmania from the last time around. The film will still be a challenge for our favorite bat actor; however, due to new twists in the caped crusader's adventures. This time Batman will be without his sexy companion Vicki Vale, but will have Catwoman (Michelle Pfeiffer) to contend with. There are also rumors of Robin appearing in the sequel. Nicholson's Joker supposedly died (who can be sure?), but Danny DeVito will supplement as the Penguin. Keaton has a new challenge ahead of him. After a second "Batman" he will have to break his mold once again. Fans can only wonder what he will bring to us this time ...

FLASH: Real life news-women are working motherhood into their careers, so why shouldn't TV's "Murphy Brown?" The show's first episode this week revealed her activist ex-husband Jake as the father and gave audiences some time to form opinions about the unwed mother having a baby. The main question seem to be, can Murphy balance her job with being a mother and still be funny? That remains to be seen, but if the rest of the season is anything like the opener, Murphy will have no problems.

The new scenario will add many new sides to Murphy and should make for a lot of interesting gossip around the news room. One consideration might be "Brown's" male viewers. Diane English, the show's creator, swears there will be episodes focusing on male audiences. Whether or not the new twist will be spicy enough to get Murphy through the season remains to be seen ...

SPARKS: The premiere of the slick new drama "Reasonable Doubts" starring Mark Harmon and Marlee Matlin premieres Sept. 26. Oscar winner Matlin will utilize her hearing impairment to add depth to the action/romance genre ... As if coming out of the blockbuster "T2" was not enough, Arnold Schwarzenegger has become active in politics. The presently articulate Republican might be making a move for the Senate. The only question is, will they run when they see him coming? ...

Dire Straits mixes it up

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

ROCK QUARRY

Money for nothing and chicks for free. Six years ago this was Dire Straits' motto along with the wishes of many young males. Here in 1991, band leader/songwriter/vocalist/guitarist Mark Knopfler has brought back his band along with the sound he once had on classic LP, Making Movies, with On Every Street.

The mood that is projected here is fairly mellow however, the gears shift from track to track. Knopfler seems to realize what a success their 1985 LP, Brothers in Arms was, therefore pop-flavored tunes such as "Calling Elvis," "The Bug" and "When It Comes To You" are scattered. Although Knopfler might have dropped a few hooks in the bag he refuses to get caught with his pants down.

The majority of Street is rather personal and introverted. Pretty melodies on songs such as "Ticket to Heaven" and "My Parties" are mild where as "Fade to Black" and the title track hold up the serious meaningful end of the album.

The lyrics remain on a simple level directed toward the common man. Knopfler keeps up his loose goose image singing, "I love the babes, don't get me wrong. Hey, that's why I wrote this song." He continues to brag about his coolness aura on "Heavy Fuel," "Last time I was sober, man I felt bad. Worst hangover that I ever had." These are the lyrics that most college students base their lives on, which is depressing.

Knopfler can be easily forgiven due to the fact that his hip dude persona, which strictly lives within his own lyrics, is a mere cartoon and he knows it. It is artists like M.C. Hammer who are cartoons and believe they are sincere. Now that's depressing.

Who said soul was dead? In the tradition of the Blues Brothers and the soundtrack to "The Big Chill" comes the soundtrack to an enlightening new film, "The Commitments."

Set in Northern Ireland the Commitments seek to find soul in a sea of pop stardom that surrounds them. They dub themselves the "blacks of Europe" and their 10 piece band consisting of three back up singers, trumpet, saxophone, bass guitar, rhythm guitar, drums, piano and lead vocals, smokes up every hole they fill.

Their album, strictly covers, tackles old songs like "Chain of Fools," "The Dark End of the Street" and "In the Midnight Hour" with sincere zest. From the upbeat sting of "Mustang Sally" to the gritty sway of "Try a Little Tenderness" the Commitments seems to bullseye every target they encounter.

Lead singer Andrew Strong impresses the most as his back throat wail howls with both strength and grace. Background singers Angeline Ball, Maria Doyle and Bronagh Gallagher do not merely embellish Strong's voice but stand on their own. The sound is reminiscent of a house band at New York's infamous Cafe Wha ... ?

These qualities along with the familiar Motown riffs will undoubtedly send this soundtrack into just about everybody's car tape deck; even if you didn't see the movie.

ALICE COOPER SPECIAL REPORT There is an old joke that says, the only things that will survive after a nuclear war are insects and Keith Richards. Alice Cooper will soon be added to that list. On Sept. 11 Cooper and his motley crew, including guitar heavyweight Vinnie Moore, gave Philadelphians are free concert at the Judge Lewis Quadrangle in the midst of a hot afternoon.

This was all part of his two week "Nightmare on Your Street" tour to promote both his latest LP, Hey Stoopid and the movie "Freddy's Dead" the sixth and supposed last installment of the "Nightmare on Elm Street" series in which Cooper plays Freddy Krueger's step-father.

Cooper was greeted by 2,000 leather bounded fans as he ran through a 45-minute set. The opening chords of "Under My Wheels" had the crowd in a tirade. Other gothic horror rock from Cooper ranged from his hits, "I'm Eighteen," "Billion Dollar Babies" and "No More Mr. Nice Guy" to new single, "Love's a Loaded Gun" and his new album title track.

Adolescent anthem, "School's Out" closed the set as Cooper hurled t-shirts into the audience Joe Montana style. Fans awaited an encore of missing metal cuts, "Give It Up," "Welcome to My Nightmare" and 1989 comeback hit, "Poison," but Cooper bolted to his tour bus to avoid being mobbed.

In harmony with the event WMMR, who sponsored the event, gave out free Alice Cooper T-shirts to anyone who had an authorized note from their boss to leave early from work to see the concert. Tower Records also contributed by selling Cooper's new album for 93 cents.

them in the spotlight during 1991 and not a group like Ratt?

S.P.: They're great bands. We've had our "press darling days" and we've gone through all of that. It's not so much as out with the old and in with the new. The press just finds another darling and that's what they go with. For example Robert Plant doesn't care if he's on the cover of a magazine or not, as long as people accept his music. Everybody knows who he is, that's how I feel about Ratt.

V: There seems to be a lot of friendship and enemies these days between bands. Who do you hang out with? I know Jon Bon Jovi sang back up on "Heads I Win, Tails You Lose"...

S.P.: Jon's a bud from way back (Bon Jovi opened for Ratt in 1985). People spread rumors around and there is a lot of tension. But, I think there's too much bickering. I've never put myself in that ring. It's funny... because there's room for everybody. But, there are some egos out there.

V: Has your band ever been attacked in that manner?

S.P.: Nah, we just take care of business and ignore all that stuff, it's all you can do.

V: What's your opinion on the Motley Crue-Guns N'Roses war?

S.P.: They're both respectable bands. The Motley guys are buds and I know some guys in G N'R, but I just don't get it. I would rather talk to the press about my music than beat the s--t out of somebody.

V: Maybe it's a ploy to sell albums?

S.P.: We'll see, when both their albums come out. Your guess is as good as mine.

V: In the way of musicians you can't beat a team of Warren DeMartini and Bobby Blotzer (Ratt drummer). How is it working with them? Are they hard to keep up with, or are they flexible?

S.P.: Bobby holds his own as a drummer. But it's Warren with whom I do the majority of the writing. We teamed up for a direction. We tried to hold the reigns.

> It means nothing really if the music can't stand on its own, and ours does.

V: How did you go about meeting Warren?

S.P.: I moved my band to L.A. at the same time he did in 1980. This is when Jake E. Lee (Badlands, former guitarist for Ozzy Osbourne) was in my band, Mickey Ratt. Jake E. got offers to play with Ozzy. Warren's band was opening for us at clubs plus he was Jake E.'s roommate for a while, so we had mutual respect. Jake E. left and sure enough in came Warren.

V: Speaking of personnel changes, why did Robbin Crosby (former rhythm guitarist for Ratt) leave the band and how did it effect the music?

S.P.: It was just musical differences. He wanted to do other things. I don't expect anybody else to hang around either. He basically wanted to produce. Maybe, he wanted to start a new band, I don't know. But, he was good for the band at the time. As for the music, it has established a one guitar sound on the new songs, which is new for us.

V: Will you replace him?

S.P.: No, we're going to remain the same. I might play some rhythm guitar in the studio because I've been playing for 15 years now. But, the addition of the keyboards will keep a tight sound.

V: Did his departure spark the greatest hits package?

S.P.: No, we just wanted to give the best of us for everybody out there to enjoy while we take a break for a while.

V: Both Reach and Detonator didn't fair well in sales in comparison to your first LP, Out of the Cellar or Dancing Undercover. How do you explain this?

S.P.: If you have that big of a record, like Cellar, to catch up to it is tough. Will Michael Jackson top Thriller's 40 million plus units, it's doubtful. But it's all part of the politics of Billboard magazine. It means nothing really if the music can't stand on its own, and ours does.

Cats crush Bison; ranked 16th

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Assistant Sports Editor

Coming off a 48-7 thrashing of Maine, the question was whether the Cats would take Bucknell lightly.

Well, rest easy 'Nova fans. The Wildcats proved they are for real and too good of a team to take anyone lightly with Saturday's 40-0 whitewash of an overmatched Bucknell Bison squad. The victory ups 'Nova's record to 2-0, and the combined score of the two games is an unbelievable 88-7.

Head Coach Andy Talley was very subdued after the game. "We played very well in spots, but we really haven't been tested yet," said Talley.

The tone of the game was established on the first play from scrimmage when 'Nova quarterback Tom Colombo hit split end Scott Thompson for 30 yards. The drive temporarily stalled at the Bucknell 30-yard line on 4th and 4, but Colombo hit Pat Friend for a 5-yard completion to keep the drive alive. Running back Pat Kennedy (9 rushes, 61 yards) then plunged through the middle from eight yards out to put 'Nova on top 6-0.

Running back Vernon Smith scored on 'Nova's third possession with a 6-yard thrust. Thompson, who finished the day with four catches for 94 yards, hauled in a 24-yard pass from Colombo to key the drive.

Keying off the defense, Colombo led the team down the field for another score with fullback Jeff Johnson breaking through the line for a 28-yard touchdown run to put the Cats up 20-0. Placekicker Bill Hoffman hit the upright on the extra-point but it would make no difference on this day as Kennedy closed out the first half scoring with a 3-yard TD to make the score 26-0.

The backbone of the team, its defense, dominated the game right from the start, and let Bucknell's offense cross into 'Nova territorry just once. That was in the fourth quarter when Bucknell reached the 6-yard line against the second-string defense.

With the outcome of the game sealed, Talley brought his starters back onto the field amidst the boos from Bucknell fans to preserve the shutout. "We were not looking to run it up. The defense worked hard and we wanted the shutout. They deserve that pride," said Talley.

> We played very well in spots. We really haven't been tested yet.
> Head Coach Andy Talley

Outside linebacker Dan Summers was a major force on defense with a team-high seven tackles and two of the team's eight sacks. The defense put relentless pressure on Bucknell starting quarterback Jeff Kelly, who completed only five passes for a paltry 26 yards in the air. Even Brian Henesey, Bucknell's primary running threat, was held to 56 well-earned yards.

Brad Parpan opened the second half at quarterback for the Cats, due to a recurrence of a torn muscle in the stomach that Colombo suffered in the Maine game. But Colombo should be ready for tomorrow's game at Richmond. He finished the day 17 of 26 for 187 yards passing and one interception. The offense added two more touchdowns under Parpan in the second half, behind a solid running game.

For the day, the Cats accumulated a whopping 489 total yards to Bucknell's 139. Villanova's defense held Bucknell to a measly 16 yards on 38 carries, and allowed the Bison to cross midfield only once. The only negative was the eight penalties the Cats committed. It made no difference against Bucknell, but later in the year it could prove costly.

The Cats are back in the Yankee Conference this weekend with a game at Richmond. It is the third consecutive game on the road, and the Cats will be facing a Richmond squad fresh off a 19-10 season opening victory at Rhode Island. The Spiders will be pumped up for their home opener, and should give the Cats a good game. "We should be tested this week," said Talley.

Notes: The Cats did not move up in the Division 1-AA Poll and remain 16th ... Tomorrow's game at Richmond will be on Villanova's own radio station, WXVU 89.1 FM, live, starting at 12:45 p.m. with a pre-game show ... The last time 'Nova opened the season 2-0 was in 1987. That team finished 6-4.

Soccer off to best start ever

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's soccer team raised its record to 3-0 after defeating Haverford College and West Chester University last week. The Cats, under first-year Head Coach Larry Sullivan, are off to their best start in the history of the men's soccer program.

After defeating Big East opponent Georgetown Sept. 7, the Cats traveled down Lancaster Avenue to take on Haverford College Sept. 11. Led by sophomore Joe Roy, Villanova shut out Haverford 3-0. Roy scored twice for Villanova and senior Rich Maue netted the other score on an assist from junior Hector Compos. Junior goalie Mike Guarino also played well, stopping five shots to record his frist shutout of the season.

Sept. 14 the team hosted West Chester in 'Nova's home opener. The Cats recorded another shutout by defeating the Golden Rams, 2-0. Leading scorer Joe Roy (4 goals) started the scoring effort for the Cats with a goal at the 21:10 mark of the first half on an assist from Rich Maue. Senior Tony Rossini netted the second and final goal eight minutes later on a rebound of a Hector Campos shot that hit the crossbar. Guarino recorded another shutout, stopping five West Chester shots.

After hosting Drexel in a Philadelphia Soccer 7 matchup, Villanova will face Boston College on Saturday in a Big East match that will be played at 7 p.m. at Villanova Stadium.

Cross country wins

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

Prior to last week, the last invitational or championship victory for a Villanova men's cross-country team came in 1986 in the Big Five Championships.

However, after the Wildcats' Sept. 14 win at the Fordham Invitational in New York City's Van Cortlandt Park, Villanova appears to be turning the corner of a new era of national prominence. At the same time, the Wildcats are on their way to a return to an old tradition of success.

"It was a tremendous feeling to be back in the cross-country picture again after a long absence," said second-year men's Head Coach Marty Stern. "It was exciting for all of us to be a part of this revival of the program."

Overshadowed by V.U.'s recent dry spell were NCAA national championships in 1966, '67, '68 and '79, the 1983 NCAA Region II title and Big East crowns in 1983 and '86.

The convincing manner of Villanova's victorious season-opening outing was punctuated by the individual win of junior Terrence Mahon, who covered the park's renowned five-mile college course in 25:10. A year ago, Mahon won the same meet in a time just a second slower.

This time, however, Mahon needed to push the pace up a notch at the three-mile mark in order to drop Irishman Patrick Mulvaney of Iona. Mulvaney held on to finish nine seconds behind Mahon in second.

"Terrence is gradually becoming one of the great distance runners in America," Stern said. He is a two-time cross-country All-American who has qualified for the 1992 U.S. Olympic Trials in the marathon. "He had a super sophomore year, and I'm looking forward to his 1991 cross-country season."

Mulvaney's Iona team, one of last season's strongest in the East, entered the meet as 'Nova's chief threat. However, third and fourth place finish by freshmen Louie Quintana and Dave Hartman, both fellow Californians of Mahon, helped the Cats tally a finishing total 35 points lower than third-place Iona, and 27 points lower than second-place Brown. At last year's meet, Brown defeated Villanova by a point.

Quintana and Hartman, the respective first and third finishers in last year's high school national championship, appear to be headed for solid seasons on a team that features three other first-year members. Stern still feels, however, that the success of the season rests on the shoulders of V.U.'s returning veterans, and so he was very happy to see sophomore Mike Going and senior Tim Pollis round out Villanova's scoring with respective placings of seventh and 14th.

"Going looks to be in great shape," said Stern, "and Pollis secured the victory by passing many runners in the final stretch."

"We did well as a team," said Pollis. "The fact that our top five runners finished within a 66-second span is important."

Other veteran finishers for 'Nova included juniors Chris McDermott and Jim Meszaros (22nd and 40th) and seniors Finn Kelly and Darren McCormick (55th and 69th). Making their college debuts were freshmen Kyle Watson (32nd) and David Seung (57th).

In addition to victories over Brown and Iona, Villanova's strong team showing also enabled the Cats to defeat Columbia, Yale, Rider, host Fordham and So. Connecticut.

"Our team performance was very good," said Mahon. "It's a big improvement over last year."

"We want to place high at the IC4A (Intercollegiate Amateur Athletic Association of America) and Big East Championships," said Stern, "and if this talented group of freshmen adjusts well, there's an outside chance we could get to the NCAA Championship meet."

Today the Cats travel south for tomorrow's William and Mary Invitational against host William and Mary (No. 13 in the nation), Edinboro, Cortland State, Virginia Commonwealth, Old Dominion, Georgetown and James Madison.

Women take three straight

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Staff Reporter

After dropping its first two games, the women's soccer team improved its record to 3-2 with decisive victories over La Salle University, Lafayette College and St. John's University. In this span, the Cats outshot their opponents 63-9, enroute to recording three shutouts.

In the third match of the season at La Salle University, the Cats dominated play from the get-go, while outshooting the Explorers 13-1. Goalkeeper Karen Del Sarto faced only one shot at goal as the offense torched the La Salle net throughout the game. At 34:00 of the first half, Dawn Clancy fed Tina Conti for the game's only goal as 'Nova chalked up its first win of the season 1-0.

The Wildcats next traveled to Lafayette College in search of evening their record at 2-2. In the first period, the Lafayette defense staved off numerous Villanova chances until junior Beth Sidlosky broke through for the team's first score with under five minutes remaining in the half.

After the halftime intermission, the Cats continued their attack as sophomore Rachel Moreau led the way with two successive scores. With a comfortable 3-0 margin, the Cats added two more goals when freshman Sara Levandusky notched her first career goal at 'Nova. Sophomore Tanya Shuman capped the scoring at 74:49 into the match.

The offense ran roughshod over Lafayette, outshooting its opponent 3-30, while keepers Del Sarto and Danielle Fagan faced only five shots en route to posting the team's second shutout of the season 5-0.

In the home opener against St. John's University, the Cats successfully ran their record to 3-2 as Tina Conti and freshman Marcy Ann Micek provided the offensive firepower. Throughout the first period, the Cats unloaded their arsenal on St. John's keeper Fran McCarthy to no avail. With three ticks left in the first half, co-captain Amy Thelan was turned away when she placed an indirect kick above the keeper's outstretched hands.

The second half featured continued frustration and rough play for the Cats as both teams combined for 45 fouls and the St. John's defense would not break. Constant pressure on the Redmen gave the Cats numerous opportunities and at 65:39 into the match, halfback Gail Kegolis set up Micek for her first collegiate score. Two minutes later, Conti added an insurance goal off a Moreau assist to send the Cats to a 2-0 victory.

Once again, the 'Nova attack battered its counterpart by outshooting St. John's 18-2. Senior keepers Del Sarto and Fagan combined for their second shutout of the season.

The squad plays its next three games at the friendly confines of Villanova Stadium against the University of Pennsylvania, Providence College Sept. 21 and the University of Maryland Sept. 26.

The Wildcats travel down to Virginia to complete a three-game road trip in hopes of running their record to 3-0 for the first time under Head Coach Andy Talley. The opponent is Yankee Conference rival Richmond, which is attempting to rebound from a 1-10 season last year. Fortunately for the Spiders, they return 19 starters from last year, including nine defensively.

If the Spiders are to challenge the Cats, they must somehow establish a running game against a stellar Cat defense. Last year's leading rusher, Scott Malone, returns but he averaged only 3.4 yards per carry. Richmond must run more effectively than in last year's 24-10 loss to 'Nova, when it gained only 114 yards on 32 attempts.

Defensively, the Spiders must first stop 'Nova's running game and force it away from a ball-control, balanced attack. If the Spiders can at least contain the deep corps of 'Nova backs, it could force the Cats offense into difficult situations.

The Villanova golf team opens its fall season with three tournaments this month, concluding with the Big East Championship, September 28-29.

Villanova, the defending Big East Champions, returns several members from last year's squad. Seniors Pete Morrice, Eric Groh and Mike Merriman are back, as are junior Chris Cox and sophomores Jason Cordes and Rob Booth.

The Wildcats also have two newcomers, freshmen Jon Kelley, from Minnesota, and Chad Wasserman, from Atlanta. Another newcomer to the team is Head Coach Tom Shallow. Shallow replaces Chet Walsh, who stepped down from the top spot because of a new job which does not leave him enough time to act as head coach. Walsh is still part of the team, however, as he now serves as assistant coach.

"We have an interesting mix of young players and veterans this year who will compete each week for the five positions on the traveling team," said Shallow. "We must be a strong, balanced team to retain our Big East Title, since nationally-recognized Miami will also compete this year. They are a very high-caliber team. I think it's great for the conference."

Volleyball continues streak

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Staff Reporter

The volleyball team continued to look impressive last week as the Cats posted home wins over Lafayette and rival Delaware. In running its record to 7-1, 'Nova increased its winning streak to five matches.

Head Coach David Barkley called the Delaware contest "a great team effort" against a squad that returned all its starters from last season. He described the match as "a great example of the difference between this year's team and past teams. We made very few unforced mental errors against Delaware. And when we play like that, then that's what happens."

Barkley highlighted the play of setter Vicky Dispenza in the triumph over Delaware (15-1, 15-9, 15-6). He said that while the win was the result of solid play by everyone, Dispenza was "the glue that really kept the team together in the match."

Against Lafayette, the Wildcats took advantage of a weaker opponent to provide everyone with playing time. The Cats prevailed in four games (15-2, 13-15, 15-1, 15-4) despite using many unusual and mixed line-ups. In the competition, outside hitter Pam Clifford turned in "one of her best matches since she's been here," according to Barkley.

> I think we can make it to the (Big East) finals if not this year, then next year.
> Pam Clifford

When asked about her role on the team, Clifford responded that she tries to bring enthusiasm to the squad. "The attitude out there has got to be up and real happy," she explained. "Otherwise, we don't play well as a team. If our team is not mentally ready, then we just can't function."

Clifford believes the team has the potential to go far in the postseason. "I think we can make it to the finals if not this year, then next year," she stated. "We've got a lot of young talent and we're having a lot of fun this year. I think if we keep improving the way we are, by next year, my senior year, we can win the Big East."

Barkley views the team as gradually improving and building chemistry. "The more they play together," he said, "the better they get and the fewer unforced errors they make."

One of the biggest reason's for the Cats' success to this point is their service receiving. The team's digs per game average is incredibly eight more than it was last season. By making the good dig, the team enables itself to stay in and win more points. With such a solid back row defense, the team should be able to handle the conference's best offenses.

'Nova plays in the University of Virginia Tournament this weekend. They then host Georgetown in their first Big East competition of the season next Friday, Sept. 27, at 7 p.m.

Runners dominate

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

The women's cross country team won the first meet of its 1991 season, in which it will attempt to defend its back-to-back national championships.

In a dual meet against Fordham University Sept. 14, the Wildcats, who are ranked No. 1 by the latest poll, ran to an impressive 18-41 victory while placing six of the top seven runners in the meet. This overwhelming victory occurred despite the absence of the Cats top three runners, Sonia O'Sullivan, Nnenna Lynch and Carole Zajac.

Senior Carol Haux won the race going away in a time of 18:05 on the 5000-meter course at Cortland Park, N.Y. Her closest competitor, fellow Cat Cheri Goddard, finished with a time of 18:30, 25 seconds behind.

Besides Haux and Goddard, the Cats received strong performances from Michelle Torelli (18:44, fourth), Christine Gentile (18:52, fifth), Becky Spies (19:11, sixth) and Irene Ruopoli (19:25, seventh).

Emer Molloy and Jenny Hagar finished 13th and 14th respectively with times of 20:46 and 21:07.

Despite missing his top three runners, Head Coach Marty Stern was pleased with the way the team ran.

"Even with those three not racing, we stil have six great runners," Stern said. "Carol Haux has come back in excellent shape and ran a strong race. Everybody is on schedule so far, and looking forward to defending our championship."

The meet demonstrated the quality depth dotting the Cat roster. Due to excellent recruiting, 'Nova has many runners capable of placing high in any meet.

O'Sullivan, 1990 cross country champion, and Lynch, who Stern says is developing into one of the country's best milers, anchor a squad which may be Villanova's best yet, considerig six of last year's seven top runners return.

Stern also expects Zajac, who finished 14th individually at last year's championships and was the nation's best freshmen, to crack the top ten this season as she matures.

"Carole was the best freshman in America last year," Stern said. "And she was probably the best freshman in Villanova history."

Overall, Stern expects his team to maintain its grip on No. 1 and another national championship.

This weekend the team travels to the William and Mary Invitational to compete against such schools as Edinboro, Virginia Commonwealth and Georgetown.

Connolly wins gold at Keystone

Villanova junior Loraine Connolly of Havertown High was among more than 6,000 Pennsylvania amateur athletes to compete in the tenth annual Keystone State Summer Games this past August. Connolly won a gold medal in the women's golf competition with rounds of 78 and 84, five strokes ahead of her nearest competitor.

Hockey ready to defend crown

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

Beginning its defense of last year's Big East championship title, the field hockey team returned from a three-game road trip with a record of 1-1-1. The season began two weeks ago in UConn, where 'Nova split its two tournament games. One week later, the Cats travelled to UPenn, where they reinforced their .500 record with a 0-0 tie.

A substantial crowd was on hand at Pennsylvania's historic Franklin Field Sept. 14. They watched as the Quakers played the role of unkind hostesses to Villanova. Though the momentum shifted considerably several times, neither team was able to put one in the net. By the time the final buzzer had sounded, both teams wearily left the field with a double-overtime 0-0 tie.

The first-half found Pennsylvania attacking frequently from within Villanova territory. The Quakers, however, found their attempts foiled repeatedly by the rigid defensive play of Kathy Pearce and Monika Pedano. When the Wildcats did come through with some sporadic offensive charges, they found themselves thwarted not by the Penn defense, but by the referee's whistle. Two apparent Wildcat goals were called back during the period.

In the second half, it was the Quakers who found themselves desperately fending off a relentless Wildcat drive. Though 'Nova had many opportunities to score via corner hits, they were unable to drive the ball past Penn netminder Suzanne Pures. Towards the end of the half, Pures made a seemingly impossible save, getting tangled in a mass of Villanova attack and still managing somehow to fend off the ball.

As the battle of the crosstown rivals went into overtime, it seemed only a matter of time before Villanova put this one away. The 'Cats had completely controlled the tempo in the second half, and for the first overtime period they continued to do so. Penn was rarely able to drive the ball out of their defensive side of the field. But though the Quakers were kept on the defensive, Villanova remained unable to capitalize.

Penn had re-established control by the time the second overtime period had rolled around. This time it was Villanova goalie Chrissy Thomas' turn to play the heroine. About halfway through the period, Thomas stopped a vicious shot that could well have spelled a Quaker victory. The stubborn defensive play of both sides brought this one to a scoreless close.

Although the 1991 team is an extremely young group (boasting only three seniors and three juniors), they are by no means ready to write this year off as a "rebuilding" season. They have recruited a bumper crop of talent in the last two years, and the payback is already evident. Thomas, hailing from Chesterfield, MO, has started in goal for the first three games of her frosh year. Another frosh figuring prominently in 'Nova's gameplan has been Barbara King of Vienna, VA. In the season opener against Bucknell, she scored two of the team's three goals as Villanova went on to a 3-2 victory.

When the Wildcats need some experience, they have it in the form of co-captains Missy Paolantonio and Melissa Rea. Playing midfield, senior Paolantonio came up with a goal in the win over Bucknell. Rea is a constant threat for the Wildcats on the offensive line.

"Hopefully, we'll do better next week," said Villanova coach Jackie Gerzabek at the conclusion of the UPenn contest, referring to this weekend's homestand. The Wildcats play against Ohio State Saturday, and Providence College on Sunday.

The Villanovan athlete of the week is runner Terrance Mahon. Mahon won the five mile event in 25:10 leading the Wildcats to a convincing win over defending champs Iona at the recent Fordham Invitational.

Sorority arrives

By TINA McGARRIGLE
Staff Reporter

The colonization process of Chi Omega, the nation's largest sorority, began officially at Villanova Sept. 22 in the Day Hop Cafeteria of Dougherty Hall. Members of the organization's national extension team conducted a meeting to both inform students interested in rushing and to address questions concerning the rush process of what will become the ninth sorority on campus.

The actual establishment of the sorority has been ongoing for a number of years, involving representative Chi Omegas working in close conjunction with the Villanova Panhellenic Association and the Office of Student Activities.

"Our goal is to however possible meet the demands of our students. The women students want to join sororities; however, the size of each group is sometimes overwhelming. The only answer to meet these demands is to add new chapters," said Gary Bonas, associate director of Student Activities.

Representatives from area chapters such as the University of Pennsylvania and Franklin and Marshall College were present. Speakers Melanie Shain, Chi Omega National Treasurer, and Opinions differ on justice nominee

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

As the time nears for the Senate Judiciary Committee to vote on accepting Clarence Thomas as a Supreme Court Justice, University students are taking different stances on Thomas' nomination.

President George Bush wants Thomas, a conservative, confirmed before Oct. 7, when the Supreme Court begins its next term. If confirmed, Thomas will replace retiring Justice Thurgood Marshall.

The extent of Thomas' previous experience gave rise to some contrasting opinions. Thomas worked as chairman of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission from 1982 to 1990. At the age of 41, Thomas became a federal appeals court judge for a year and a half.

"I think [Thomas] is strongly qualified due to his educational background, personal integrity, and very strong ambition," said Mark Thomas, president of College Republicans.

Villanova slid from last year's No. 1 position to No. 3 in the U.S. News and World Report rankings of regional colleges and universities.

The regional category is comprised of 558 colleges and universities that award more than half of their bachelor's degrees in two or more professions such as engineering, nursing and business. They are then divided geographically between the North, South, Midwest and West.

"I am quite surprised that we dropped [in the rankings,] but I am pleased that we were named number one under academic reputation, since that is what graduates take with them," said the Rev. William McGuire, O.S.A., dean of Enrollment Management.

"I do see it as a challenge to come back," he added.

Advisory committee makes decisions on curriculum

By KRISTIN JULASON
News Editor

A new Advisory Committee was appointed to review the core curriculum report submitted last year to the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, by the Core Curriculum Ad Hoc Committee. The Advisory Committee's recommendation was submitted to the College Curriculum, whose decisions are expected Nov. 11.

According to a letter from Ellis to college faculty, the Advisory Committee was convened to "establish the consensus which existed regarding the report, but also to evaluate the practical implementation of the recommendations" of the Ad Hoc Committee.

The Ad Hoc Committee's proposed changes have been the center of controversy among Arts and Sciences faculty, since the changes would decrease the number of courses required in religious studies, philosophy and English and increase natural sciences requirements.

"The controversy surrounding the [Ad Hoc Committee's] core report can be blamed on the writing of the report, but also on the reading. People are not looking at the overall picture," said Dr. Mary Desmond, professor of biology and chair of the Ad Hoc Core Curriculum Committee, in an interview last year. Critics of the report should "carefully sort out [University] politics from the educational goals when people are putting out their views," she added.

"I don't know of any model that is foolproof. Our goal was to address the educational needs of the students within the framework of faculty we have now. It will all come down to the quality of teaching and the motivation of the students," Desmond said.

The Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

"I am sympathetic to those who are critical of the present core curriculum," said Dr. John Doody, professor of philosophy and a member of the new Advisory Committee, in an interview last year. "It reflects inertia on the part of faculty and administration." Doody said controversy surrounding the core may stem from "the perception that this core is reflective of a current wave of intellectualism."

Other members of the Advisory Committee include Dr. Kel Wieder, biology; Dr. Marguerite Farley, communication arts; Dr. Hal Leaman, geography; and Dr. Fritz Hartmann, mathematics.

First home game matches undefeated VU, UConn

Coming off a 19-10 opening win over Rhode Island, the Richmond Spiders were looking forward to knocking off the unbeaten Cats and improve to 2-0.

It didn't happen.

Speaking of big plays, quarterback Tommy Colombo was involved in quite a few of them himself. The 5-7 junior was able to pick apart a young and vulnerable Richmond secondary with the deep pass. Colombo burned the secondary with a 46-yard [illegible] pass to Pat Friend on [illegible]

While 'Nova's offense was marching up and down the field, the Cat defense was constantly in the face of Richmond quarterback Greg Lilly. They registered six [illegible] of the day and held the [illegible] points given up [illegible] season total to just 10 in three games. In fact, the Cats

Tensions between Iraq and the United States increased on Sept. 23 when a group of United Nations inspectors were temporarily detained in Baghdad. Officials in Baghdad prevented the inspectors from removing documents that contained information about the Iraqi nuclear weapons program.

This prompted President Bush to issue a warning in front of the U.N. General Assembly that he "will not compromise" when forcing the Iraqi government to comply with cease-fire agreements.

At the present, the United States is consulting with England and France to construct a plan to give Iraq 48 hours to guarantee free access to the U.N. inspection teams to insure Iraq's cease-fire pledge to allow a search for any hidden "weapons of mass destruction."

If Iraq failed to comply with this plan, the United States would dispatch warplanes to escort the inspectors over the border, said a White House spokesman.

In a possible attempt to pacify angered Israeli officials, President Bush urged the United Nations to repeal a 1975 resolution which equates Zionism with racism. There is enough support in the U.N. to overturn the declaration.

Earlier this month, Israel was disenchanted with the United States when Bush signaled that he would no longer look the other way when Israel added to its settlements in occupied Arab territories.

Washington, D.C.

President Bush urged passage of a Republican-sponsored bill that would extend unemployment benefits but would do so more cheaply than a Democratic version he effectively killed last month.

Bush told reporters that he backed a bill sponsored by Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole (R-Kan.) to provide up to 10 weeks of additional benefits to the unemployed.

The Dole bill, which would cost $4 billion, is $2.5 billion cheaper than the Democrat-backed measure passed by the House last week to extend benefits up to 20 weeks.

The Dole bill provides for raising the money by auctioning federal broadcasting frequency rights. The House measure would run up the federal deficit.

"I just hope that the Senate will do what's needed, and, that is, help these people but also do something that is budgetarily sound ... and where we stay within the budget agreement," Bush said.

A former aide of Manuel Antonio Noriega testified Sept. 23 and said that the deposed dictator instructed him to deliver bulky envelopes full of drug money to Noriega's headquarters.

Lt. Col. Luis del Cid's testimony was the most direct allegation that Noriega accepted bribes from Colombia's drug cartel in exchange for providing safe haven for drug traffickers. Del Cid testified that on two occasions he personally delivered to Noriega cash-filled envelopes that he picked up from Floyd Carlton Caceres, Noriega's personal pilot, confidant and intermediary with Colombia's Medelin drug cartel.

More collaboration is needed between two and four-year colleges to entice students at junior and community colleges to continue their educations, said a higher education group on Sept. 23.

The American Council on Education said students who attend two-year institutions are discouraged in several ways from transferring to four-year schools. These schools are gateways especially for minorities.

About a third of junior and two-year community college students say they plan to move on to four-year schools, but studies suggest that between 20 and 26 percent actually do, the council said.

Parking costs comparable to local universities

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
Assistant News Editor

The Department of Public Safety collects approximately $400,000 in parking fines and commuter and resident parking registration fees every year, said Jeffrey B. Horton, director of Public Safety. Fees charged by the University are comparable to other universities in the area, he added.

Commuter and resident University students pay $50 to park on campus. Cars not registered with Public Safety are fined from $10 to $50, depending on the violation.

"I think parking here is too expensive for the space available, and it's too hectic," said sophomore Christina Mainardi.

Another student who parks on campus but does not have a parking sticker said, "I would pay for a sticker if I was sure to get a spot and be on time for my classes, but I never am." The student chose to be anonymous.

Other universities in the area, such as the University of Pennsylvania (Penn), are much more expensive to park. Twenty-four hour parking at Penn from September to May costs $625, and commuters pay $328, said Joanne Confalone of Penn's Department of Parking and Public Transportation.

Parking at Penn is given on a first-come, first-serve basis. The high cost of parking at Penn is indicative of the school's lack of parking facilities, she added.

Parking at St. Joseph's University costs $125 for residents, $65 for commuters and $50 for evening students, said an official at the Security and Public Safety Department. The department also imposes fines ranging from $10 to $50 for parking violations.

The cost of parking at Temple University is $49 for residents and $25 for commuters, said Pankaj Gubda, a student worker at the Parking Services Office.

"Many other schools, such as the University of Pennsylvania, have waiting lists for parking. Even though we [Villanova] have limited space to park here, I think that what we charge is pretty reasonable," Horton said.

Young discusses gender roles

By MARY JANE MAHAN
Staff Reporter

Iris Marion Young, author of Justice and the Politics of Difference, gave a lecture entitled "Why gender issues upset paradigms of justice" on Sept. 19 in the Wayne/St. Davids Room of the Connelly Center. The associate professor of Public and International Affairs at the University of Pittsburgh is known for her articles on "Ethics," "Social Theory and Practice" and "Philosophical Forum." The talk was sponsored by the departments of Philosophy and Women's Studies.

Society needs to overthrow its traditional thoughts about justice. A dichotomy exists between the public and private spheres, where the term "public" pertains to government, commerce and business and the term "private" to family, home, and children, Young said.

Justice only applies to public matters, while private matters lie outside of justice. She stated that while men oppress the private, they still depend on it through the "sexual contract."

Young called for change in three stages. The first stage would be to include women in public matters. The second stage would emphasize how justice is needed in private matters also. At the third stage, the distinction between the two would be smashed.

Young gave a common representative definition for feminism: "the political constitution of the distinction between the public and private spheres." She called for politics to challenge this distinction. She also asked that people rethink the concept of justice rather than disregard it.

Young told her audience to question the justice of marriage where heterosexuality and homosexuality is concerned. She asked why it is not conceivable to have two sisters or two women as the heads of a household without men.

Matters of parenting should be disconnected from gender, she said. Gays claiming parental care should not be limited to heterosexual relationships. She also questioned the health care rights of gay couples.

Justice must concern more than the distribution of goods, labor and institutional organizations, she said. This distribution paradigm misses large gender issues which cannot be handled by this policy.

VU students show homeless concern

By CHRISTINE FINGERHUT

The Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless (VCPH) held its third annual Homeless Awareness Day on campus Sept. 24. All proceeds go to area shelters in Philadelphia and Norristown.

The committee sold canned goods for donations of one, three or five dollars in the Quad, Kennedy Mall, and in front of the Chapel. Other events included a film in the Bel Air Terrace, toiletry sales, and a hot pretzel sale.

As well as raising money to benefit the needy and the homeless, the VCPH hoped to raise awareness and educate students about the existing conditions of the homeless in the Philadelphia area. The Villanova Student Theatre helped to heighten this awareness by dressing up and creating makeshift cardboard shelters throughout the campus.

The Villanova Committee for the Philadelphia Homeless consists of four committees which serve the needy and the homeless throughout the year. The Sandwich and Streets committees make sandwiches and deliver them to the homeless two nights a week. They also offer advice on where to get a shower and a change of clothes, and how to locate organizations involved with housing. The Soup Kitchen committee works three times a week in area soup kitchens and shelters, including the St. Francis Inn and Mother Teresa's soup kitchen. The Rehab and Renovations committee works to beautify and repair shelters and soup kitchens, and the Habitat for Humanity committee works at least two Saturdays a month building houses and doing plumbing and electrical work.

Panther leader recounts history of organization

By MATTHEW J. BRENNAN

Bobby Seale, co-founder of the Black Panther Party and author of the book Seize the Time, addressed a crowd Sept. 23 in the Connelly Center Cinema after the showing of the 1989 film "Berkeley in the Sixties," part of the Fall 1991 Cultural Film Series.

The documentary chronicles the many forms of activism that California at Berkeley during the turbulent '60s. "Berkeley in the Sixties" traces the development of the free speech movement and the nonviolent civil rights movement as well as the violent conflicts stemming from the anti-Vietnam War movement.

The Black Panther Party, founded in 1966 by Seale and Hewey Newton, advocated that blacks arm themselves in self defense against the violent confrontations with whites that were sure to occur in their quest for black liberation. During those years of activism there were numerous confrontations between the police and the Black Panther Party around the country.

Dr. Jack Doody, chairman of the philosophy dept., introduced Seale after the film and asked him what led him into activism, how the activism changed the world and himself, and how he viewed his activism today.

Seale said that he did not have any interest in activism in 1962 but, "sort of stumbled into social science and activism."

One day, "these guys were having some street car rally and they were rapping about black people, we are not negroes, we are not coloreds ... we are Afro-Americans and it is the correct social science reference to call ourselves Afro-Americans or African-Americans."

Seale said he could identify with the men because Native Americans had gone through the same problem. "I could identify with

Philosophy prof awarded research fellowship, grant

University Press Release

University philosophy Professor John D. Caputo has received a $30,000 research fellowship from the National Endowment for the Humanities for the 1991-92 academic year.

Caputo, a specialist in contemporary French and German philosophy, was awarded the fellowship to write a book on the problem of ethics in a postmodern, highly pluralistic culture. The professor's book will explore the question of whether a universal standard of ethics is viable in a non-traditional society where cultural, racial and ethnic diversity exist.

Caputo is a current member of the National Board of Directors of the American Philosophical Association (APA), the highest governing body of the APA, the major professional association in philosophy with about 6,000 members.

Caputo was among 117 recipients chosen from 1,200 applicants this year for the prestigious award. Villanova will match funds for the grant, allowing the researcher a one-year sabbatical leave to complete his project.

According to Caputo, postmodernism refers to the contemporary world in which tremendous diversity or plurality exists. "Extensive diversity and points of view abide in the United States as opposed to a traditional, one-culture society," he said.

Gainesville suspect faces three charges

By College Press Service

The chief suspect in the killings of five students in Gainesville, Fla., may face three murder charges in his hometown in Louisiana, according to a police affidavit.

The affidavit from Shreveport, La., police was filed in support of a search warrant to obtain saliva, blood and hair samples from Danny Harold Rolling, 37.

Shreveport police say the samples may link Rolling to the 1989 triple-murder of Julie Grissom, 24; her father Tom, 55; and her nephew Sean, 8. They believe Julie Grissom was the target, but her father and nephew also were stabbed to death when they walked in on the killing.

The affidavit's release came Aug. 26 as Rolling faced jury selection for his robbery trial in Tampa, where sheriff's deputies said Rolling held up a grocery store then led them on a chase and subsequent shootout. On Aug. 29, a jury convicted Rolling of robbery, attempted and aggravated assault on police.

The Tampa robbery charges came a few days after police found the bodies in Gainesville in August 1990, but they are unrelated to the student murders. Still, investigators say the Tampa conviction could help connect Rolling to the murders because the car used in the robbery was stolen from an apartment complex near the University of Florida.

Although Rolling is suspected in the Shreveport and Gainesville killings, no charges have been filed against him in either case.

"American success story," Mark Thomas said. The judge described how he grew up in Savannah, Ga., during the era of strict racial segregation.

Thomas' background may "make him more sensitive to the concerns and needs of people who have had to struggle like he has," said Cliff Wilson, Radnor Township's Democratic Party chairman.

Opposition to Thomas on campus rises from his "lack of experience working with constitutional law," according to Steve Smith of Student Coalition Against Apartheid and Racism (S.C.A.A.R.). "Thomas was trained in a business area ... [constitutional law] is not the type of law he dealt with."

"[Thomas] has the experience and background, but I do not agree with him on many political issues," said Wilson. "He has been described as a strict constructionist of the constitution, and I think it should be more generic and liberal," Wilson added.

Thomas went through a week of testimony answering questions posed by the eight Democrats and six Republicans who make up the Senate Judiciary Committee. The committee then heard witnesses for and against Thomas.

One of the issues the senators presented to Thomas was affirmative action, preferential treatment on the basis of a person's race. He expressed opposition to numerical goals, timetables and racial preferences.

"Thomas spoke [against] quotas and affirmative action ... but he benefitted from quotas," said John Sullivan, president of College Democrats. Sullivan said the Republicans are using Thomas "as a pawn for their personal gains."

Thomas' view on quotas has a conservative slant, said Smith. "He supports a conservative agenda, which breaks the myth that all blacks are liberal."

During the confirmation hearings the Judiciary Committee asked Thomas over 70 questions on abortion. The senators focused on this issue "for fear that his appointment will lead to an overturn of Roe v. Wade," said Thomas.

A view on the issue of abortion is irrelevant to being an impartial judge, said Thomas at the witness table. Having one view could undermine his impartiality, he added.

If confirmed, Thomas may serve until the year 2030.

US News ratings

The poll ranked 1,373 schools on the basis of 2,425 survey responses from college presidents, deans and admissions directors. Survey participants rated only the institutions that are in the same category as theirs.

The reputational scores are a culmination of the survey opinions and data provided by the schools including financial resources, student satisfaction, selectivity of students and financial support given to faculty.

The key is that other professional educators in the Northeast hold us in such high regard to consider us first in reputation, McGuire said.

The University placed No. 30 in the financial resources category. The criterium used to determine a university's financial strength was the 1990 total of educational and general expenditures, divided by its total full-time enrollment.

With all the problems schools face, it is long past the time when a university president could parry a critic by smugly boasting that American higher education is "the best in the world," said Donald N. Langenberg, chancellor of the University of Maryland.

Conservative group fights for Catholic causes

National Catholic Reporter

High-profile Catholics, angered by what they see as an upsurge in "Catholic-bashing," have joined in a new campaign aimed at bringing a distinctively Catholic voice to the U.S. public-policy debate.

The Catholic Campaign for America took its first action two weeks ago: an endorsement of Clarence Thomas' nomination to the Supreme Court.

Thomas, say members of the privately funded campaign, has been subject to the kind of anti-Catholic rhetoric they hope to combat. When he was nominated to the high court, Virginia Governor Douglas Wilder asked, "How much allegiance does he owe to the pope?"

"It caused us to say, 'Look, we can't wait any longer,' " said Marlene Elwell, international director of Legatus, an organization of Catholic CEOs [not linked to the campaign] based in Ann Arbor, Michigan.

Elwell, who organized Michigan and Iowa for the Rev. Pat Robertson's 1988 presidential campaign, said she had long wanted to organize Catholics.

"There's a Jewish voice, there's a black voice, there are all kinds of voices out there," she said. "But there isn't a Catholic voice."

The campaign will not lobby for political candidates but will attempt to influence public policy at the state legislature level and the U.S. government, Elwell said. Specific issues, not yet hammered out, will include abortion, gay-rights legislation, parental choice in education and social issues, members said.

For now, the "Catholic voice" is largely conservative and Republican. Members of the campaign's advisory board include Republicans William Bennett, Patrick Buchanan, William Simon and Mary Ellen Bork (wife of Robert Bork).

The campaign's national chairman is former Vatican Ambassador William Wilson. Other Catholics on the advisory board include baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn; Thomas Monaghan, chairman of Dominio's Pizza; Detroit Tigers' owner and Legatus founder; and Richard J. Neuhaus, a converted Lutheran minister recently ordained.

National committee members include Phyllis Schlafly of the Eagle Forum and the Republican National Coalition for Life; Russell Shaw of the Knights of Columbus and A.J. Matt Jr., publisher and editor of The Wanderer, an independent, conservative Catholic newsweekly based in St. Paul, Minn.

New York Cardinal John O'Connor serves as the campaign's ecclesiastical adviser; Los Angeles Bishop John Ward is on the national committee; Corpus Christi Bishop Rene Gracida is on its advisory board. (Attempts to reach the bishops were unsuccessful).

Despite the group's conservative slant, Elwell says she "doesn't want this to appear as a Republican group." She said she has contacted retired former Rep. Lindy Boggs (D-La.), who has agreed to help "come up with names" of Catholic Democrats.

Elwell began organizing the campaign in November 1990, when she and Thomas Wykes (who works for Legatus) flew to California to meet with former Vatican Ambassador Wilson and Los Angeles Bishop Ward.

In April 1991, Elwell — who has "maxed out" her credit card to provide much of the group's start-up funding — invited about 100 Catholic leaders to Washington, D.C., to discuss an action plan. Then she organized a national committee and advisory board, and went to Detroit Archbishop Adam Maida for permission to use the word "Catholic" in the group's name.

Michael Schwartz, who advised campaign leaders during the group's early stages, said the campaign has come up with a list of issues on which church teaching is "clear."

Explained Schwartz, "There is a distinction between prudential judgments such as living wills versus binding teaching such as the primacy of parental rights in education." The latter is a "clear teaching" because several church documents have affirmed parental rights, he said.

Asked whether it is realistic to unite often-divided Catholics around such issues, Elwell replied: "As Catholics, we all support the magisterium. The church has positions we can all agree on." On abortion, for example, "the church has a very clear teaching."

Schwartz acknowledged that bringing Vatican positions into the U.S. public-policy debate could revive old fears of Catholic politicians taking their cue from Rome. But he added that he would not change his behavior to avoid feeding into "paranoia."

Elwell, however, disagreed. "My desire would be to work hand in glove with the bishops," she said, adding that she met with USCC general secretary Monsignor Robert Lynch Sept. 4 to assure him "we love the church and we wouldn't do anything to offend the church."

Custard getting his butt kicked by Sitting Bull," he said.

Not long after, Seale and Newton organized a black student union that later became a grass roots civil rights organization called the Black Panther Party.

Seale said that the founding philosophy of the Party came from the "democratic principles" of our constitution. Their self defense philosophy stemmed from police brutality that occurred often in the Berkeley area and around the country, he added.

"Peaceful demonstrators... were really being attacked all over this country not only in Berkeley, I mean down South. They used dogs, cattle prods, and the racist Klu Klux Klan were shooting, murdering and killing black and white alike," said Seale.

"In effect we decided that what we would do is to look out for our own safety and take a philosophy of self defense against any racist attacks or what have you, because Malcolm X had basically taught us that self defense was an act of intelligence," Seale added.

Within this established philosophy of self defense Newton and Seale asserted their Second Amendment right to bear arms. Newton, a law student, educated members on the gun laws and what could subject a person to arrest.

Shocking the country, they asserted their right to bear arms and protested police brutality on the steps of the California Legislature. From 1967-69 the Black Panther Party was in numerous shoot-outs to defend themselves from police brutality. Twenty-one Black Panther Party members were killed and 64 wounded while 14 police officers were killed and another 32 officers wounded during these shoot-outs.

Seale said that the Black Panther Party was not just involved in shoot-outs. During the late 60s the Party fed 200,000 children each morning for five days a week eventually convincing the California Legislature to implement the free meal plan for children. Preventive health care clinics were made accessible to blacks by the party and helped in treating most cases of Sickle Cell Anemia in history.

join in the vision...

OPEN YOUR MIND TO THE WHOLE WORLD

Positions available on the following committees:

Calendar/Publicity: (Carole Otypka) — committee efforts will be focused on creatively alerting the campus community to programs sponsored or developed by the Campaign or other on-campus groups and organizations. Publicity is responsible for posters, signs, ads and other attention-getting avenues of informing the campus about activities. Calendar entails working with other committees within the Campaign to develop a cohesive idea of when programs will be occurring.

Campus Ministry Liaison: (Brendon Dolan) — this committee will work with the Campus Ministry primarily by presenting the question of how our Campus Ministry can reflect and bring to fruition the ideas of the Campaign for Community and helping them act upon the answers. The main goal will be to try to set up inter-faith prayer services, acknowledging the need for Villanova to provide the opportunity for our non-Catholic believers to pray as part of our community.

Faculty Affairs: (Teresa Sharpe) — this committee will serve as liaisons to the faculty. Goals include assembling two newsletters per semester for the faculty and providing the faculty with information and developments concerning the Campaign.

Finance Committee: (David Flannery) — the responsibilities of this committee are; to solicit funds from the University and from private endowments, to assemble an annual budget, and to allocate these monies to the Steering Committee and student groups for programming, training, lectures, etc.

IFC & Panhellenic Liaison: (Chris Andraca) — the goals of this committee are to encourage the promotion of diversification in the pledging of the Greek system and to encourage sponsorship within the Greek system of activities to promote further awareness.

Presentations: (Christine O'Reilly) — the purpose of this committee is to conduct presentations on the importance of cross cultural communication and the correct way in dealing with "diversity issues." A professional organization will be providing a presenters training workshop at Villanova on October 13th, from 10 am-5 pm, to teach the committee members how to go about accomplishing this goal.

Publications: (Yana & Yolanda Carter) — the objective of the Publications committee is to utilize the various media around campus (WXVU, The Villanova, Chataqua, among others) to highlight particular diversity issues and to use these mediums as forums to initiate discussion on values held by those attending Villanova.

Student Activities Coordination:
Cultural groups: (Katie Roberts)
Non-cultural groups: (Michaela Battista) — these committees will work with the cultural and non-cultural student organizations on campus, respectively, helping them program events, either alone or in conjunction with other groups. The committees will help these groups coordinate and plan events in an advisory capacity.

Student Government Liaison: (Ken Batchelor) — possible events for this committee include Student Government programming and debates on current events. Committee efforts also include working in conjunction with the Student Government's secretary for multi-cultural affairs and assisting the student govt. with projects as requested.

South Campus Register

The upcoming election of Radnor Township Board of Commissioners affords Villanovans in the Seventh Ward an investment opportunity for the future of the University. If residents in that ward would register and vote for Professor Bob Langran, especially all South Campus and Radnor House Residents, the relations with Radnor Township could improve tenfold.

Langran has lived in Radnor Township for 33 years and has taught at Villanova since 1959. He also coaches the men's and women's tennis team. He has seen the relations with the township at their worst and at their best. We need Professor Langran as our next Township Commissioner. Langran knows Villanova.

If Langran wins he will act as an intermediary presenting the views of the students and University at every Township meeting. Then unfair laws, such as the housing ordinances restricting the number of related persons living together, could be overturned and future laws deterred. Hence, living costs and police harassment could be frayed.

All freshman and sophomores should know that by registering and voting you will be investing in your future at Villanova. The grim reality remains that the majority of underclassmen will become off-campus residents (OCR) their junior year and you will face the same housing problems you hear about from present OCR's. But by simply registering and voting, you hold the power for change. The power to enhance relations between the University and the Township so that one day Villanova may house the entire student population.

We would like to ask resident assistants (RA's), juniors and seniors to inform your hallmates to register and vote. Remember what you or your friends went through in dealing with the township ordinances in the past?

If you need help in registering, you can receive information from John Sullivan in Rm. 502 Stanford Hall. Registering by Oct. 7 and then voting Bob Langran into the Township Commissioner position, would be truly emphasizing the meaning of community.

'Nova number three?

This year Villanova dropped from No. 1 to No. 3 in the U.S. News and World Report ranking of national colleges and universities. What could the University do to reclaim the No. 1 position?

First of all, Villanova dropped six places in financial resources. Most students and their parents struggle to afford the costly Villanova education. With decreasing financial resources and the current economic situation prospective students may be turning to other colleges and universities. Villanova should consider offering more academic scholarships and grants aside from the presidential scholarship.

In academic reputation, Villanova is still rated No. 1. It is still perceived as the finest academic school in the North region.

The University's faculty remains highly accredited by the magazine. The student/faculty ratio is around 14:1, meaning for every 14 students the University employs one professor, a commendable achievement.

Similarly, the satisfaction students find at Villanova remains among the best in the nation. The University ranks fifth out of the colleges and universities in the North.

So, where else may the digression lie? Perhaps, the lack of on-campus housing for upperclassmen, and the well-publicized zoning problems with Radnor Township have frightened prospective students. Many are shocked to hear that such a majority of upperclassmen reside off campus.

If the University attends to its lack of financial aid, improves its relations with the surrounding townships and increases campus housing, it could easily regain its status as the finest institution in the North.

Villanova students are commended

To the Editor:

I am writing in response to the letter by the student who was a victim of rape. As I stood in the middle of Connelly Center reading that letter, I felt an array of emotions. At first I felt a deep anger that someone had the power to ruin another's life within a matter of 10 minutes and subject a human being to a lifetime of hell reliving those 10 minutes forever.

I felt a deep hatred for the rapist for shattering this woman's life, for making her feel "bruises" that could not be healed, for making her feel as though she could not be respected. No one has the right to do that to another human being.

At the same time, I felt a great deal of admiration for this student. She had the courage and bravery to do what many of us would never have had the strength to attempt. By sharing her horrible experience with us, she has hopefully given other people the courage to speak out and break this "code of silence."

I hope she realizes that she is not in the least to blame, and I hope her letter showed the rapist the irreparable damage he caused to the life of this student. I would also like her to know that her letter affected many of us and gave me a great deal of respect for her in having the bravery to educate us of the reality of life at Villanova.

To the Editor:

Thanks to the Villanovan for breaking the too long silence surrounding victims of rape on our campus. I was deeply moved, and indeed haunted by the powerful honesty of the student who shared her story in the Sept. 20 issue. We can talk statistics until we become immune to them, but only by listening to the victims of rape, battering and sexual harassment is the hope of healing and preventing violence against women to be found.

Larisa Epatko's article "Campus rape focus on safety measures" did a good job of pointing out the strong support that Villanova women are receiving from the Task Force on Rape, Public Safety and the University Counseling Center. Still, these groups cannot be at every party, in every room, at every group conversation where violence against women is carelessly promoted by "humor" and dehumanizing comments. Let's show the woman who shared her story with us that we heard her — in our hearts and consciouses. Let's take responsibility for violence against women at Villanova and in society and act on this responsibility with vigilance and compassion.

To the Editor:

Fifty-five years of age, 60 years of age, 65 years of age — these are the norms used by most clubs, associations, insurance companies, etc. to characterize a senior citizen ... ergo, I am a senior citizen.

However, I am also an employee of Villanova University, and I would like to thank the very many students who have offered to help me as I enter Dougherty Hall, the building of my employment, i.e. the tall, good-looking football player who rushed to open and hold the door this morning when I seemed to be having difficulty. Then, there are the countless young men and women who have stood aside, held a door and given me access to the building before them.

In the years that I have worked in Dr. Neville's office, I have met hundreds, even thousands of young people. In all my life, I have never encountered more courteous, more well mannered, nicer or caring men and women. In some cases one can actually see and hear Sister Mary's directions. In others, it mirrors the home training they received as knee-highers.

As a parent and grandparent of many children and grandchildren, I appreciate the respect, the friendly courtesy I receive almost daily and I felt someone should thank these students and congratulate them on being in the majority rather than the very few who gain all the publicity for their outrageous behavior.

WXVU to service community?

By SHERYL BOWEN

I would like to take this opportunity to bring you up to date on the status of WXVU, Villanova University's new FM radio station. We are on the brink of realizing a dream shared by many Villanovans over the past 20 years. But we're not there yet.

As stated in last week's article in the Villanovan, WXVU began broadcasting in June with its sister station, WYBF at Cabrini College. Just to explain, the transmitter and antenna are located at Cabrini. Villanova's studios in Dougherty Hall are connected by phone lines to Tolentine Hall, where a satellite transmitter link sends the signal to Cabrini. This cooperative project has been in the works for at least the past six years.

Starting up an FM operation is an enormous task. We have terrific student leadership ready to do the job, but we have been plagued with "technical difficulties." These difficulties jeopardize our FCC license and continued student interest in working for the radio station.

Beginning in June, the station faced technical problems, mainly "getting the bugs out" of a system designed by Frank Hogan, our very capable Chief Engineer. Increasingly, however, the phone lines which connect our studios in Dougherty to the transmitting equipment in Tolentine became the apparent stumbling block in our efforts to broadcast.

WXVU and Villanova University have the potential to make an enormous difference in the community.

Since students have returned to campus, WXVU has been unable to broadcast from the studios on our own campus. We have been imposing on WYBF personnel, who have been kind enough to allow us to broadcast from their studios for the minimum number of hours required by the FCC. This is also an imposition for our students who must find their own transportation to Cabrini. Broadcasting only a limited number of hours also reduces the number of students who are able to have on-air positions. While the students in leadership positions with the station are to be commended for their good use of the time for training new students and putting new operating procedures into place, it is frustrating at best.

WXVU and Villanova University have the potential to make an enormous difference in the community. On campus, the opportunities for co-curricular activities are numerous. More than 100 students attended a recruiting meeting Sept. 11. Off campus, the station offers a channel of communication that extends to the communities surrounding the University. The opportunities for improving Town-Gown relations should be obvious.

We have been told that the recurring problem with the phone lines cannot be alleviated until those lines are totally replaced. We were informed that this requires budgetary allocation from the University's Board of Trustees. Unfortunately, this action delays any progress toward solving our immediate broadcasting needs. We sincerely hope that, if there is no other way around the problem the Board acts quickly on our behalf and that the subsequent work is performed without hesitation. With a sizable investment already made by the University, we would hope that its commitment to the FM station continues to be primary. All of us involved with the station are anxiously waiting to provide a full-service radio station to Villanova and surrounding communities.

We appreciate the continued support of the Villanova community, students, faculty and staff alike. We look forward to broadcasting from our own renovated studios.

Sheryl P. Bowen, Ph.D., is the faculty moderator for WXYU and a professor in the communication arts department.

Support Langran

To the Editor:

Ask a Villanova student what he or she thinks of the on-campus housing situation and you'll be sure to hear complaints about the lack of it.

Ask a Villanova student what he or she thinks of the off-campus housing situation and you'll hear complaints ranging from high prices to unfair ordinances.

Ask a Villanova student what he or she thinks of the Radnor Township police and you'll hear even more complaints — probably a little French as well.

Complaints, complaints, complaints. That's all you ever here. It's time to quit complaining. It's time to show some action — and for the first time in years we can do just that.

Political science professor and tennis coach Bob Langran is giving us that chance. He is running for Radnor Township's Board of Commissioners, and if elected he has promised to attack the issues of housing as well as relations between Villanova and Radnor.

Throughout the week of September 29 there will be tables set up in the South Campus cafeteria with voter-registration forms as well as fellow students to assist students in the registering process. It takes all of five minutes to complete the form, and by doing so you'll be eligible to vote for Langran (as well as others, including those involved in the state-senator race) in the upcoming November election.

If you think you'd like to hear Langran speak before you register, you can hear him Oct. 2 at 8 p.m. in the fourth floor lounge of Stanford Hall. You'll get a chance to hear his stand on several student-oriented issues as well as ask questions.

Students must act

By STACY COUCH
and CAROL TINO

What has Radnor Township done to you? It seems its government has perpetrated many an injustice against Villanova students and the University itself. Over the past year, we have heard or participated in many gripe sessions about the severe housing ordinances enforced by Radnor Township, yet nothing changes.

A possible explanation for this stagnant condition is the fact that Villanova University and the Radnor Township government do not have a good relationship. This situation is ludicrous since Villanova is a very large part of the community and deserves to be treated as fairly as the other residents of Radnor Township.

Villanova's on-campus housing problem is an indirect result of Radnor's attempts to block the construction of new dormitories through strict zoning laws.

At this point in time, Radnor Township has a strong hold over Villanova University and its students. Villanova's on-campus housing problem is an indirect result of Radnor's attempts to block the construction of new dormitories through strict zoning laws.

As a result, most students are forced to move off campus in their junior year. Now that they are off campus, these students face a variety of restrictive housing ordinances passed by Radnor Township. One such ordinance is that only two unrelated students can live in the same house. Paradoxically, since Radnor Township blocks on-campus housing, it creates its own problem with off-campus housing. There's no room for Villanova students on campus or off campus. Where are we supposed to live?

We have presented the basic facts to those of you, freshmen and sophomores, who as of yet have not had to deal with housing problems. Most importantly, we would like to hear the experiences off-campus students have encountered with the Radnor Township government to prepare the uninformed underclassmen for the hardships ahead of them.

Call 527-3694 to express your grievances to us so that we can report the experiences anonymously, or send a letter to the editor yourself telling the entire campus. With your help, we can further the validity of our complaints.

We need harmony between the government of Radnor Township and Villanova University. A great advantage to the school is Radnor Township Board of Commissioners' candidate Bob Langran. He has been a political science professor at Villanova since 1958 and a resident of Radnor Township for 25 years, as well as Villanova's tennis coach. Langran has three children attending our school. He sympathizes with both sides, for he is devoted to both the University and the community. We believe he would be an excellent intermediary between the University and the township. Villanova must find a representative such as Langran to reach a compromise with the Radnor Township government and to assert Villanova's rights as a member of the community.

In order to accomplish these goals, we need to get Bob Langran into office. This will only be possible if the residents of South Campus support him in the election. We hope that many students, particularly those on South Campus, will come to hear Bob Langran speak Wednesday, Oct. 2, in Stanford's fourth floor lounge at 8 p.m. Registration for the election comes to the students of South Campus the week of Sept. 29 in Donahue Hall. It's up to us to try and change the present housing situation, so let's quit complaining and instigate change by taking five minutes to register and use our power to vote.

Please return Fr. Mostardi's grill

To the Editor:

I am writing an appeal to whomever may have taken the gas grill that was outside New Female Hall. This grill was borrowed from my father, and I would like to return it to him. I am sure that seeing it just sit there for a few weeks was very tempting. In fact, you may have thought it was just "up for grabs."

I do not want to imply that it was stolen, but if you have it in your possession or know someone who stumbled on to it around August 31, please let me know. There will be no questions asked. You can drop it off in the dark of the night if need be. This is my last hope before I have to buy a new one.

Citizens must not abandon their American culture

By ELLEN GOODMAN

Certain members of my family — who shall remain nameless — have suggested a bumper sticker for my car: I Brake for Antiques. This, of course, is something of an exaggeration. I prefer to think of the afternoons I've spent stopping along the backroads of New England as adventures in social history.

As I have patiently explained to this same family, what we call antiques are a record of the real lives that real people led. They are a kind of down-home proof of the fact that people beat eggs, drank out of cups, used cupboards.

But what I tend to bring home from my much maligned jaunts are words. The words of other Americans, captured in magazines and books. And, occasionally, if I make a hit — not of the automobile variety — I even get some perspective on history.

This time, in the musty corner of a store on the old Route 1, I found an even mustier, hundred-year-old "Pictorial History of the United States." The author of this popular book, one James D. McCabe, wrote when historians were unencumbered by what are now called the "storm troopers of political correctness."

So his text brought back a time when even a colorless and relatively straightforward writer would describe the American past unselfconsciously as "a grand history — a record of the highest achievements of humanity — the noblest, most thrilling and glorious story ever penned on earth." In such star-spangled praise, McCabe not only called this "a Christian nation" but one which was happily "secured for the language and free influences of the all-conquering Anglo-Saxon race."

To read this now, when Christopher Columbus — the man and the day — are being debated, is to see how attitudes and ideas become antique. Speaking in the 1890s, my treasured McCabe did refer to some wrongs the white man inflicted on the natives, but this is not, to put it mildly, "Dances with Wolves." He tended to regard the "savages" as, uh, fairly uncooperative.

Women show up in this text rarely and African-Americans make cameo appearances as victims of slavery or subjects of policy. And though this author tipped his hat more than once to religious tolerance — coming out squarely against the Salem witch trials — he rather casually referred to Joseph Smith, he leader of the Mormons, as a "cunning imposter."

But what is typical of our present is the difficulty in agreeing on our past, writing an American history.

But what was most striking is what was most typical of my yellowed history. A century ago, the story of America was cast as an onward and upward tale of great men and their institutions and their battles. Our history was one of glory and progress, a parade of presidents, each of whom came with a fine resume and nearly all of whom did the right thing.

The text is vastly out of date with our sensibilities. We are more contentious now, even about our past. In the schools and colleges, dusty and dry discussions about curriculum have turned into heated and highly political debates that were unheard of 100 years ago: What should be taught and learned about our country? Who has been excluded? What should be included?

They are questions that get to the soul of who we are as a people and what we will think about our country. The debate is often framed now as an attack on the excesses of multiculturalism and increasingly there is an angry edge to it.

The attempt to open up the world view contained in the writing of men like McCabe is now seen as fragmenting, trivializing, even distorting. Blacks, women, Native Americans, who once criticized history as "his story" — a record of "dead white men" — are now being criticized in turn.

I feel no nostalgia in my antique-reading for the comfort and coherence that came from this limited view of the Great Men's March of Time. But what is typical of our present is the difficulty in agreeing on our past, writing an American history. What is typical of our era is the cacophony of voices, once left out, now scrapping for a piece of the historic pie to call their own.

If an historic sense is important, if we define ourselves by our past, then the task now is to find a way to hear the voices of the frontier women, and the Indians at Little Big Horn, and the people who did not make laws. To include more voices without losing a connecting thread of shared values and ideals that make us part of something recognizably American.

It's a task that resonates in politics as well as education, in contemporary life as well as history. Can we have diversity and unity in these United States? What antique arguments will cause our descendants to smile smugly when they find them in a country store on a future afternoon?

Is 'Nova less diligent in promoting conservativism?

By ANTHONY PALLADINO

I'm a bit confused in regards to Villanova's moral standards. Last week, during the Campus Fest held on Mendel Field, I picked up a magazine entitled Campus Connection, whose cover described it as the "hippest guide to college living." I proceeded to browse through its pages, finding informative and helpful articles on making computer decisions, studying smarter, getting one's foot in the door and even dining out.

If so, I'm not sure that this is the conservative Catholic institution which I previously decided to attend.

However, as I came to the concluding pages of this campus survival guide, my eyes were surprisingly met by the most lavishly colored page of the magazine — the "Trojan Man" comic strip. At first, I greeted the caped, second-century warrior and his decorated horse with a casual smile. But as I read on, my smile quickly transformed into a look of scornful disdain.

The comic opens as we see the Chez Sera Sera restaurant's waiter saying that tonight's special is ribs. Trojan Man enthusiastically responds by saying, "What a coincidence! That's my special tonight too!" We then see a close-up of the Trojan Ribbed condom box as Trojan Man explains that the ribbed condoms are "created for mutual pleasure with the sensitivity you've come to expect." But before the infamous hero of protection leaves, he's offered a glass of wine, which he admirably denies since he's "riding."

At first glance, this comic may seem a practical effort by a valiant soldier to lead in the war against AIDS. Disregarding abstinence, sale sex, after all, is the best way to stop the spread of sexually transmitted diseases (STD's) and to prevent unwanted babies. Nonetheless, there are other sexual implications which seem a bit more risque. For example, does Trojan Man deny the wine offer because he's riding a horse or because he'll be engaging in some of the "mutual pleasure" that the condoms are supposed to ensure?

At any rate, I turned over the last pages of the magazine and again read, a little closer, fine print in the bottom of the cover. It read: "Compliments of Campus Store at La Salle, University Shop at Villanova, University Store at Drexel." If Villanova provides funding for this magazine, does it also support Campus Connection's implications? If so, I'm not sure that this is the conservative Catholic institution which I previously decided to attend. I am especially disturbed since last week's Villanovan bleeds with headlines such as "Victim tells her story" and "Campus rape focuses on safety measures."

To date, I haven't seen condom dispensers in any of the bathrooms on campus. Even so, if Villanova is supporting ads like this one, I wouldn't be surprised to see my hall lavatory littered with white boxes flashing signs that read "Deposit 60¢."

Rape editorial stance disputed

To the Editor:

I am taking this moment to comment on the "Rape Prevention" editorial written in last week's Villanovan. Although the editorial is generally informative on the realities of date rape, the author uses the case of former Villanova student Steve Maloney, inaccurately.

Since the beginning of the Maloney case (March, 1989) the Villanovan has been consistent in editorializing Maloney as being guilty because it's a date rape. In this particular editorial, the author mentions the fact that Maloney is convicted of rape and "must face the consequences of his actions."

Maloney was found innocent on a rape charge in the spring of 1990, pertaining to the incident which occurred Homecoming Weekend of 1988. Yes, there are two charges left undecided (neither of them being rape), however, the case is far from over, and Maloney is far from going to jail.

I would like to commend Kristin Julason's article, "Rape Conviction Reinstated," for including Maloney's exoneration this spring on all charges in the second incident, none of which included rape. However, Julason's headline, referring back to the first incident, is misleading because there is no rape conviction being reinstated. The two undecided charges are the only ones being retried.

Throughout the past two years Maloney has maintained his innocence and will continue to do so. He only hopes that future "date rape" cases will be judged more individually than stereotypically. Not all date rape cases end up in conviction.

The Villanovan will continue to editorialize on this subject as well as others. I hope that in the future their comments will be written in more of an unbiased and factual manner.

Kevin J. Mylod

Editors note: Stephen Maloney's convinction on charges of involuntary deviant sexual intercourse (IDSI) and indecent assault was reinstated Sept. 10. IDSI is a form of rape involving oral intercourse. Maloney has the right to appeal to the Pennsylvania State Supreme Court. A defendant cannot be found innocent; a defendant can be found not guilty.

There's no need to panic. Just be aware: High serum cholesterol levels have been found in some children as young as age two. MEMO FROM DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC SAFETY

Since the beginning of the semester, there have been 6 (six) bicycle thefts that have occurred on Villanova's campus. In order to protect your bike from theft, keep in mind the following suggestions:

1. Many bikes are not recovered because they cannot be identified. Mark your bike with your driver's license number (or another easily traceable identification number).
2. Record the bike serial number (in the stay of the rear wheel or beneath the bottom bracket where pedals attach). Keep it in a safe place to give to the police if your bike is stolen.
3. Insure your bike against theft and loss.
4. And most importantly, lock your bike up every time you leave it unattended. A cryptonite bar lock is your best defense against theft.

If you see anybody suspicious on campus, please contact the department of public safety at 645-4444 or 527-1405.

Festival Mythos is an arts extravaganza

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Assistant Features Editor

The city of Philadelphia has always offered a tempting array of clubs, shops, restaurants and sights which beckon Villanovans to "the city of brotherly love." Now the metropolis is home to an attraction of a dramatically different kind. The University of the Arts and The Native Land Foundation have collaborated to present Philadelphia with a celebration of culture called Festival Mythos.

The Festival examines mythological and cultural influences upon a diverse selection of various visual, performing and literary arts. But by no means should this description conjure up images of dusty museums and dry exhibits. The celebration encompasses some of the most vibrant and spectacular events ever to be offered at one time in the Philadelphia area.

Festival Mythos has been dedicated to the continuing legacy of mythologist Joseph Campbell. Campbell's research chronicled the similarities and "worldwide distribution" of many cultures' myths and morals. A 1988 public television series based on his studies, entitled "The Power of Myth," captured the public's attention and soon the artistic world began to build upon his ideas. Four years after his death, the creative efforts of world-renowned artists have been organized in a tribute to Campbell's work. His belief that "myths are the world's dreams" has become the focus for Philadelphia's Festival Mythos celebration.

According to its sponsors, Festival Mythos will offer an impressive and colorful selection of dance and theater performances, exhibitions, films, lectures, symposia and special programs. These will be presented by over 80 individual artists, cultural organizations and institutions. Due to generous private funding, over two-thirds of the Festival Mythos events are free. Some Festival highlights include the world premieres of commissioned works by Garth Fagan, Elizabeth Swados and Lily Yeh; performances by Erick Hawkins Dance Company, Meredith Monk, Kei Takei, Afro Brazilian Musicians and Dancers, The Pennsylvania Ballet and People's Light and Theater Company; art exhibitions by Robert Motherwell and Irena Kononova; and lectures by authors, poets, performers and scholars such as Edward Albee, Ishmael Reed and Ashley Montagu.

In a recent "Evening with Maya Angelou" sponsored by Festival Mythos, the dynamic author and poet focused on the beauty and power of 19th century Black American poetry. In doing so, she provided a provocative and dramatic definition of Festival Mythos intent. Angelou spoke of the redemptive value of Black American poetry, as well as that of all other art forms, saying, "At some point the artist must ask,

Team Solarcat rides toward success

By DAN SFORZA
Staff Reporter

The Villanova Solarcat team is off and running for the 1991-92 school year. The team is seeking monetary and technical support so they may continue their winning traditions. The Solarcat has added new systems such as cruise control, power point mapping and a data communications system, all to enhance the solar car's efficiency. These additions will be implemented by the spring of 1992 when the team plans to compete in a solar car race.

> Villanova has one of the leading Solar Car programs in the country and has made many technological advances.

The team returned this past weekend from Charlotte, N.C., where they appeared in the Charlotte Motor Speedway's Fall Auto-Fair. This fair is one of the largest in the country with an annual attendance of over 150,000 spectators. Attractions such as the Harley-Davidson Traveling Museum, Kruse International Auctions, Magna Auto Shows, exclusive exhibits from the Imperial Palace, along with dozens of car clubs participate in this event. The Charlotte Motor Speedway is home to many large racing events such as the Winston Cup and the Coca-Cola 600.

The Solarcat was one of 10 cars chosen to be in a parade from the center of Charlotte to the racetrack. Once they arrived at the racetrack, the car was put on display. The Solarcat remained on display for three days and conducted speed trials.

The speed trials were turned into a competition against two other solar cars at the show. Drexel University and Virginia Polytechnic Institute were also displaying their solar powered vehicles. In the first heat, Villanova beat Drexel, but tied with Virginia Tech. Before the second heat, the Villanova pit crew performed a high speed gear change to allow the car to accelerate more efficiently down the quarter-mile strip. Villanova beat Virginia Tech and earned a plaque, the checkered flag, news coverage on all the major networks and a spot on ESPN's upcoming Speedweek.

This past May the Villanova Solar Racing Team competed in the "Tour de Sol" against 40 other universities. The Solarcat competed in the cross-continental division. The race lasted five days, covered six states and 400 miles. It began in Albany, NY with stops in Stores, CT, Avon, CT, Providence, R.I. and finished in Plymouth, MA.

The Solarcat came in first each time they raced a full day. Battery problems, due to a lack of proper specifications, caused them to miss a full day of racing. The penalty for this dropped them to second place overall, behind Rochester Institute of Technology, but ahead of Drexel University.

The Solarcat has a UNIQ 20 horsepower DC Brushless motor with an adjustable belt and cog drivetrain. The solar array is comprised of over 6000 cells and puts out 96 volts at 5-10 amps. The 80 battery cells that store the electrical energy can produce 80 volts at 50 amps per hour. The body is made of a lightweight Kevlar/Nomex shell and rides on foam-core graphite wheels with Goodyear SunRaycer tires. The total weight of the car, with driver, is under 650 pounds.

The problems with the environment and the use of fossil fuels have led to the technological advances made with solar powered vehicles. The experimental technology researched by universities across the country has made progress in a practical electric or solar car. Corporations such as Nissan and General Motors have prototypes of electric cars already built and tested. These cars should be on the market within 2-3 years.

The technology to produce cars of this type has come directly from our country's universities. Villanova has one of the leading Solar Car programs in the country and has made many technological advances.

The car costs around $300,000. Money donated to the program totalled $10,000 last year. All money, materials and technical advice were donated by many large corporations including Boeing, General Electric Astrospace Division and Exidine Instrumentation Technologies. Boeing lent a hangar to the team at their Philadelphia helicopter factory along with much technical and monetary support. GE donated the 6000 cells necessary to run the car. Exidine donated electrical support and materials.

"Extensive fundraising will be done to raise money this year. With a first and second place finish we hope to get more funding from the University so that our project may continue," stated Todd Blakaitis, President of Team Solarcat. "Some of our sponsors are reluctant to help out if they feel that the University is not fully backing us up." The team has had donations from the engineering department, but is seeking more assistance through the University.

St. Rita's Hall offers upperclass women a room (but not much room) of their own.

Single rooms are high class

By LAURA SCHILLER
Staff Reporter

It's not that you refuse to be social. And you're not selfish either. But at one point in your years as an on-campus resident, the thought of having a room to yourself enters your mind. Just imagine — privacy, peace, quiet, personal space. Well, maybe not space, but three out of four isn't too bad.

Perhaps it was an unsavory roommate from freshman year who saw classes as an occasional diversion from parties and dates. Or maybe it was an angelic roommate sophomore year who always had papers done weeks in advance. But even for those students who had terrific roommate experiences, the thought of a single room in Austin or St. Rita's Halls brings ecstatic smiles to many faces.

To the individual in the midst of a quest for a single room, the most glorious day of their lives may be when they receive their room assignments for the following year. Once this objective has been secured, the real problems begin. Where will all that accumulated junk of three years fit in those cubicles called rooms? Lack of space is surely one drawback in these residence halls. Junior Regina Turney said, "My room is so small, I have to leave the room to change my mind."

> Just imagine — privacy, peace, quiet, personal space.

Many students find creative ways to increase the volume of their rooms. Some add shelves; others stack crates. Still others cram all their stuff inside the room and sleep in the hallway.

Austin residents seem to have it a little better. Their rooms are larger, but the closet space is nil — consisting of a mere two hooks nailed to the wall. Many women contend that guys have fewer clothes, but those seniors in Austin are hard pressed to find a suitable place to hang that ever-popular navy blue blazer.

Though space is limited, the congenial atmosphere of these two residence halls is not lacking in any way. At any time during the day or evening, one can walk through the corridors and encounter many open doors. "I think that because we are living in singles, it is necessary to keep our doors

Go West for home comforts

By ELIZABETH HARTNETT
Staff Reporter

"You live where? Simpson? Oh, you mean you're one of those people who live behind Campus Corner, way at the end of campus; the West End?" Okay, so maybe a West Campus address doesn't carry the social prestige of having quarters in the Quad and isn't known as the Country Club, the alias for St. Mary Hall. The dorms on West Campus, though a bit secluded, are a group of houses unique in their own way. Settled between Tolentine and Lancaster Ave., the dorms are quiet and spacious with plenty of trees and lots of open space. West Campus is made up of Simpson Hall, O'Dwyer, Fedigan and Delurey, with Fedigan being the closest, I guess you could say, inland.

Even though the dorms aren't as popular as those on Main Campus, the students who live in them are pretty pleased about their "houses." Sophomore Jeep Kennedy, a two year resident of Simpson Hall, calls his room "comfortable and not a rathole like many of the rooms on Main." Simpson is a small male dorm that houses about 36 students and has a "fraternity atmosphere" because of its smallness. According to Kennedy and sophomore Mike Stintson, the dorm is really quiet which makes it great for studying. They say to live in Simpson is worth the walk and the only disadvantage is that people are reluctant to come and visit because of the distance.

> The dorms on West Campus, though a bit secluded, are a group of houses unique in their own way.

Beyond Simpson lies O'Dwyer, a dorm for 50 freshman women. Most of the students really seem to like O'Dwyer and appreciate the fact that it is all freshmen because everyone is experiencing the same feelings about being new on campus. Susan Barrett is pleased about her "good sized room, the quietness and smallness of the dorm." As a freshman, she hasn't had much of a chance to compare O'Dwyer to other dorms, but the only thing she would like to see changed is the lack of air conditioning. Another resident of

St. Mary Hall favors residents

By NOREEN GIBLIN
Staff Reporter

Living in St. Mary Hall, also known as "St. Mary's Country Club," is a unique experience. St. Mary Hall is certainly one of the more diverse buildings on campus. Almost every facet of the Villanova experience — religious, social, intellectual and moral — is represented to some degree by this structure.

St. Mary's has the unique distinction of being the first Villanova residence hall to become mixed-gender. It houses male and female freshman, sophomore, junior and senior students and provides varied housing options such as singles, doubles and triples.

St. Mary's was coined "the country club" because it offers some special features that other dorms on campus do not, such as a swimming pool, an indoor basketball court, tennis courts and a cafeteria.

Sophomore Thomas Lanza really enjoys the triple he is sharing with two of his friends this year, and likes the location of the cafeteria. "During the winter months, it is great not having to put on a coat and boots to go eat. It is also advantageous in the morning because a lot of students go to breakfast in their pajamas." Lanza further stated, "because of all the potential entertainment possibilities inside of the building, you never even have to leave on a rainy day."

Sophomore Barton McBride claims that St. Mary's cafeteria has "the best food of all the campus dining halls." McBride also said that he "enjoys the music which is played daily in the cafeteria during the meals," but also added that there are "just not enough telephones" for resident use.

One freshman admits that St. Mary's "did not exactly fulfill my expectations of what a college dormitory would be like." He characterized St. Mary's as "old and small" yet "cozy and homey" as well. He has enjoyed his first few weeks of school and has found it "easy to establish friendships with my hallmates." He further highlighted the fact that "there is a nice mix of students on the floor — engineers, business majors, athletes, etc." and "there is always hustle and bustle in the hallways."

Meet Dean Ellis of the College of Arts and Sciences

By VALERIE JONES
Staff Reporter

The Middle Eastern decor inside the office of the Rev. Kail Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, reflects some of his interests as well as one of his goals as dean. The prints are from his travels in Egypt and Pakistan; his emphasis has been toward expanding Villanova's international programs.

During the five years in which Ellis has served as dean, he has indeed seen this program expand. The college has instituted programs in Latin American and Arabic studies, and the number of students who study abroad has increased.

Ellis is not only a Villanova administrator, he was once a student, having received his master's degree in political science from Villanova. His master's in theology came from Augustinian College, and he earned his doctorate degree in international relations at Catholic University in Washington, D.C.

Including his five years as dean of Arts and Sciences, Ellis has worked at Villanova for a total of 11 years. He has held positions as director of summer school sessions, member of the political science department and director of the Arabic/Islamic Studies center. Prior to coming to Villanova, he taught high school in Washington, D.C.

"Since I've been here, I've seen Villanova get a lot of recognition academically and otherwise. I've also seen the overall quality of the students steadily improve and diversify as the campus grows," said Ellis.

On a day to day basis, most of Ellis' time is taken up with committee meetings and dealing with student and faculty dilemmas. Recently, he has been busy meeting architects and contractors overseeing preparations to build and move into the new liberal arts center.

In the future, Ellis expects to see Villanova "become leaner in terms of a smaller student body and a stricter emphasis on academic quality." To achieve this, he anticipates Villanova's resources to be put toward its strengths and the number of accepted freshmen to decrease.

In his spare time, Ellis enjoys music, art museums and walking. So, if you see a familiar face when wandering around Valley Forge or the Philadelphia Museum of Art, it could be your dean.

open and to make a considerable effort to be friendly with people in the hall," stated one resident.

Because these residence halls accommodate fewer students, it is easier to organize social events. Barbecues, picnics, volleyball games and dances are held constantly throughout the year.

Both St. Rita's and Austin Halls are located centrally on campus, and they seem to be the ideal places for upperclassmen to live. Unfortunately, the demands for these rooms far exceed the number of places available. But don't abandon all hope, there is a student out there who received lottery number one. That student may be you.

Mythos festival celebrates arts

'Why?' We realize now that it is because great art belongs to all people at all times."

Angelou was presented as "a trailblazer for women of every hue." But her powerful insight soon demonstrated that she is a champion of every culture and all people, as well as a spokesperson for the ideals of Festival Mythos.

It is ironic that Joseph Campbell's attempt to emphasize the similarities between cultures has developed into a vehicle for celebrating the richness of our cultural diversity. Take this chance to experience the wealth of culture offered by both Festival Mythos and the city of Philadelphia. The focus of Festival Mythos mirrors the concerns voiced in Villanova's own Campaign for Community. Use this opportunity to participate in the world beyond Villanova and bring a bit of a different culture back to campus with you.

Complete schedules of Festival Mythos events are available at Encore Bookstores throughout Philadelphia and at the University of the Arts. For a recorded announcement with general information on all events, including dates, times, locations and ticket prices, call (215) 875-FILM.

enjoying his first year as a Resident Assistant (RA) in St. Mary's. He dislikes the "long walk" to some of his classes, but is finding his new position "rewarding." He stressed the positives of the St. Mary's dorm rooms such as "the private sinks, self-controlled air conditioning and heat and the co-ed factor."

Sophomore Mike Racich is a second-year resident of St. Mary's. He cites "proximity to friends" as his main reason for staying. He also finds that the classrooms in the building left open for student use "are very conducive for study purposes." He also added that "8:30 a.m. classes in Bartley are not looked upon with glee."

St. Mary's is one of Villanova's hidden treasures. Although there are some things one has to sacrifice to live there, St. Mary's also has its fair share of rewards. Maybe it would be worth the trip one day to go up there and explore the possibilities.

West Campus

O'Dwyer, Christine Darlington, said that you get close to all of the students in the hall because they all eat together and support each other. She says she would never want to live in Stanford or the Quad because O'Dwyer is quiet, small and all freshman. The only changes she would like to have made are the addition of private phones and air conditioning.

Right above Simpson and O'Dwyer is Delurey Hall, a dorm housing around 87 men. According to sophomore Jason Cordes, the dorm is a great place to live because it is quiet, the rooms are spacious and most of his friends live there. He said the dorm is unique because a lot of students on the athletic teams live there. Delurey has three floors, with a pool room in the basement and is small enough for the students to get to know each other well.

So, if you think that anything West of Alumni is the boonies, think again. It may be far away, but it's a very tight community.

The spacious; sometimes serpentine halls of Delurey lure residents looking for a "homey" atmosphere.

ENTERTAINMENT

'Hotel' saved by Tommy Tune

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

In typical Tommy Tune fashion, "Grand Hotel" is a visual spectacular. Focusing on the mysterious pulse of Berlin's Grand Hotel, the musical adaption of the 1932 film presents an unrealistic world of fashion, romance and white-collar crime. It is no surprise that the musical, which opened in 1989 and is still running, was the winner of five Tony awards for direction, choreography, costumes, lighting and featured performer. However, it is unfortunate that the presentation must fill the gaps of a weak and disjointed plot.

Surprisingly, one of the greatest strengths of this musical is the set. The lobby of this lavish hotel is designed with exquisite detail. It is one of the most noticeable attributes of the play. The chandeliers dim on cue, the background adapts to the time of day and the entire stage is used to its full advantage. Tune's expertise in this area clearly shines through. At no time during the two-hour play does the curtain close to allow the backdrop to change. The basic set was transformed from a bar to a Moroccan Coffee Bar, to the roof of the hotel, to the backstage of an opera house before the audience's eyes.

There are about seven basic characters around whom this musical revolves. The characters themselves are so stereotypical that their names are simply the Baron, the Secretary and the Ballerina. Their roles are as obvious as the lines they utter. The music, which usually furthers the plot, especially in a musical, only adds reinforcement to the present predicament.

In place of having one main plot, "Grand Hotel" is composed of many different subplots which are tied together by loose strings.

The relationships are strained and the resolutions are incomplete. No one in the audience could believe the Baron when he professes his undying love to the aging Ballerina, especially since he went to her hotel room to steal a necklace in order to pay off a debt. How could their 'love' be true?

(COURTESY OF THE SHUBERT THEATRE)
The Baron and the Ballerina of Tommy Tune's "Grand Hotel."

In essence, too many stories are attempted on one stage. By scene 20, the audience has been introduced to many different people, but none of their stories have been completely followed through. In the end, it seems like the musical just ended with simple and unrelated answers to the questions posed in the earlier scenes. This is not to say that the performance given by the actors are not outstanding and noteworthy. Liliane Montevecchi, who received a Tony nomination for her Broadway performance of the ballerina, gives a similar energetic performance on the road. She adds life and spunk to the role of an aging woman. As the dying, shy accountant, Mark Baker is genuinely loveable. "Who Couldn't Dance With You?" sung by Baker is heart-warming and adorable. In addition, DeLee Lively emits quiet sex appeal as a typist on her way to Hollywood.

"Grand Hotel" is an amusing musical thats strength comes from its large cast and stunning choreography. The story is shallow and the music is weak. Regardless, Tommy Tune has once again highlighted his natural talent by turning a thin script into a heightened visual experience. "Grand Hotel" is rescued by Tune's direction.

Dan Wilson cracks up the Cat's Den

By COLEEN KENIREY
Staff Reporter

Dan Wilson, presented by the Student Programming Council Sept. 18, proved a comedian can break the Andrew Dice Clay mold and still make people laugh. Wilson's humor avoids offensiveness and focuses on satirizing everyday life. He sums up this comedic style when he says, "I don't make this stuff up, I just bring it up to you." He chooses to make his humor "palatable to everyone, rather than resorting to audience-bashing.

The comic's ability to imitate is the most entertaining part of his show. Wilson gave his impressions of a Praying Mantis, a man choking on popcorn at the movies, a Pennsylvania speed bump, a midget, a dental drill and even Late Night's Paul Schaeffer. However, his most amazing achievement is his impression of Barney Phife, which he says he learned from another comic, Paul Lyons.

> Wilson's act covered a wide variety of subjects, making him a sure hit with the audience.

Wilson's act covers a wide variety of subjects from his wish to own a vibrating beeper, "drop it down your pants and hope to hell someone calls," to his comments about Corr Hall, "I hear they have you stacked up like rats over there." Wilson also wonders why people watching the film "Boyz N' The Hood" feel the need to imitate the on-screen action by rioting and asks, "When you came home from "Robin Hood" did you catapult into the house?"

This Tarrytown, N.Y., native has appeared on "Caroline's Comedy Hour," "Star Search" and "Comedy Central." He is currently visiting various campuses, and if his reception at Satire is any indication, he should do very well at other colleges. Wilson was a definite hit with the audience. His use of visuals, such as a pair of size 60 cotton briefs worn on the head, kept the crowd laughing throughout the entire routine.

Danger Danger looks forward to release

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

"We're the only double named band with a double named top 40 hit," cackles keyboardist Kasey Smith of Danger Danger, "so we're in the history books for that, forever." Smith seems overly pleased as he just finished recording, Screw It the band's second album following its certified gold self-titled debut.

The song Smith spoke about was the band's breakthrough hit, "Bang Bang." "The record company (Epic/Sony Music) at the time wanted to release Naughty, Naughty as the first single, so we did. For the premier of the video, we all put on hard hats and ran through the 13th floor of MTV. The video went over well with the peeping tom and the telescope, but the single didn't do so hot. So we released Bang Bang, our original first choice for a single, and that's when things got kickin'."

Many bands in the metal scene are either really tight or enemies, flinging mud at each other in the press. The current Motley Crue-Guns N'Roses war has spiced up the tension. However, according to Smith, Danger Danger gets along with its peers just fine. "We're buds with the guys from Extreme and the guys from Warrant. We toured about a month and a half with Extreme, and they were fun guys, real nice. Our first tour was with Warrant, and that was a blast! We used to come on stage with them every night and sing, "Tush" for the shows finale. That was cool."

Danger Danger's greatest exposure was its triple billed tour with Kiss and Slaughter for Kiss' "Hot in the Shade" tour. "The Kiss tour was the best. Playing for that many people each night was outrageous. You felt like Led Zeppelin or something. However ... (laughs) we didn't get paid much. We pulled in about $1,000 per night and it cost about $14,000. It all came out of our own pocket. But, we did it for the exposure. I mean how many chances do you get to play Madison Square Garden? Plus, the guys from Kiss would tell us stories about the past, it was sweet."

Smith, who resides in Queens, recently married Playboy model Lisa Madison, famous for her Snap-On Tool calendar. His playing runs wild throughout each Danger Danger song, and keeps the music together for a tight sound. His playing sets the band apart from the head-banging trash crowd. "My influences range ... WIDE! (laughs) ... You'd be surprised. Jan Hammer and Keith Emerson are my idols, I guess you could say. But, my favorite band is Queensryche. They just blow me away. We played with them years ago with a band Surrender at L'amour's, East Soundstage, forget it man, they're like white hot. Especially now with their new "Empire" tour. But, I also get into stuff like Yes and Jethro Tull."

Screw It, promises Smith, will be a lot different from the original Danger Danger style. "We originally geared ourselves to be a commercial band. But after we released the first LP, we decided it was too processed. Our producer at the time, Lance Quinn, seemed to polish it up too much. We produced our second album ourselves and things went great. We

Petty disappoints in heartbreaking show

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

"If your gonna do this, you should have fun doing it. I wanna have all the fun I can in life," declared Tom Petty to a warm and welcoming crowd as he and his Heartbreakers pulled their "Touring the Great Wide Open" show into the Spectrum Sept. 16.

Petty's performance surpassed his previous tours. The stage fright that once plagued him has dissipated. Now he remains on a relaxed plateau, allowing him to connect with the audience.

With a set that was comprised of an odd replica of the Keebler Elf tree, Petty became rather animated and playful, something that he has failed to do in the past. His performance of "Don't Come Around Here No More," complete with Petty chasing Republican expresidents around the stage with a peace sign, was amusing. However, guitarist Mike Cambell's axe was rigged far too loud, drowning out Petty.

New material from Petty's latest effort, Into the Great Wide Open, grew like weeds throughout the set. Tunes such as opening track, "King's Highway," "Out in the Cold" and the title track were received with surprising excitement.

Full Moon Fever as well as old Heartbreaker classics were plentiful. "Free Fallin'" had the crowd in a sing-along, providing the background vocals, while "American Girl" had the fans stomping on their seats.

The main problem was Petty's out-of-tune song placement. One of his usual show stoppers and crowd arouser, "Breakdown" was played acoustically. It was a let down watching the traditional 10 minute gem cut to a minute and a half.

The encore of "The Waiting," which should have been set into the acoustic set, "Built to Last" and "Makin' Some Noise" disappointed the fans. Some of Petty's best work, "Jammin' Me," "Don't Do Me Like That" and "Rebels" were sorely missed. How many people perform brand new material as an encore? This proves Petty is an artist with a lot of heart and a lot of nerve.

FROM THE REELS

Late For Dinner

"Late For Dinner"
Directed by W.D. Richter
Columbia Pictures

Science and medicine today combine to make miracles appear ordinary. Organs are implanted into living patients, premature newborns can be kept alive and entire populations can live without fear of plagues and sicknesses. But when does it go too far? When does technology encroach on the boundaries of humanity?

"Late For Dinner" takes a lighthearted approach to the effects of a "medical miracle" on one American family. The film opens in 1962 as two brothers-in-law race from the scene of a crime. It is quickly revealed that the pair is caught in circumstances beyond its control, and is truly innocent of wrongdoing. They stumble into Pomona, Calif. where they meet a strange doctor who has been experimenting in a new field. The doctor is studying cryonics, the temporary suspension of the body in freezing nitrogen. He quickly decides that in order to save the pair (one is wanted by the police, one has bad kidneys) he will freeze them and eventually thaw them when it is safe.

The film then jumps to the present, where the men are freed from their ice chambers by accident. They wake up and soon realize they are no longer in 1962, and that 29 years have passed since that fateful night.

From this point, the film focuses on the emotional aspects of such a situation. Each man tries to identify with the years they have lost and the family they left behind. There are humorous scenes where they try to understand what rap is or how a man could walk on the moon. They share in the experience of a total rebirth, a new start and all the joys and sorrows they encounter.

The most annoying portion of this film is not what it had, but what it was missing. The doctors who froze them were never given a second thought, as if they just disappeared. The hospital they visit does not acknowledge any of the signs that they have been frozen in time for three decades. At the end, everyone is too happy to think that 29 years were just wasted. The science aspect is completely neglected and ignored, while it should be a major focus.

The film, while it is predictable and lacking in plot, does have its merits. Its emotional impact was felt throughout the audience, and its humor is heartfelt and funny. "Late For Dinner" makes you laugh and cry, which makes it worth a view. But with all the questions it leaves, one goes away unsatisfied. It may be a good rental, but not worth the price of a theater ticket.

Necessary Roughness

"Necessary Roughness"
Directed by Stan Dragoti
Paramount Pictures

Built in the mode of comedy sports films like "Major League" and "Slapshot," "Necessary Roughness" uses the usual one-liners and cliches to poke fun at college football. The film also uses enough sports heroes for about three movies, plus a Sports Illustrated swimsuit model.

The fighting Armadillos from Texas State University were the national champions three years running, but they are found guilty of numerous NCAA violations. The once illustrious program is given the "death penalty," — no boosters, no scholarships, no favors. An honest coach, Ed Gennero (Hector Elizondo), is hired to bring clean football back to TSU.

He begins by holding student body tryouts, which result in a strange team. There's a 34 yr. old quarterback (Scott Bakula), an astronomy professor (Sinbad), a spoiled rich kid (Jason Bateman), a huge Hawaiian and of course, a gorgeous placekicker (Kathy Ireland).

The credit list could go on forever if you include the cameo appearance by the Texas State Penitentiary team, made up of present and former football heroes and one heavyweight boxing champion (Evander Holyfield).

The fighting Armadillos face great odds just to score a touchdown, no less win a game. They play with only 17 players, reverting back to an "ironman" system of players on offense and defense. It marks a return to true amateurism — a far cry from the semi-professional level many Division I college teams play. Each player plays solely to fulfill their dreams and play for the love of the game.

This film is everything you would expect — funny one-liners, a predictable plot (the team wins the big game), and a ludicrous look at tensions on and off the field. Although it attempts to make a statement against big-time college athletics, its effect is lost among all the performers in its cast. There are no surprises and the audience reacts like any sports crowd. Trying to place each famous face may be as much fun as the movie itself. At least with "Necessary Roughness," the viewer knows exactly what to expect — no cinematic masterpiece, but a few good laughs.

Jamaican Reggae grooves

By E. VAUGHN VOGEL
Assistant Entertainment Editor

It should come as no surprise that a band that hails from Reggae's birthplace should produce a brand of Reggae that retains an authentic identity. Sons of Ace, a reggae band from Jamaica, produces its own vibrant sound, a music that they want to play.

The Ace family, led by its father and four sons, produce a smooth, lovely sound that is not too pulsive, but is still cool. It features Richard Jr. on drums, Franz on keyboard, Ricardo on Bass and Vocals and 13-year-old Craig on lead vocals.

The smooth frontman of the group, Craig, has been compared, on many occasions, to a young Michael Jackson. With whirling dance steps and a vocal magic, Craig's youthfulness adds a unique edge to the band's appeal.

Through four sets over a four-hour period, it is not unusual to hear Sons of Ace performing their own reggae compositions including "Every Dreadlock A No Rasta" (translation: Every dreadlocked person's not a Rastafarian) and "Mash It." Versions of Bob Marley's "One Love" and "Jammin" are also favorites of Sons of Ace.

Sons of Ace can be seen live at the 23 East Cabaret Oct. 4. Doors open at 8 p.m.

Cabaret Flash: The Connells, a band based in Raleigh, N.C., make their way to the 23 East Cabaret Sept. 28, with Mike Connell on guitar, David Connell on bass, Doug MacMillian on lead vocals, George Huntly on keyboards and vocals and Peele Wimberly on drums. Since their union, the Connells have emerged as one of the South's favorite rock bands.

The Connells music possesses a multidimensional and vigorous sound that comes across smooth and well rehearsed. With numerous albums under their belt, and a new one on the way. The Connells are headed only up.

Clancy explores military

By CHRISTINA FRANGOS
Assistant Entertainment Editor

SPOTLIGHT: Tom Clancy has long been a respected man. This respect is something he earned through diligence, accuracy and the uncanny ability to obtain data on current, pressing issues. Clancy's knack of applying this knowledge to works of fiction compels readers to wonder where he finds his connections.

The author, however, claims his information is common knowledge for those scrupulous enough to look. Clancy is well read and bases his data solely on this fact. In the afterward of his most recent novel, The Sum of All Fears, he states, "science is all in the public domain, and allows few secrets."

The Sum of All Fears is the sixth novel Clancy has written, and is sure to please fans of his recurring character, Jack Ryan, the ever-popular deputy director of the CIA. After being personified by Alec Baldwin in the big screen version of "The Hunt For Red October," Ryan seems much more intriguing.

This time around, Ryan is revealed as one of many government agents who sets the standards by which we all live. While the president is at the helm, his advisors are making all the moves for him. From the Vatican to Israel, Ryan must try to spread the word of peace. He depends on contacts from college and new business associates to implement theories for which the president takes full credit.

Clancy has turned Ryan into the ultimate role model in Fears. Realistic and responsible, Jack Ryan embodies the characteristics a man of his position should possess. But in his merits, the weaknesses of others around him (some in higher positions) are exposed. The thought of a new president who can not live up to his responsibilities is frightening.

Beginning as a complicated explanation of hierarchy, Fears unwinds into an intricate saga of terrorism and nuclear crisis. Back again are the naval tactics which Clancy mastered in "Hunt," and the ingenuity and prescience which made "Clear And Present Danger" the best-selling novel of the 1980s.

Tom Clancy has a gift for taking timely information and using it in fictional scenarios so close to the actual incidents that readers could almost swear Clancy knew beforehand. He does not have the covert contacts within the government which popular sources seem to believe. He is simply and exquisitely a talented author and storyteller.

FLASH: Ken Wahl has not been a "Wiseguy" in quite a while. Due to creative difficulties with the show's writer, Stephen J. Cannell, the organized crime expose disappeared, leaving the extremely low key actor with a lot of spare time. Wahl was never a big star, but his efforts on "Wiseguy" were often commended. Fans, however, were either die hard or nonexistent.

Fortunately, television's mafioso hunk is not a Hollywood memory. He is on the road to change his image and his medium. Ken Wahl can be seen in "The Taking of Beverly Hills" in early Octoer as an athlete-gone-crime-fighter out to save Rodeo Drive.

Perhaps the time spent on his own has improved Wahl's attitude toward his profession. Somewhat outspoken on the negative side of television and film, Ken Wahl has never been a press darling and probably never will be. Little does he know, this rebellion is what makes him so appealing as an actor and a sex symbol . . .

SPARKS: Mariah Carey returned to the Arsenio Hall show Monday night to promote her recent release, Emotions. While it was no secret that the singer would not allow Arsenio to interview her, Carey allowed reservations to invade her performance and take away from her incredible gift.

Six back-up singers, two dancers and two costume changes could not save Mariah Carey from detachment. If stage fright is her problem, maybe the singer should avoid television appearances altogether ... Barbra Streisand released a four-CD compilation of mainly unreleased material Tuesday which is sure to please die hard fans. Last month's feature in Vanity Fair sparked talk about her new movie, "Prince of Tides," and this new showcase of hits is sure to spark promotion.

Streisand, famously introverted, has done more publicity stunts this season than she has in the past eight years. The word around is that the new movie, out this Christmas, is Streisand at her best — acting and directing . . .

GNR doubles 'Illusion'

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

ROCK QUARRY

Axl Rose has to be the most arrogant person on the face of this earth. His lyrics spit with hate and pure nastiness. However, when backed with Slash's guitar riffs, it becomes poetry for the demented.

The long awaited and infamous, Use Your Illusion I and II albums have been surrounded by more hype, anticipation and frustration than any other albums in years. The Gunners have spoon fed their fans a song here and a song there making them hungry for the main course. Appetizers such as "Knockin' on Heaven's Door" off the "Days of Thunder" soundtrack, "Civil War" off the Rubyant compilation album and "You Could Be Mine" on the "Terminator 2" soundtrack, nurtured them.

Use Your Illusion I is the dominant one. Its 16-track formulation lives up to its industry buzz. Its easily recognizable that the band has grown apart from their Appetite For Destruction days. Their sound has rounded out with the addition of new comers Dizzy Reed on keyboards and the lower tempo of Matt Sorum's drums.

Centerpieces of the album are tunes such as "The Garden" (featuring Alice Cooper as the Garden Keeper), "Coma" and "Don't Damn Me" feature some of Guns' best work. Meanwhile rockers such as "Back Off Bitch," "Double Talkin' Jive" and "Dust and Bones" (with rhythm guitarist Izzy Stradlin on vocals) push the volume to the hilt in traditional G N'R style.

Blues elements with a strong Stones influence are fully intact as Rose stomps his way through "Bad Obsession" and "Dead Horse." The lyrics read, "Used to be wasted/Always trying to take it/Take it to my veins/I call the doctor/He's just another/Says I'm losing my brain." Put these lines together and they sound like a tape recorded session at Rose's therapist.

Guitarist Slash crashes and burns throughout all of Illusion I, even though their first single, "Don't Cry," is a light weight ballad. "But, the Achilles heel of this dinosaur is its trite version of "Live and Let Die." David Lee Roth once said, "With cover tunes you got to work from the ground up. That way it will become your own." Guns fails to complete this task. Other than Rose's demonic wine on the song's bridge they don't capture the classic like they captured "Knockin'."

Illusion II, although a twin, is nothing like the first. Opening with the familiar, "Civil War" Guns takes a peace angle opposing their destructive reputation. Other familiar tracks such as "Knockin'," "You Could Be Mine" and "Don't Cry" (alt. lyrics, a superior version) just might make Illusion II the more popular of the two. However, I is more intriguing due to its stronger display of Guns refurbished sound.

From the gut rockers such as "Locomotive" and "Pretty Tied Up" satisfy beyond filler material. Ballad "So Fine" is all "Don't Cry" should have been. Although neither reaches the peak of their past hit, "Patience."

The most intriguing lyrics come from "Get in the Ring," the last minute addition (and one of the reasons the album was so delayed). Rose goes head to head with all those who oppose him. He even breaks into a hate rap, "That goes for all of you in the press/Startin' s--t by printing lies/Instead of the things we said." He even goes as far as naming specific people, "That goes for you Andy Secher at Hit Parader/Mick Wall at Kerrang/Circus Magazine/Bob Guccione Jr. at Spin."

Rose's new theme song, "Estranged" is the revelation people have been waiting for, a Guns feature piece. Slash's guitar echoes Carmine Coppola's "Godfather" theme (which he conveniently incorporates in his guitar solo in the live show). But, "Estranged" is essentially Rose's baby. He even personally thanks Slash for the "killer guitar riffs."

Yet another Rose tune reaches the closing of the album featuring a rap/sampling tune entitled, "My World" complete with porno vocal sampling.

The Illusion twins are far more ground breaking than Appetite. The musical stylings are varied as is the songwriting, whereas Appetite was a grab-the-throat straight ahead rock classic much like AC/DC's Back in Black. But, Appetite was much of the same, the Illusions put Guns in a new light and a higher echelon.

SINGLE SPOTLIGHT: The new Def American discovery, the Four Horsemen rip it up with, "Nobody Said It Was Easy," the title track and first single off their intriguing new album.

PEBBLES: John Cougar Mellencamp has finally dropped the "Cougar" and is strictly John Mellencamp. His new album, Whenever We Wanted is due Oct. 8. He will tour starting in January.

recorded it half in Holland and half in New River Studios. It put a different outlook on the record, cause the first album was recorded in Philadelphia. We got a much heavy sound. It's based on our live sound. The album is completely sleazy. We got tunes like, 'Get Your Sh-t Together, 'The Big One' and 'Monkey Business.' The album cover has even got a gorilla swinging on a vine with a barely clothed chick in his arms wearing a leather jacket with 'Screw It,' and we had our album title!"

Many record companies take advantage of young bands like Danger Danger. This is something that could destroy the band's spirit and music. Smith has his own view, "The record company so far has been fantastic. We have total creative control, and they gave us good promotion on the last album. However, we were lucky 'cause our album went gold, plus. You must go gold in order to break even and in order to insure your chances to do a second record. A record costs about $250,000 to make and a decent tour is like $70,000. It's nuts, it's all a 'big game.' For the last album we did every gig on every stage, and did every radio show in the whole country. I didn't sleep for a year. Hopefully this time around I'll be able to breathe (laughs)."

Danger Danger has been in Japan promoting its new material but plans to hit the road in October in sync with the early October release of its new album.

Villanova 1991-1992 Student Season Basketball Ticket Lottery Application

For the second year, Villanova University's student season basketball tickets will be sold by a lottery method, according to Villanova Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto.

The lottery application is available in today's edition of The Villanovan. "There are 1,844 tickets printed for the student section, and with the exception of tickets used by the band and in recruiting, all of those tickets will go into the lottery," said Aceto.

Student season tickets are for sale at $130.00 each. This package includes ten basketball games played on campus at the duPont Pavilion, and all four games scheduled for the Spectrum in Philadelphia.

Students wishing to purchase basketball season tickets must fill out the application in full. A self-addressed, stamped envelope must accompany all orders, and the full application must be returned to the Athletic Ticket Office in the Nevin Field House by Friday, Oct. 11, 1991. The actual lottery process will take place on Friday, Oct. 18. "If the application is not fully filled out, it will be rejected," explained Aceto. "Also, we will only accept one application per student."

All applications from seniors and graduate students will go into one computer file, all applications from juniors into another, and so on. Each class will be treated equally.

Once the applications are entered into a computer, the computer will randomly select the recipients of tickets for the 1991-92 men's basketball season. Notification of selection will come via the applicants' self-addressed envelope. A coupon sent to an applicant will signify that tickets are being held for them; if the applicants' check is returned, they were not selected to receive tickets.

"The tickets themselves will not be mailed out," noted Aceto. "This was done to prevent loss in the mail or theft of the actual tickets. If the applicant receives a coupon in the mail, with their name and social security number on it, they can then redeem it at the ticket office for their season tickets."

Aceto further explained that those selected in the lottery can pick up their tickets at their leisure, but must present a valid Villanova identification card and their coupon in order to received their tickets.

Also on the application form this year is a section for membership in the Villanova Basketball Club. According to Villanova's Director of Student Activities, Lucy Gorski, "The Basketball Club provides transportation for the members to the off-campus games, has handouts and promotional items that are given out before each game, and arranges transportation and tickets to other away games that are not a part of the regular season ticket package."

Students wishing to join the Basketball Club are asked to note that on the application, and add an additional $15. to their check.

Volleyball takes second

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Staff Reporter

The women's volleyball team posted a 3-1 record last weekend at the Jefferson Cup Tournament held at the University of Virginia. In the process, they improved their overall mark to 10-2.

The Wildcats opened the tournament with a loss to Virginia (14-16, 2-15, 7-15). Coach David Barkley gave credit to the victors for their outstanding play, saying that the Cavaliers were "hitting on all cylinders."

While he was not pleased with the defeat, Barkley did like the way the Cats rebounded from the loss. He stated, "I was impressed with the way we were able to respond to it just a few hours later, come back on the court, and beat George Mason in three [games]. We did a very good job of adjusting mentally, coming on the court, and playing hard."

After impressively defeating a tough George Mason squad (15-7, 15-4, 15-7), 'Nova went on to beat Virginia Tech (15-6, 15-8, 12-15, 17-16) in a highly competitive match. The Cats closed out the tournament by defeating Liberty (15-4, 15-7, 15-6).

Pam Clifford and Vicky Dispenza received All-Tournament honors for their exemplary play.

Barkley highlighted the efforts of mid-hitter Tracy Treahy and right-hitter Maria Perparos. Against Liberty, Treahy had what Barkley described as an "excellent, excellent match." He also praised Perparos for her solid overall play. "Her offense was very good. Her passing and defense was good as well," Barkley said.

Barkley cited the importance of having several different players step up and make key contributions. "If for no other reason," Barkley explained, "it makes the competition that much tougher. It makes the depth that much better."

In terms of depth, the team's fine group of freshmen has done much to strengthen the squad. Barkley said the five freshmen (Maria Austrins, Amy Burke, Molly Gorman, Amy Lam, and Amy Steigerwald) all "have added either depth or starting positions to the team." He later added, "What's happened now is that our eleventh player is probably as good as our fourth or fifth player was my first year here. It has increased my expectations of what it takes to be on this team."

> Our eleventh player is probably as good as our fourth or fifth player when I first got here.
> David Barkley

When asked what kind of impact the freshmen have had, Barkley responded that they have positively affected the attitude and overall talent of the team. "Mentally and attitude wise, they are a very strong freshmen class," Barkley said. "Because they're all competitors and they all work hard, they're all adjusting quite well to Division I volleyball."

One of the reasons the freshmen have made such a smooth transition is assistant coach Donna Milano. Barkley is very appreciative of what Milano has added to the team in terms of leadership and knowledge of the game.

Captains Dispenza and Jennifer Neville are also responsible for the team's success. Neville sees her role as being a leader and helping the team to build momentum. She says that to be a good leader, one must "be able to be a friend as well as a teammate."

Dispenza views her position as one of leading by example. Leadership to her involves maturity and responsibility. When asked what her goals are as a captain, she replied, "To get our team to the Big East (finals)."

That quest begins tonight at the Jake Nevin Field House where the Cats will host Georgetown in its Big East opener.

Barkley stated that he feels good heading into the contest. "It's one of those matches that, on paper, Georgetown will be favored. But they're coming on our court and our players have the confidence that they can take them."

Football Preview

VILLANOVA VS. CONNECTICUT

Date: Tomorrow
Time: 1:30 p.m.
Place: Villanova Stadium

The 13th-ranked Wildcats finally return home after three straight games on the road, to face a UConn squad looking for its first win. 'Nova comes home on the heels of three blowout wins and are hoping to bring the same intensity home.

The Cats are currently dominating their opponents on both sides of the ball. They lead the Yankee Conference in both total offense (494 yards per game) and total defense (161.3 yards per game). In other words, they cannot play much better.

On the other hand, UConn badly needs a win any way it can get it. The 0-3 Huskies lost a close game against conference power New Hampshire Sept. 14, and have not yet recovered. A major factor in their losing record is that the defense is giving up an average of 450 yards per game, dead last in the Yankee. That has to improve if UConn wants to win.

At first glance, this looks like a possible blowout win for the Cats. But keep in mind that in recent years this game has always been close. 'Nova lost last year to the Huskies 24-22, and in the series the largest margin of victory has been nine points.

Nevertheless, the Cats are loaded. They are so strong defensively that the only way UConn can win is in a low-scoring affair. The offense, led by quarterback Tommy Colombo, will be looking forward to pick apart thge weak Huskies defense and should be able to.

PREDICTION: Villanova 31, Connecticut 13

have outscored their three opponents by a combined score of 123-10.

The ground attack, however, was not neglected as 'Nova running back Pat Kennedy (16 carries, 49 yards) found the end zone twice in the first half with 2 and 1-yard TD runs. The senior has a knack for making it across the goal line and already has seven TD's this year to lead the conference. Offensively, Talley is setting up the run by first establishing the pass and forcing teams to respect Colombo's passing ability. Richmond is a perfect example of a team that played to stop the run and, sure enough, 'Nova made them pay for it.

Tight end Scott Donald also scored twice including the first one which was on a 4th and 1 from the 8-yard line. Colombo rolled out and found a wide-open Donald crossing the goal line to put the game out of reach at 27-3.

After three road games, the Cats will finally play their home opener against Connecticut. And it is about time according to Talley. "It's been a long haul and finally we're coming home. We beat three young, rebuilding teams that we should have beat," said Talley.

The Huskies come in at 0-3 but it is deceiving. They lost to New Hampshire, the league's preseason number 1, 21-16 and have the conference's top rated passing offense so the Cats are not taking them lightly. "Connecticut is an outstanding football team that throws the ball a lot," said Talley. "They are extremely dangerous and really should test us."

Notes: The game consisted of 25 penalties, 13 of which were committed by the Cats. "This was the worst officiated game in North America," said Talley. "They wouldn't let either team play. I think that must be the record for the number of penalties in a single game." ... Senior flanker Scott Thompson had 123 yards receiving, the second time in three weeks that he has exceeded 100 yards receiving ... Defensive tackle Willie Oshodin was named Defensive Player of the Week for his efforts against Richmond. The senior had six tackles and recorded two sacks ... Tomorrow is finally 'Nova's first home game at Villanova Stadium. Game time is 1:30 p.m. and there are tickets still available. Coach Talley is hoping for large crowd so come on out as the Cats look to move into the Top 10 in Division 1-AA.

Home not kind to field hockey

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

The Wildcat field hockey team returned to the friendly confines of Villanova Stadium last weekend after a 1-1-1 road trip.

The stickwomen had high hopes of improving their record with back-to-back home games against Ohio State and Providence College. However, the homestead ended up setting 'Nova back two losses. After losing a 1-0 heartbreaker to the Buckeyes, Villanova was crushed the following day by the Lady Friars, 6-1.

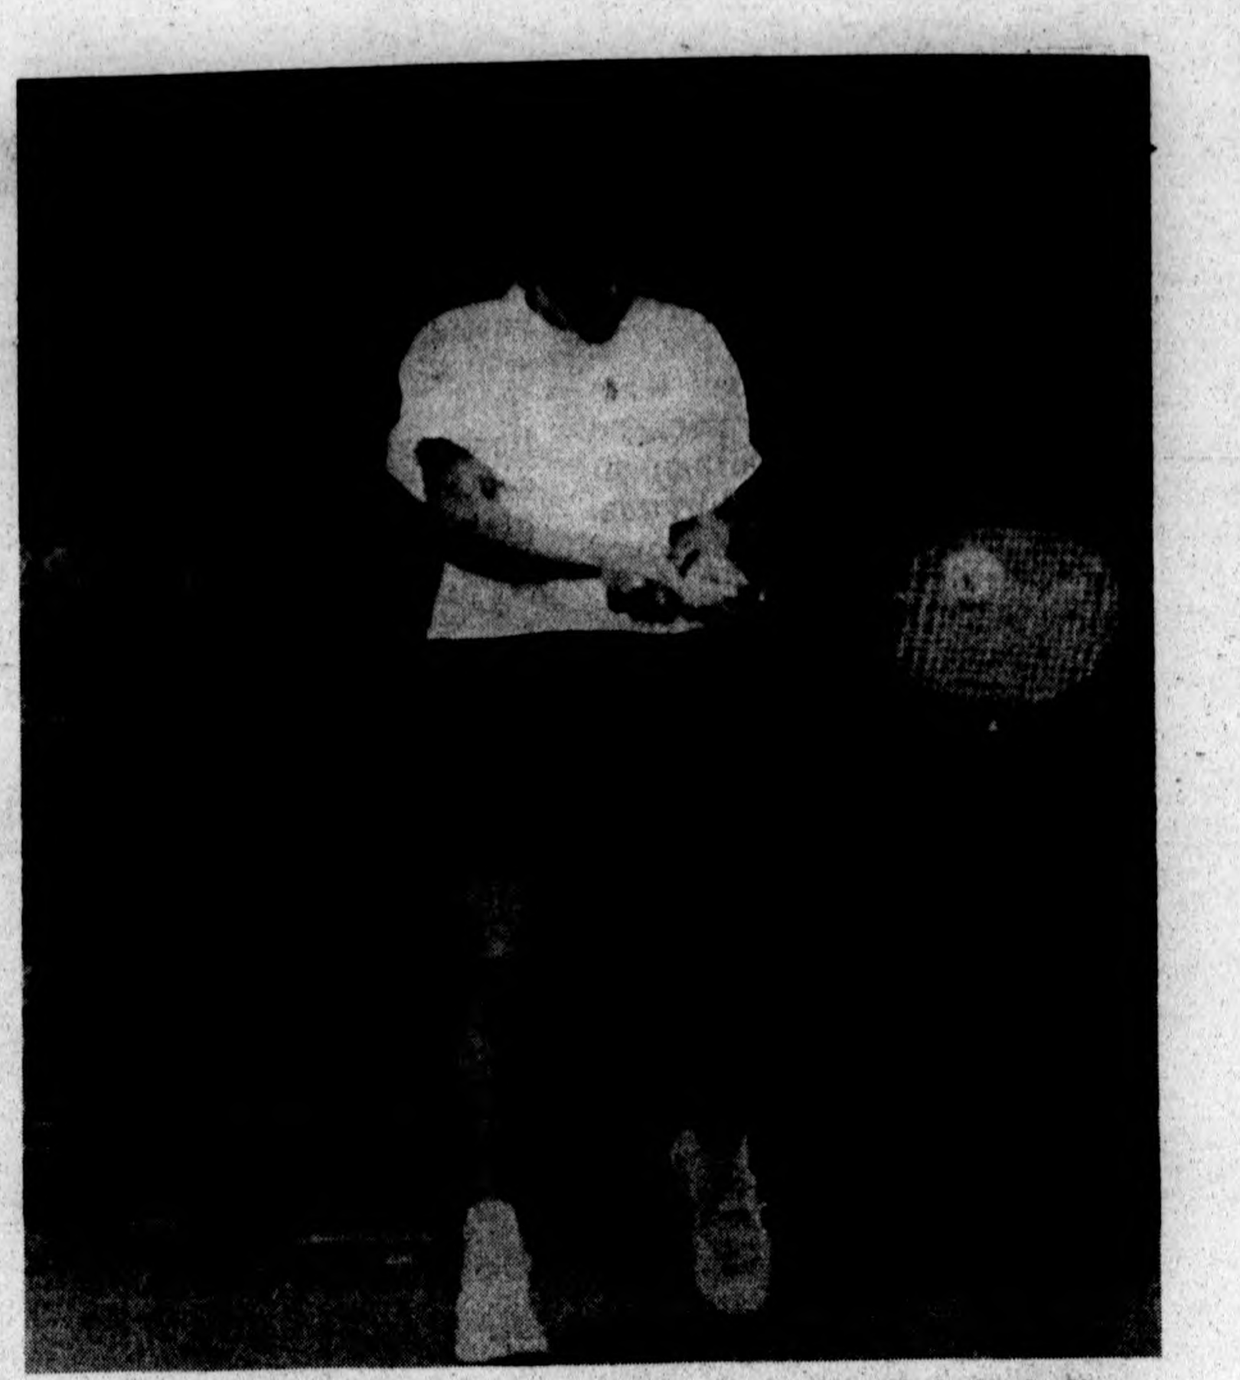
Villanova looked dominant throughout Saturday's Ohio State contest. Throughout the season, the Wildcats have grown accustomed to the support of their ferocious defensive line. This game was no exception, as Marianne Connelly led the way with a powerful first half effort. Throughout the period, Connelly was breaking up Buckeye drives with diving plays and nonstop hustle. Fellow defensewoman Kate McKee also pitched in with a crucial stop of an OSU fast break.

On offense, 'Nova also kept constant pressure on its midwestern guests. Halfway through the first half, midfielder Krista Saponara drilled a rocket at the Buckeye goal, which was somehow deflected from doing any harm to Ohio State.

The second half brought more of the same, presenting the Cats with scoring opportunities which they were unable to capitalize. With less than a minute to go, the game looked as though it was going to head into overtime. The Buckeyes, however, had different ideas. With 0:40 left on the clock, Ohio State snuck a corner hit into the 'Nova pipes to win the game 1-0.

For the first half of Sunday's game, Villanova played the Lady Friars of Providence neck-and-neck. Captain Missy Paolantonio broke the team's three-game-old scoring drought with a goal at 15:08 of the period. At halftime, the Wildcats were hanging tough with Providence leading 2-1. P.C. broke away in the second half, though, scoring three goals in less than 13 minutes. The Friars then added a sixth goal on a penalty stroke. The 6-1 loss brought Villanova's record down to 1-3-1 (0-2 conference).

Following the disappointing weekend, Coach Jackie Gerzabek still felt some optimism regarding the upcoming weeks. "I think this was the lowest point we can possibly get, and I think we're going to turn it around and come on strong near the end. Just one game at a time, starting Tuesday against Drexel."



The women's tennis team improved its record to 6-2, including a tournament win.

Tennis wins tourney

The women's tennis team pushed its 1991 record to 6-2 with three straight wins this past week, plus a victory in the PAIAW tournament, played at the St. Mary's Courts Sept. 22.

The Wildcats opened the week with a 9-0 win over Concordia College. 'Nova won four of the six singles matches in 6-0, 6-0 sets, including a win at number-three singles by Kerry Amen and number-four singles by Krista Chamberlain.

The Cats defeated Monmouth Sept. 24 on the Hawks home courts, 9-0. Amen and Chamberlain once again won in straight, 6-0, 6-0 sets and Amen and Michelle Bush swept an 8-0 pro set at number-two doubles.

The Wildcats won their third consecutive match Sept. 25 as they defeated rival Temple on the Owls' home courts, 5-3 in a darkness-shortened match. Carolyn Daley won 6-2, 6-2 at No. 1 singles and Amen and Bush combined for a 6-3, 3-6 and 6-4 win at No. 2 doubles to clinch the win. Amen and Bush were down 4-1 in the final set before rallying for the win.

Villanova won all five flights as they won the PAIAW Tournament at the St. Mary's Courts. Daley, Kelly, Barnes and Chamberlain won the singles play and the teams of Amen and Bush and Julie Homicz and Amy Santaniello claimed the match for the Cats. Villanova won the team title with 25 points, followed by Drexel and West Chester with 16, St. Joseph's with 11 points and La Salle with seven points.

Golf plays Yale

By PETER MORRICE
Staff Reporter

The Villanova golf team traveled to Yale University Golf Course this past weekend to compete in the 32nd annual Yale Fall Intercollegiate.

The tournament, formerly a three-day event, was reduced this year to two days to conform to new NCAA guidelines. The field played 27 holes a day instead of 18 to maintain the tournament's traditional 54-hole arrangement.

"The new format made it tough because it was a big field and we were being rushed to finish 27 holes each day," said junior Chris Cox.

The demanding Yale course is commonly ranked as one of the Top 100 golf courses in the world. It has hosted a number of prestigious competitions, including a Ben Hogan Tour event this summer.

This year the tournament attracted 24 teams from as far west as the University of Mississippi and as far south as the University of Miami. Villanova was one of five Big East schools represented, along with St. Johns, Providence, Boston College, and Miami.

Sophomore Jason Cordes carded the low round for the Wildcats with a 76, followed by Peter Morrice (77), Rob Booth (81), Chris Cox (83) and Jon Kelly (83). Villanova's three-round total of 985 placed them in the lower half of the field.

"The course was very challenging and the conditions were difficult, but we just didn't play up to our potential," said freshman Jon Kelly.

This weekend the team will travel to the Tournament Players Club at Avenel in Potomac, Md., to defend its Big East title.

Cross country takes Invite

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

The women's cross country team, ranked No. 1 in the nation for the past three years, continued its dominance of the sport with a convincing win at the William and Mary Invitational Sept. 21. The Wildcats, paced by individual winner and 1990 National Cross Country Champion Sonia O'Sullivan, placed eight of the top ten runners in the event as they outdistanced its nearest competitor. William and Mary, 16-66.

The top four runners, all Villanovans, finished within 12 seconds of each other as the Cats displayed their quality depth against a strong field which included the host team Edinboro (94 points, third), Cortland State (114, fourth) and Virginia Commonwealth (123, fifth).

Head Coach Marty Stern was pleased with his team's performance and said the Cat runners felt a sense of obligation to uphold their reputation as the dominant team in collegiate Cross Country.

"Every week represents a chance to continue a streak we are very proud of," Stern said. "We haven't lost in three years, and we've been number one for that time, so we just want to go out and represent the Villanova students and alumni every weekend."

"Our juniors and seniors have not experienced a loss in college and we just want that to continue."

O'Sullivan, who rested last week along with teammates Nnenna Lynch and Carole Zajac, returned to the track impressively as she covered the two-and-a-half mile course at Williamsburg, Va., in a time of 13:28. Fellow Cats Zajac (13:34), Carole Haux (13:38) and Lynch (13:40) finished second, third and fourth respectively.

Also finishing in the Top 10 for 'Nova were Cheri Goddard (14:01, sixth), Chris Gentile (14:06, seventh), Michelle Torelli (14:22, ninth) and Becky Spies (14:24, tenth). Irene Ruopoli (14:39, 13th) and Emer Molloy (15:10, 26th) also ran for 'Nova.

While the season is still young, Stern realizes his squad is the team to beat and is quite possibly his most talented.

"It's not as difficult to maintain our focus as people think," Stern said. "We realize there are sacrifices to make and we're willing to do it. We can't be busy looking over our shoulder to see our competition. If we just avoid distractions and stay focused we'll be fine.

"We have very good depth and the reason for that is we concentrate on recruiting middle distance runners. Other schools may look for sprinters, but we concentrate on maintaining the Villanova tradition of cross country runners."

Stern has come to trust talents of upperclassmen such as O'Sullivan, Zajac and Lynch, but he also sees a bright future for Spies, a freshman from California who was the national high school champion in the 1500m outdoor and 800m indoor events.

"Becky is our number-eight runner and is doing very well for a freshman," Stern said.

The Cats have two weeks off from competition before returning to action at the Paul Shore Invitational at Lehigh University Oct. 13.

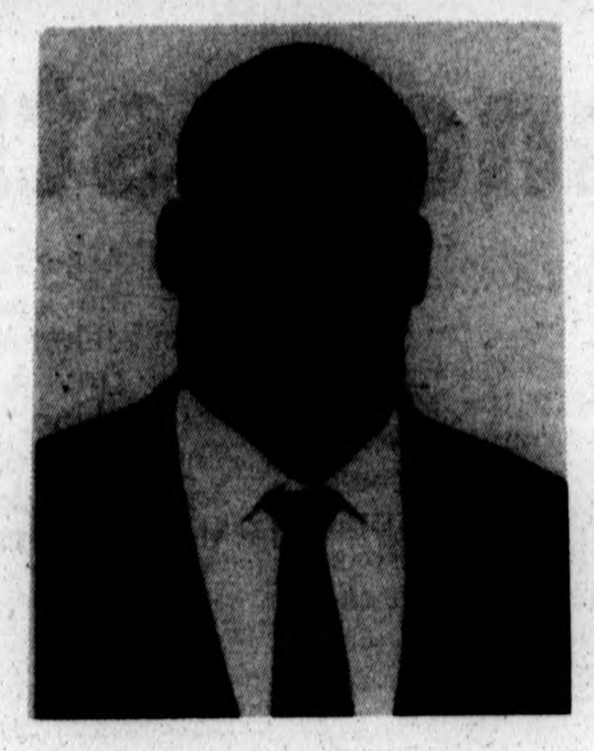
Athlete of the Week



This week's Villanovan Athlete of the Week is defensive tackle Willie Oshodin. Oshodin recorded six unassisted and two team tackles for the Wildcats in their 35-3 win over the Richmond Spiders. The down lineman also had one tackle for a loss and two sacks which totaled 17 yards in losses. For his play, Oshodin was named the Yankee Conference Defensive Player of the Week.

Water polo starts well

By TOM COLLINS

The water polo team began its 1991 season in impressive fashion as it reeled off a 3-1 record at the Eastern Water Polo Association Tournament held at Annapolis, Md., Sept. 21-22.

In their first game Sept. 21, the Cats struggled against Washington and Lee, who scored early and never let 'Nova into the game. Kevin Engstrom scored two goals for the Cats, who lost 14-5.

The Cats played later the same day against Quenns College and came out on the winners side this time. Led by Mark Vertosky and Paul Cera, each of whom scored four goals, 'Nova came away with a convincing 14-5 win. Engstrom again played well, scoring three goals. Goalie Jeff Bodle recorded the win for the Cats.

In yet another game the same day, the Wildcats' offense exploded against overmatched Johns Hopkins, jumping to a 12-3 halftime lead. The final score was 20-7 with Jim Floerchinger leading the way with five goals.

The Cats also defeated MIT, 14-9.

Villanova returns to action at home this week, facing St. Francis tonight and George Washington tomorrow. Both games will be played at duPont pool.

Men's soccer drops two

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

After getting off to a 3-0 start, the Villanova men's soccer team cooled off a bit, dropping a pair of tough contests last week. The Cats lost 5-1 to Drexel in a Philadelphia Soccer 7 matchup, then fell to the Eagles of Boston College 3-1 in overtime.

Villanova's defense struggled in surrendering five goals to Drexel before senior Rich Maue, assisted by Scott Aimetti, put the Cats on the board with a goal with 21:45 left in the game. Junior goalie Mike Guarino stopped six Drexel shots in a losing effort for the Cats (3-2, 1-1 in the Big East).

Seeking to bounce back from that defeat, the Cats took on Boston College in a Saturday afternoon matchup at Villanova Stadium. The Wildcats jumped on an early 1-0 lead when sophomore Joe Roy scored his fifth goal of the year on an assist from Tim Gannon at the 36:14 mark of the first half. The Cats held on to that slim lead until Boston College scored the tying goal with 4:02 left in regulation, sending the game into overtime. Boston College came through in the overtime period, scoring two more goals to ensure a 3-1 come-from-behind victory.

After hosting the Temple Owls in a Philadelphia Soccer 7 matchup, the Cats will travel to Big-East-rival Syracuse University Saturday afternoon to take on the Orangemen.

Runners stride into nation's elite

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

William and Mary, the nation's 13th-ranked cross-country team, became the first of what could turn out to be a few upset victims of the Villanova men's cross-country team this season, as the Wildcats beat the Tribe at the Sept. 21 William and Mary Invitational in Williamsburg, VA.

Not only did Villanova's win come as a surprise to W & M, last year's NCAA Region Champions, but it came right on the host team's course

Head Coach Marty Stern was not entirely surprised by the Wildcats first place finish.

"I suspected that we would have a good meet," said Stern, "and we certainly did. I'm pleased with the entire team. Everyone is where they should be."

From the start of the 4.1-mile race, Wildcat junior Terrence Mahon was right where he usually is, at the front. Mahon moved to the lead within the first half mile and never looked back, winning his second consecutive meet in 19 minutes, 42 seconds.

Behind Mahon, freshman Louie Quintana made a strong surge on a hill half a mile from the finish, enabling him to drop William and Mary's Kevin Krause. Quintana kept his momentum over the hill and to the finish, placing 26 seconds behind Mahon in second. Krause finished third, three seconds behind.

What followed this fight for second place was the real battle for the meet victory. Before 'Nova could cross another runner through the finish, William and Mary placed Jeff Hough, Steve Swift and Brian Hyde in sixth, eighth and ninth, respectively.

> I suspected that we would have a good meet and we certainly did.
> Head Coach Marty Stern

Twenty seconds back, W & M had two more men closing in on the finish. However, Dave Hartman, sophomore Mike Going, and senior Tim Pollis. All three Villanovans held their places, holding off the two W & M runners in pursuit to grab 10th, 11th and 12th and secure the Wildcat victory.

The margin of victory was very close, 36-39 in favor of the Cats, and this is a meet in which 3rd-place Edinboro (last year's NCAA Division II champions) totaled 97 and fourth place Georgetown finished with 116.

For Nova's fifth man, Pollis, the situation was equally tight. If he had run only 6 seconds slower, it would have ben the host team taking the win.

"Once again, Tim Pollis fought it out with William and Mary's fifth man," said Stern, "and the four in front of him performed very well. Right now we're looking for some more help from our sixth and seventh people, but I think we have a good team."

Sixth through ninth men for Villanova finished within a 26-second span. In 18th overall was junior Chris McDermott, followed by freshman Kyle Watson in 21st, junior Jim Meszaros in 28th and freshman Ken Nason in 32nd.

A half a minute behind that group, senior Finn Kelly took 49th, while behind him freshman David Seung ran 59th and senior Darren McCormack placed 67th.

(COURTESY OF SPORTS INFORMATION)

Finn Kelly and the cross country team won the William and Mary Invitational, its second win of the year. The Cats are ranked 22nd in the country.

Having beaten Old Dominion, Cortlandt State, Virginia Commonwealth and James Madison in the meet as well, 'Nova now ups its record against invitational opponents to 13-0.

More importantly, the Wildcats win has them destined to move up in the national rankings. After entering the season unranked, the Cats moved into 22nd after their win at the Fordham Invitational. Now the defeat of No. 13 William and Mary had Villanova sights set higher in the poll.

It will be two weeks before another chance at a strong showing for the Cats. They travel to Lehigh University for the Oct. 13 Paul Short Invitational.

Women split; move to 4-3

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Staff Reporter

In the midst of its longest homestead of the year, the women's soccer team raised its season record to 4-3 after splitting two games this past week. In the lopsided affair, the Cats trounced the University of Pensylvania 4-0 before dropping a heartbreaker to Providence College, 1-0.

The Wildcats extended their winning streak to four games behind an offensive attack that kept UPenn backed up in its own end all afternoon. Despite numerous opportunities, the team was denied a score by UPenn until 39:55 into the first period when junior Sandy Ross created a pernalty kick chance. Senior Betsy Clement capitalized by beating the UPenn keeper for the game's first score.

"Our kids didn't come to play in the first half and they (UPenn) came out aggressive. Our substitutes really responded well when they were given the chance," said head coach Don Paxson of his team's inability to post more goals.

In the second period, the Cats pounced on UPenn as the offense produced 29 shots at the Quaker net. Freshman Megan Hughes initiated the assault by assisting Tina Conti on her third goal of the '91 campaign. 74:52 into the match, Nikki Thelen drilled a direct kick into the UPenn net which gave 'Nova a comfortable 3-0 lead. Minutes later, Rachel Moreau set up Eileen McCarthy for her first collegiate score. Keeper Karen Del Sarto was called upon to make only three saves as the team rolled to its fourth straight shutout 4-0.

The Cats encountered the Friars from Providence College Sept. 21. In a tightly contested match, 'Nova led in corner kicks, seven to one. In spite of these advantages, the Friars touched 'Nova for the only score 14:57 into the match off a direct kick that beat Del Sarto. The score gave Providence College all the offense it needed to half the Cats' four game winning streak, 1-0.

The women's soccer team concludes its homestead against the University of Maryland before traveling to Colgate University over the weekend to confront Buffalo State University Saturday, Sept. 28 and the Red Raiders Sunday, Sept. 29.

'Nova defense strong, but looks to get better

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

For the Villanova defense, the fun is just beginning. Three games into the 1991 season, the Cats have dominated the opposition, giving up only ten total points, while leading Division 1-AA is statistical defense. The unit, comprised of only two seniors, appears strong in every area.

The run defense, spearheaded by linebacker Curtis Eller and defensive lineman Willie Oshodin, has given up only 185 yards in the three games, an average of 61.7 yards per game. Even more impressive is the 1.6 average yards per rush. Defensive Coordinator Dan MacNeill attributes the success to the chemistry and work ethic of the defense.

"We have a good mix of players," MacNeill said. "But more importantly we have a group of guys that play well together, trust each other and have good chemistry."

With the cohesion and understanding between the players, confidence and expectations are high on the unit. Also, the players have been more physical this year and have dominated the line of scrimmage.

Coming into the year, the coaching staff was concerned with the outside linebacking positions. Due to the loss of seniors Rich Sernyak and Damon Green, two players key to 'Nova's rise into Yankee Conference and Division 1-AA prominence, the position was left inexperienced and young, but not without talent. Junior Dan Summers and redshirt freshman Andy Cobaugh have come to the forefront and provided different dimensions to the defense.

"Outside linebacking was certainly a concer," MacNeill said. "But those concerns have dissipated. We have a good mix of strengths at the position."

Summers, a 6-foot-5, 225-pound junior from Drexel Hill gives the team strength against the run. He has 18 tackles, tied for third on the team, and two quarterback sacks.

Cobaugh, who played high school ball at St. Joseph's Prep in Philadelphia, has great quickness and pass rushing ability. He is tied for second on the team with 20 stops and three sacks.

"Summers provides more strength at the position than we've had in the past," MacNeill said. "He's physical, picks up his assignments and is solid."

"Andy adds a different dimension than we've had in the past. We've never had as good an athlete at the position. He can singlehandedly destroy a gameplan with his pass-rushing ability. He'll just get better and better as they year progresses."

The pass defense has also been solid due to the experienced secondary and a pass rush which already has 13 sacks. Senior Kevin Long is the leader, while Orin Solomon also provides all-star play.

"Kevin Long is just a solid football player," MacNeill said. "He's a leader, and he knows the defense as well as our coaches."

While the early success has displayed the potential of the unit, MacNeill says it must step it up to another level as the schedule toughens.

"It has to get better," MacNeill said. "If we want to get to where we want to be we have to improve. Our schedule demands its."

Langran campaign hits South Campus

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

Professor Robert Langran of the political science department is running for a position on the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners. He spoke to students in Stanford Hall, Oct. 2 at 8 p.m., where he encouraged South Campus students to register to vote in the Nov. 5 election.

"I will try to help settle problems existing between the University and the community," Langran said. "This is my 33rd year teaching, so I know the University's point of view," he added.

Langran is the coach of both the women's and men's tennis teams. He also is the faculty advisor for the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity on campus. "I carry the Villanova University perspective in most everything that I do," he said.

Langran has lived in Radnor Township for 32 years. "People in this township get antagonized ... I understand the problems, parking problems and noise in general," he said, adding that he has a "two-fold perspective to help alleviate the problems."

"I owe the election to the students because of sheer numbers," Langran said. There are 1,434 students on South Campus, which is the seventh ward, or voting district, in Radnor Township.

The ratio of Republicans to Democrats is three to one, Langran said. "My opponent will get his troops out. The only way to counteract those numbers is to get Villanova students to vote," he added.

Six members of the Board of Commissioners are Republicans, and the one Democrat is not running for re-election. Langran is running on the Democratic ticket because "I hate it when one party dominates ... the board starts to get jaded," he said.

Need for financial aid increases as tuitions rise

By FRANK MORGAN
Staff Reporter

The University acknowledged the growing need for financial aid by budgeting $11,761,440 to help struggling students, an increase of 21.4 percent over the 1990-91 fiscal year.

According to the Financial Aid office, for the award year 1991-92, approximately 47 percent of all undergraduate day students applied for financial aid.

In order to make students aware of the financial aid available, George Walter, director of Financial Aid, began a policy of sending postcards to all resident and off-campus students to notify them of application deadlines and where applications could be obtained. Prior to this system of sending notification through the mail, deadlines were announced through word of mouth and newspaper advertising, Walter added.

The effort has resulted in fewer missed deadlines and as a result, the Financial Aid office will increase its efforts by announcing the deadline dates in the parents' newsletter, Parents Connection, Walter said.

The Rev. William McGuire, O.S.A., dean of Enrollment Management, said there is a "continuing commitment to meet need in order to continue to attract the same quality students as always."

To continue to attract high caliber students the University has initiated two new programs based on merit alone, Walter said.

Pulitzer Prize nominee discusses ordeal in Iran

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
Assistant News Editor

Betty Mahmoody, whose book "Not Without My Daughter" was nominated for a Pulitzer Prize, discussed her ordeal in Iran on Oct. 1 in the Connelly Center.

A consultant for the U.S. State Department on the subject of international kidnapping, Mahmoody recounted her two-year domestic captivity in Iran with her 4-year-old daughter Mahtob.

In 1984, Mahmoody traveled to Iran with her husband, a man who had rededicated himself to the Shiite Moslem faith, and their daughter to visit his relatives in Tehran. After two weeks passed, he refused to let them return to the United States.

"Like many of you I was comfortable in my own little corner of the world in 1984 when my husband told me we were going to Iran. I didn't want to go," said Mahmoody. "But he didn't give me a choice."

Mahmoody told of the "culture shock" that she experienced upon her arrival in the country. The streets were lined with armed military police and the language was foreign, she said.

"I couldn't read, write, speak or understand anything. I learned there [Iran] what it was like to be illiterate and a foreigner," Mahmoody added.

After a week, Mahmoody was given a translator and interrogated by the family to tell everything she knew about then President Ronald Reagan and other political issues. Iran was truly a country that despised Americans, Mahmoody said.

"My two-week culture shock vacation turned into a nightmare before we were to leave, when my husband told me that we would never return to the United States," she said.

For 18 months, Mahmoody lived in fear of her husband and his family while she was kept in their house as a virtual prisoner.

Since there was no U.S. Embassy in Tehran, Mahmoody ran away one night and fled to the Swiss Embassy, where she appealed for help. Officials at the embassy told Mahmoody that since she married a citizen of another country, she was a dual-national and could not leave the country without "written permission" from her husband.

Tensions flare at Arab-Jewish forum

By PETER MOLINEAUX
Staff Reporter

The conflict between members of the Arab and Islamic Studies department and the Jewish community culminated at a B'nai B'rith-sponsored forum Oct. 1 at the Guest Quarters Hotel in West Chester, Pa.

B'nai B'rith, a national Jewish anti-defamation league, invited Dr. Sayed Omran, professor of Arabic, and Dr. Thomas Ricks, director of International Studies, to present their views concerning the imminent Middle Eastern peace conference in an open forum.

In the past, the Arab and Islamic studies department has come under close scrutiny by local and national Jewish groups for the manner in which Middle Eastern panel discussions have been presented. These open forums have been frequently plagued by outbursts of criticism by members of certain Jewish organizations in the audience.

Omran and Ricks received a chaotic welcoming at the forum after Joseph Puder, radio talk show host of a Middle Eastern program entitled "The American Mideast Forum" and executive director of the American Forum for Jewish-Christian Cooperation, failed to arrive on time to represent the Israeli perspective.

The strife during the meeting occurred between members of B'nai B'rith and outside attendees from surrounding Jewish communities. The controversy dealt with regulations concerning the prohibition of a one-sided forum. After rigorous debate, the dispute was settled when a proxy was chosen for Puder to convey the Israeli viewpoint on the Middle Eastern question until his arrival.

"I think it is extremely important for each of the Arab and

On Sept. 22, yet another cease fire was called by the opposing sides in Yugoslavia's civil war despite ongoing reports of scattered violence around Croatia.

Earlier, General Veljko Kadijevic, the federal defense minister, agreed to an "absolute and mutual cease fire" just one day after he had turned down an appeal from the Croatian government for an end to the fighting. Croatian President Franjo Tudjman, in return, ordered a stop to all offensive actions and told Croatian authorities to immediately restore electricity, water, food and medicine to the dozens of army barracks under siege around Croatia.

It was the first time that Croatian and federal forces had agreed directly to a "cessation of hostilities." Earlier cease-fires had been negotiated under pressure from European community representatives. The two sides have begun negotiations on other outstanding issues.

Washington, D.C.

Robert M. Gates, President Bush's nominee for Director of Central Intelligence, will be asked to reveal all he knows about the Central Intelligence Agency's (CIA) covert dealings with Iraq and Saddam Hussein during Iraq's eight-year war with Iran.

Senator Bill Bradley (D-N.J.) is trying hard to reveal the CIA's Iraqi connection which may have been in violation of laws governing the CIA's covert operations. Although he cannot pose his question to Gates in public, it is very likely that Bradley will confront Gates with this issue during his confirmation hearings.

According to Gates, the CIA had a "liaison relationship" with Iraqi intelligence. The CIA allegedly shared information, including military secrets, with Hussein's spy service as well as provided spy-satellite photographs and battlefield reports to aid Hussein's army in fighting Iran. This issue and his knowledge thereof could prove to be a major obstacle for Gates in his winning the Senate Intelligence Committee's approval.

Deer Lodge, Montana

A state prison disturbance occurred at the Montana State Prison Sept. 23. Four hours after inmates there took over the maximum security prison, a tactical unit was brought in to clear up the disturbance. Its members fired tear gas and one gunshot, which did not strike anyone.

Upon entering the prison, five inmates were found dead, apparently killed by other inmates. Five guards held hostage during the four-hour ordeal were freed unharmed. Warden Jack McCormick said that the cause of the inmates' deaths was not immediately known, but no weapons were found on the cell block. He did say that other inmates were seen and heard beating other inmates. It has not been determined how the prisoners overpowered the others, McCormick added.

Washington, D.C.

On Sept. 23, the standoff between the United States and Iraq intensified as Baghdad temporarily detained a team of inspectors sent by the United Nations. This action prompted President Bush to warn that he "will not compromise" in forcing Iraq to accede to U.N. cease-fire terms.

This declaration followed the prevention of the removal of documents by U.N. inspectors by officials in Baghdad. The U.N. inspectors claim that the documents contain evidence of an Iraqi nuclear weapons program. This defiant act on the part of Iraq sharply increased the possibility that the President would make good on his threat to use military force to make Iraq keep its cease-fire pledge to let U.N. inspectors search for any hidden "weapons of mass destruction."

New task force formed to focus on AIDS awareness

By CHRISTY WALKER
Advertising editor

The University has implemented a task force addressing the issue of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) on campus, said Gary Bonas, associate director of Student Activities. Bonas chairs the committee, comprised of three faculty members and three undergraduate students.

The task force has been designed to heighten the level of education among students so that they make "responsible decisions." The task force will adjourn in a few weeks to create a plan and an agenda to implement this goal, said Bonas.

"At Villanova University as many as 195 students are HIV [Human Imuno Deficiency Virus] positive," said Bonas.

"The University was presently without a task force, after a previous one dissipated a few years ago. However, currently the University does have a written policy on AIDS, Bonas added.

"The policy deals with every individual case differently, based on individual needs; it is a humanistic Christian document," said Bonas. The board of trustees accepted the policy in 1986. But, other than this policy and the new task force there are apparently no regularly organized programs to address the AIDS issue.

In 1985, Dr. Richard Neville, vice president for Student Life, instructed the Committee of Student Life to establish a task force on AIDS. During the next two years it was established; however, there was no student representation. The members of the task force were the Rev. Robert Martin. O.S.A., chairman, Christine Lysionek, the then assistant to the dean of Students, Bonas and Dr. Phil Greiner, the faculty representative from the School of Nursing.

The purpose of the initial task force focused primarily on education. However, by 1988 the task force began to "fizzle out," said Bonas. "Nobody consciously decided to do away with the task force, the market was saturated, those who came to lecture knew the information and ceased to continue coming," said Jeaneen Reily, coordinator of peace and justice education.

Reily believed education was "the key." Yet studies, such as those done by communication arts professors Dr. Cheryl Perlmutter Bowen and Dr. Paula Michal-Johnson, "have shown that it is not well understood whether the increaed awareness of AIDS fostered by the media and educational campaigns had changed the way people relate in their intimate relationships."

At Villanova University as many as 195 students are HIV [Human Imuno deficiency Virus] positive.

Gary Bonus, director of Student Activities

According to their studies, students primarily use denial when dealilng with AIDS. They tend to deny that their actions may have dire consequences and therefore do not take responsibility for their sexual behaviors. Some students report being more concerned with pregnancy than AIDS.

Throughout Bowen and Michal-Johnson's studies it was concluded that not much change in behavior occurred.

"Some students reported being more selective," said Bowen. "The educational campaigns have had some significant effects as to raise the level of concern and fear rather than changing behavior."

Bowen and Michal-Johnson state in their studies that most individuals do not have interpersonal skills to successfully negotiate safer sexual intimacy.

New Arts building nears completion

By CHRISTA MRUZ
Staff Reporter

The construction of the Liberal Arts building made progress over the summer. The building which will house 240 full-time faculty members, part-time teachers and six seminar rooms is now approximately 45 percent completed, said John Gallen, the director of Facilities Management. The building is staying within its $17.5 million budget, he added.

In October the University is planning to open the top of the parking structure that sits along side the building. By November, they hope to finish all the exterior work and close up the building to work on its inside.

"We are very pleased with the progress of the building. It has gone up a floor every 15 days. The construction is progressing at the right speed. We hope to move tne faculty in by late July or early August of 1992," he said.

Villanova was founded as a liberal arts school, yet the arts faculty never really had a home. With this much needed addition to the University's domain, its space can be put to better use, he added.

Career Days to provide information to job-seekers

By MICHAEL RANCOURT
Staff Reporter

"Career Days '91" will be held in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center Oct. 8-9, from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. The event, sponsored by the Career Planning and Placement Center, is open to all students. Representatives from over 80 companies will be on campus to provide information about their organizations and entry-level positions.

"It's an informational day more than a job fair. Students will come by and talk to recruiters to learn about the companies and see what they have to offer," said Kathy Braken of the On-Campus Recruiting Staff.

The companies will look to see what interests the students have. "It is not only for seniors. The companies may not even be hiring but are looking to see what kinds of jobs students want. Students who haven't yet decided on a major may get a better idea where to go," said Braken.

Some of the companies will be on campus later to recruit, so students who do have resumes are free to drop them off at the booths of companies they are interested in, Braken added.

"The job market is expected to be tough like last year," said Carol Lloyd, on-campus recruiting coordinator. "Students will have to be more aggressive than in the past. Personal networking is very important. Let people know that you are graduating," said Lloyd.

Although it is difficult to determine exactly who companies are looking to hire, students need to have good writing and communication skills along with some technical experience, Lloyd added.

The complete list of companies that will be present at "Career Days" is available in the Career Planning and Placement Center, located in the basement of Corr Hall.

Blood drive held

By JIM DOWNS
Staff Reporter

The Navy Reserve Officers' Training Corps (NROTC) is sponsoring its annual blood drive Oct. 9-10 at John Barry Hall in conjunction with the American Red Cross. NROTC is doing its best to aid the American Red Cross because of the severe shortage of blood, said Major Turner, chairman of the drive.

"We are sponsoring the blood drive to help out the Philadelphia and North Jersey areas," said Turner. "We are not limiting ourselves to just the Villanova community," he added.

"There is no substitute for human blood. It is not just a nice thing to do, it is a necessity in order to keep the population," said Stacy Jacobson, recruiter representative for Pennsylvania and New Jersey blood drives.

The goal of the blood drive is to acquire 200 pints over the two-day period. The average donation of one pint can be replenished in 24 hours.

Renovation projects promote campus beautification

University Press Release

Not since the construction of Connelly Center more than a decade ago has the University's main campus undergone such a change in physical appearance as it has in recent months.

John J. Gallen, executive director of Facilities Management, reported that the University's $17.5 million Liberal Arts Center is about 45 percent completed, including a parking garage, and renovations to the St. Thomas of Villanova Church are well underway.

"The roof should be completed by the middle of this month, and the windows will be in place by the first of November," Gallen said about the four-story, 90,000-square-foot-office building for College of Liberal Arts administrators, faculty and staff. He estimated that the building could be occupied by next summer, with its dedication to follow in the fall during Villanova's 150th anniversary.

Adjacent to the Liberal Arts Center will be a 246-car, two level parking garage, also under construction. The top deck is scheduled to be open for parking sometime this month.

Renovations to the St. Thomas of Villanova Church are about 35 percent completed, according to Gallen. "The church should be finished about the same time as the Liberal Arts Center," he said. The louvers, removed from the spires some years ago, will be replaced, retaining the church's original appearance. Further, the entrance will feature a ramp, allowing easy access to the church.

Telephone and electrical conduits eventually will be piped under Lancaster Avenue to connect the Public Safety Office in St. Clare Hall with the rest of the campus, said Gallen. "The conduits will enable all campus fire and security alarms to be tied in to the Office of Public Safety," explained Gallen. This tie-in will signal Public Safety directly in times of emergency so that aid can be dispatched immediately.

Writing Center facility expanded

By JAY BREMSER
Staff Reporter

The expansion of the Writing Center located in Room 203 Vasey Hall includes enlargement of the peer tutor staff from four to 14, more computers and updated software, said Karyn Hollis, director of the Writing Center.

"We have friendly, knowledgeable tutors who can help students at any stage of their composing process, from brainstorming ideas to proofreading final drafts," said Hollis.

Their preference is to work with a paper's rough draft. "[Then] our expertise in writing combines the student's expertise about the course being taken to produce a better paper," said Hollis.

The Writing Center is not just for weak writers; every student benefits from an informed reading of their work, Hollis added.

The tutors were trained on how to critique different styles of writing and to be flexible to different students' needs.

"Another advantage is the expertise we have with different professors, so we have an idea of what ... [they] want," tutor Rain McCurdy said.

"We offer a great unbiased opinion and we will not judge, comdemn or criticize your work ... but we will not write the students' papers for them," McCurdy added.

The hours of the Writing Lab are Monday to Thursday, 1:30-9:30 p.m. and Friday, 1:30 p.m.-4:30 p.m.

Jewish-Arab tensions

Jewish American communities to know precisely how the other groups feels about the Middle East," Omran began, "given the strong attachment we all have to that part of the world."

Omran proceeded to caution against who he termed as "extremists, on both sides" who "are bent on deepening the fears and suspicions" of the International Arab and Israeli communities. He said if such extremists and demagogues prevail, "we will have abandoned our responsibility towards our brothers and sisters in the Middle East."

There is a "growing awareness on both sides of the conflict of the need for face-to-face negotiations to break the deadlock," Omran added.

Puder opened his comments by making a common historic and emotional appeal to the audience. "I came from a nation who was tormented by the memories of the Holocaust ... none of us want to have another Holocaust ... what this gentleman proposes will bring us another Holocaust ... because he wants the last defense of Israel to be eroded ... he said.

"The prospects for a just and lasting peace in the Middle East appear more hopeful then ever," said Omran. To support this notion, Omran cited evidence of the increasing trend towards reconciliation present in the world today. The end of the Cold War and spread of democracy will diminish the strategic importance of the Middle East, and with this the intense polarization of the area, he said.

Omran said that with the developments in Eastern Europe, positive indications have also recently been seen in Middle Eastern politics. Besides renewed calls for peace by Jewish intellectuals, the Palestinian National Council recently voted in favor of dispatching a delegate to the Peace Conference to be held later this month, Omran said.

The Camp David Peace Accords broke the "psychological barrier", said Omran and he gave proof that peace between Israel and its neighbor was possible.

"Since the creation of the State of Israel, peace has been on the mind of everyone," said Puder. "The Zionist dream wasn't to have five wars with the Arabs," the Zionist dream was to have peace with our neighbors.

"We wanted peace in 1948, and peace in 1967, and we did not ask for the 1967 war ... " Puder said.

Puder maintained that although dramatic change was sweeping various areas and nations of the world, "democracy, and the new winds of change did not come to the Middle East."

On the subject of future peace, Puder drew on historical precedent as evidence of his skeptical claims. After the 1967 war, he said, "the Knesset of Israel assembled, and stretched out a hand to the Arab world, and said come and meet us. We'll trade ... territory for peace ...

"And the answer came like a boomerang from Khartoum. No to peace, no to negotiations and no to recognition of the state of Israel."

Omran discussed the deteriorating conditions of the Palestinians living on the West Bank and Gaza Strip, technically Israeli-occupied territory. The building of additional settlements on these lands only inhibited the prospects for peace in the region.

"We are the only country in the world under seige which treats people with humanity and gives them the basic human rights ... barring, of course, special circumstances which have to do with Security.

"If we have no right to Judea and Summaria ... no right to Hebrew land and to our eternal capitol which is Jerusalem, what right do we have to Tel Aviv and Jaffe? ..." added Puder.

Women's salary expectations

By College Press Service

Future businesswomen in college today do not expect to make as much money as men, and both sexes look to their fathers when seeking career advice and approval, a recent study shows.

Researchers at Florida State University surveyed 159 male and 109 female seniors and graduate students, asking questions about their career expectations.

What they found was that women studying business-related fields expected to earn $10,000 to $20,000 a year less than men when they reach the ages of their parents.

"We were really surprised," said professor Elizabeth Goldsmith, one of the researchers and a professor of family, child and consumer sciences at Florida State. "[Women's] expectations could be realistic, though, because of the gender gap and because they might have other concerns such as getting married."

Women said they expected to earn between $70,000 and $80,000 while men said they thought they would earn between $80,000 and $90,000.

According to a release from Florida State, U.S. Department of Labor statistics mirror those expectations. On average, women earn $616 a week, compared to $902 a week in marketing, management, advertising and public relations jobs.

The study also found that both women and men turn to their fathers for encouragement with their careers.

"We found that mothers gave warmth ... fathers came across as role models for both sexes," Goldsmith said. "Now we want to find out why."

Mahmoody lecture

kill her if she ever tried to leave again, she said.

"I used to pray that my husband would die because I knew that was my only way out. But I learned that when he died, my daughter and I became the property of his family," said Mahmoody.

Women have no rights in Iran and children are not allowed to think for themselves in school, Mahmoody said. Iranian children are trained in school to be "followers and not trained to be leaders," she added.

Mahmoody's husband eventually told her that he was taking their daughter Mahtob away and that Mahmoody would never see her again. "I knew I had to try to leave now," said Mahmoody.

Mahmoody contacted a shop keeper she had met that helped her and her daughter travel safely over the border and into Turkey to the U.S. Embassy. The man, along with several of his friends, was willing to help them because he wanted people to know that "all of us [Iranians] are not like this [Mahmoody's husband]," she said.

The men that helped Mahmoody and her daughter reach their destination were drug smugglers who illegaly transport hashish across the Iranian border into Turkey.

"These men who helped us were drug smugglers, but they had a heart and they risked their lives for us," Mahmoody said.

Mahmoody also credits her daughter as being the driving force which helped them return to the United States. "I'm sure I would never have gotten out of there without Mahtob's push," she said.

Since returning from Iran in 1986, she co-founded and heads "One World: For Children," an organization which promotes understanding between cultures and offers protection to children of bicultural marriages.

The lecture was sponsored by the Student Programming Council.

larship awarded $456,000 to 76 incoming freshmen on the basis of academic achievement. The individual awards were between $6,000 and $8,000.

A scholarship was also instituted for Commuting Scholars which awarded $203,000 to 41 incoming freshmen. This scholarship will pay for half of the total tuition for a commuter.

The University has also agreed with the Air Force and the Army to make up the difference between their Level 2 financial commitment and full tuition.

The scholarships that started this year will continue throughout the four years, barring academic ineligibility, and will be offered to all following incoming classes. The scholarships are gradually being implemented because they are a tremendous financial commitment to incorporate all at once, said McGuire.

Political Science Professor Bob Langran spoke to students in Good Counsel hall Sept. 25 at 8 p.m. Langran is running for a position on the Board of Commissioners for Radnor Township.

Langran encourages students to vote

Langran has been a Republican since he registered to vote and has turned Democratic for the election. "Think of him as a Villanova candidate, not a Democratic candidate," said John Sullivan, president of the College Democrats.

Mark Thomas, president of the College Republicans, is also backing Langran because Thomas is "convinced that Dr. Langran has the best interest of the Villanova community at heart ... I feel that the University could benefit enormously from his election."

Students asked Langran about his view on the housing Ordinance No. 89-27 which states no more than two unrelated people can live in a house in Radnor Township. In Lower Merion and Haverford townships, the ordinance restricts the number of unrelated inhabitants to three.

"I don't like it, to be honest. Being a resident, I would not want totally unlimited numbers of students living together. On the other hand, two is extremely restricted," Langran said. He said he would work toward increasing the number to four or six unrelated people, "but I wouldn't go more than six."

Members serve four-year terms on the Board of Commissioners. If elected, Langran's term would begin in January 1992. His opponent is Republican incumbent James Marks.

Baptist-affiliated school expels students for beliefs

By College Press Service

Three students who were kicked out of a Baptist-affiliated university because of their religious beliefs may seek legal action against the school for its actions, which have kindled a theological dispute between the Rev. Jerry Falwell and the United Pentecostal Church.

Seniors Chuck Groom, 32, of New York, Guy Redmer, 21, of New Jersey, and Mohammed Yacobi of Morocco, were expelled Sept. 20 from Liberty University in Lynchburg, Va., after an appeals review board upheld the recommendations of the schools' deans and Falwell, who serves as college chancellor.

The students, their attorney and a pastor say they were kicked out for worshipping at the off-campus United Pentecostal Church. School officials say the students' refused to obey the rules was the real reason why they were asked to leave, although they admit the students were asked to sign a form stating that they would not attend United Pentecostal church services.

"They were not dismissed because of their beliefs but rather their refusal to stop proselytizing other students," says Vernon Brewer, vice president for student development.

Brewer says the students were "pretty brazen in their approach" to other students and that in their first hearing, one of the men told Brewer he would go to hell for his actions against the students.

The students, however, say they were simply adhering to their religious beliefs.

"They make it sound like we were standing up on tables in the cafeteria and preaching," says Groom, a biblical counseling student. "That's not the case at all. If someone asks me my religious beliefs, I think I have the right to share them."

Two of the students, Groom and Yacobi, attended Liberty on full scholarships. Yacobi, who was unavailable for comment, is an international student who came to the United States to study at Liberty, his friends say. They are unsure if he plans to return home.

Groom says much of his alleged proselytizing came about because he is a religious counselor.

Douglas Klinedinst, pastor of the United Pentecostal Church where the three worship, says the students were really dismissed because of the incompatibility of the United Pentecostal Church's doctrine to Liberty's.

Liberty was founded as a Baptist college but has since touted itself as a private liberal arts school that adheres to a Baptist doctrinal position.

The proselytizing accusations "that are coming out now are just to justify [Liberty's] religious differences," Klinedinst says. "Dr. Falwell has publicly denounced the United Pentecostal Church for being cultish and heretical."

Klinedinst says the United Pentecostal Church is different from other Pentecostal churches. United Pentecostal worshipers do not believe in the Trinity, but rather believe that there is one God who has manifested himself in three roles.

The church also baptizes people only in the name of Jesus, not in the name of the Father, Son and Holy Ghost, and worshipers believe that speaking in tongues is essential to the salvation of the soul.

Falwell told students and faculty about two weeks ago that the United Pentecostal doctrine was not compatible with Liberty's, and that they were not permitted to attend services at the United Pentecostal church.

In a prepared statement about the students' dismissal, Falwell reiterated his earlier stance. "We have a solemn obligation to parents and pastors to see to it that their sons and daughters are exposed to mainline, evangelical instruction and that they do not become victims of cultic or heretical influence," he wrote.

Falwell also stated that much of the dismissal hinged on the students' non-compliance with a university policy that requires students who want to permanently worship outside of Liberty University churches to have written permission from the school.

At the hearings, Brewer says the students were asked to sign a form saying they would not attend United Pentecostal Church services and that they would stop proselytizing, but were not asked to renounce their beliefs.

Redmer disagrees. "They kept saying repeatedly that they weren't trying to challenge me for what I believe or to make me feel guilty, yet all of their questions were about what I believe, like 'Do you believe in the Trinity?'

"Then they handed me a form and asked me to renounce my beliefs. The form involved me swearing I would not proselytize on or off-campus. The off-campus part was going too far," Redmer says.

He reiterated Groom's frustration toward allegations of proselytizing. "I have never proselytized my religion on the campus but if students came to me and asked me about my church, I brought them here," he says.

Redmer adds that when the hearings began, about 20 Liberty students attended the United Pentecostal Church. He says only he, Groom and Yacobi decided not to sign the school's form.

The students' attorney, Owen Taylor, is looking into legal options but says, "We see this as Christian versus Christian and the students want to avoid that."

All newswriters report to 201 Dougherty Hall for a mandatory meeting, Tues., Oct. 8 at 7:30 p.m. Woodward and Bernstein will be in attendance.

Violence reported at college campuses nationwide

By College Press Service

In one weekend, gunshot wounds, citations, riots, broken bones and lots of arrests were reported on campuses after various parties got out of hand.

In Michigan, where student violence was perhaps the worst, law enforcement agencies reported two near-riots, one student shooting, four police officers injured and a plethora of arrests for assault, inciting a riot, underage drinking and disorderly conduct in three separate incidents.

At about 12:30 a.m. Sept. 15 on the Eastern Michigan University campus, police broke up a Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity dance at the school's fieldhouse.

"About 350 people couldn't get into the dance so a number of fights broke out," said university spokeswoman Kathleen Tinney. "The police closed the dance early because of it."

Because of the early closing — the dance was scheduled until 2 a.m. — several students and town residents scuffled with police, resulting in eight arrests and four officer injuries.

"Subsequently, a guy and three women were walking home from the dance and they got into a fight," Tinney said.

That fight, the cause of which is unknown, landed an 18-year-old male freshman from Detroit in the hospital with a gunshot wound to the abdomen. He is in fair condition, Tinney said, and no arrests have been made even though the freshman, whose name was not released, said he knew his attackers.

Several hours earlier and 10 miles away in Ann Arbor, home of the University of Michigan, police arrested seven people for assault, malicious destruction of police property and inciting a riot after police fired tear gas into a crowd to break up a party there.

In Jackson, Miss., at about 9:30 p.m. on Sept. 15, running back James Johnson, 21, a junior, was walking with his girlfriend past the Jackson State University cafeteria when a group of men shot him in the stomach.

"The information we have from [Johnson] is that some individuals walking by him made comments that he was the reason they lost some money on the football game. They had apparently bet against Jackson State," said Hinds County Detective Steve Bailey.

On Sept. 14, Johnson scored two touchdowns and rushed 110 yards in 20 carries in a victory over Tennessee State.

"Johnson continued walking past the group and said he saw them get into a car. Apparently they fired at him from the car," Bailey said.

Police in Wisconsin and Arizona made a number of arrests the same weekend and law enforcement officials there say they are working on special efforts to prevent problems like those that occurred in Michigan.

Villanova 1991-1992 Student Season Basketball Ticket Lottery Application

For the second year, Villanova University's student season basketball tickets will be sold by a lottery method, according to Villanova Athletic Director Dr. Ted Aceto.

The lottery application is available in today's edition of the Villanovan. "There are 1,844 tickets printed for the student section, and with the exception of tickets used by the band and in recruiting, all of those tickets will go into the lottery," said Aceto.

Student season tickets are for sale at $130.00 each. This package includes ten basketball games played on campus at the duPont Pavilion, and all four games scheduled for the Spectrum in Philadelphia.

Students wishing to purchase basketball season tickets must fill out the application in full. A self-addressed, stamped envelope must accompany all orders, and the full application must be returned to the Athletic Ticket Office in the Nevin Field House by Friday, Oct. 11, 1991. The actual lottery process will take place on Friday, Oct. 18. "If the application is not fully filled out, it will be rejected," explained Aceto. "Also, we will only accept one application per student."

All applications from seniors and graduate students will go into one computer file, all applications from juniors into another, and so on. Each class will be treated equally.

Once the applications are entered into a computer, the computer will randomly select the recipients of tickets for the 1991-92 men's basketball season. Notification of selection will come via the applicants' self-addressed envelope. A coupon sent to an applicant will signify that tickets are being held for them; if the applicants' check is returned, they were not selected to receive tickets.

"The tickets themselves will not be mailed out," noted Aceto. "This was done to prevent loss in the mail or theft of the actual tickets. If the applicant receives a coupon in the mail, with their name and social security number on it, they can then redeem it at the ticket office for their season tickets."

Aceto further explained that those selected in the lottery can pick up their tickets at their leisure, but must present a valid Villanova identification card and their coupon in order to received their tickets.

Also on the application form this year is a section for membership in the Villanova Basketball Club. According to Villanova's Director of Student Activities, Lucy Gorski, "The Basketball Club provides transportation for the members to the off-campus games, has handouts and promotional items that are given out before each game, and arranges transportation and tickets to other away games that are not a part of the regular season ticket package."

Students wishing to join the Basketball Club are asked to note that on the application, and add an additional $15. to their check.

Parking woes continue

The University's student parking situation has become the topic of campus-wide discussion. By 10:30 a.m. weekdays, the two lots referred to as Main Lot are usually completely full. Anyone with classes beginning later is forced to park on South Campus and the duPont lots, or, in many cases, illegally.

For those with classes in St. Mary Hall or any of the buildings on West Campus, the walk from South Campus is long and time consuming, especially in cold weather. With such a large percentage of its juniors and seniors living off campus, Villanova must make an effort to relieve this problem.

Even if a student finds a space in the Main Lot, he or she must still face several potential hazards. At least one car has been stolen in the first month of school. This brings up serious questions about the degree of security Public Safety offers.

As in so many cases, Radnor Township has impeded progress in the parking situation with its ridiculous ordinances. It has blocked every attempt by Villanova to increase student parking. The argument has been that added traffic will further clutter the streets around campus.

This is the same township which decided not to repair the bridge on Spring Mill Road near St. Mary Hall for approximately 2½ years. It doesn't take a genius to see that the absence of the bridge causes traffic congestion. With the parking garage adjacent to the new Liberal Arts Center nearing completion, Villanova should allow certain students the privilege of using the facility. Only then will the parking crisis be alleviated.

Villanova and the surrounding community must share the blame for the traffic and parking problems faced by students and local residents. Until the township becomes more tolerant of the University and allows parking garage construction, the multiple difficulties stemming from this intolerance will continue to hinder progress.

AIDS at Villanova?

On television. On radio. In the newspapers. In magazines. Not a day goes by that we don't read about or hear stories about people who are suffering from AIDS. Some are innocent newborn babies. Some are victims of tainted blood received in transfusions. And many are victims of unsafe sex.

And we at Villanova who believe we are safe from just about everything — are not. We think this disease only hits the poor, the habitual drug users, the homosexuals. Well, think again.

Villanova is no safer from the AIDS virus than any other place, and we know no place and no one is safe unless each of us is made acutely aware of the presence of the disease, its causes, its transmission. Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities and chairman of the new task force on AIDS, said that by the year 1995 it is possible that up to 195 students at Villanova could test positive for HIV [human immune deficiency virus]. We don't know what the numbers would be if testing were done today.

Education is the best way to attack the AIDS issue. But, the University has neglected to cover the issue on campus. The main reason the administration has waffled on the issue is a fear of addressing the issue of pre-marital sex and the use of condoms. Abstinence still remains the best defense against the AIDS virus.

Bonas said that the University has drafted an AIDS policy. But such a policy has been kept behind locked doors and has been a token effort at best. No policy has been distributed and no major efforts at AIDS education implemented.

The University must actively address the issue of AIDS on campus as well as interpersonal relationships. Without education on the topic and forums of open discussion, a high number of Alumni deaths will be discovered a "few years" down the road.

Condom ad commentary addressed

To the Editor:

It was with great dismay that I read the commentary by Anthony Palladino in last week's Villanovan, regarding the Trojan condom ad in the Campus Connection magazine. I want to publicly apologize for the content of this ad and assure the campus community that we have no intention to promote such products.

Obviously, to do so would be contradictory to the moral climate and educational efforts of our University community. To be honest, the inclusion of this ad in the Campus Connection and the endorsement on the front cover were both done without my permission or knowledge. I was unaware that this publication would be offered at the CampusFest event until late August and then assumed that it would not reflect negatively on the University Shop or Villanova University. I was never given a preview of its contents.

Please be assured that I will certainly make our dissatisfaction with this publication known to the MarketSource Corporation who conducted the CampusFest event. I hope the University community can accept our sincere apology for this mistake and continue to offer us their ongoing support for our services and products.

Frank L. Henniger, CSP
Director/University Shop

To the Editor:

I'm writing to comment on Anthony Palladino's commentary in the Sept. 27 issue of the Villanovan regarding his concern for Villanova's moral standards over a condom ad. Rest assured, Anthony, the University's administration is still very Catholic and conservative on the subject of premarital sex.

If he is disturbed by the fact that the University Shop at Villanova apparently provided the magazine with the offending advertisement, he has a way to go in figuring out how things work.

Did the University Shop search around for a condom ad? Did the Shop make a point to choose such a "lavishly colored" ad as opposed to a more discreet, sensitive or a politically correct advertisement? Odds are, they did not. In fact, I'd wager Anthony that no one affiliated with the University Shop or University Administration read the magazine before it was so shamelessly dumped on an unsuspecting public.

My guess is that the hedonists from the secular Drexel University Store conspired to offend as many people as possible. Yeah, right.

Palladino's shock is that the same campus alarmed and fearful of rape would have a condom ad innocently hidden under a "hippest guide to college living" label and distributed on campus. Well Anthony, even if condoms were issued in the Pit, rape would still be feared. In fact, the presence or absence of condoms does not change the level of fear of rape. The connection between rape and condoms that you make is ridiculous.

Leave fliers alone

To the Editor:

I am a senior at Villanova, and I have been a member of my fraternity, Alpha Phi Alpha, since my freshman year. Even though we are not chartered here at Villanova, we are still allowed to do programs on campus. It is very hard for us to get our programs publicized and it does not help when people tear down our fliers.

For the last four years I've seen our fliers torn down even when they were properly approved. The latest incident was Tuesday evening, Sept. 24. We put our fliers up at 9 p.m. and by 11 p.m. that same night, they were torn down. We put them up near other fliers and they were still taken down while the others remained up.

Some students may not care and feel this is trifling, but I don't. If students do not want to attend the event or do not care about Alpha Phi Alpha that is quite all right, but don't deny others the opportunity to find out about our events. All we ask is that they have a little bit of respect.

Is rape a concern of liberals and conservatives?

By MICHELE L. ROSSI

I am writing in response to Anthony Palladino's commentary, "Is 'Nova less diligent in promoting conservatism?" featured in the Sept. 17 edition of the Villanovan. In his article, Palladino expresses his dismay that the University Shop at Villanova, in conjunction with the university stores of two other area universities, sponsored a publication featuring a comic-strip-style ad for Trojan Condoms. He then proceeds to link Villanova's funding for an ad with sexual implications which he finds risque with misgivings about the conservative nature of the "Catholic institution which [he] previously decided to attend" as well as his disturbance at finding headlines dealing with the issue of campus rape on the pages of the Villanovan. Palladino concluded by stating that he "wouldn't be surprised" to see his hall lavatory "littered" with condom dispensers in the future.

Palladino is entitled to his opinion on the Trojan advertisement as well as the placement of condom dispensers in restrooms. However, I feel compelled to criticize his blatant dismissal of campus rape as an issue of concern for those of us who "bleed," i.e. non-conservatives. I was not under the impression that "conservative" institutions or "conservative" persons of any kind condoned rape or believed it to be an issue of so little importance that it did not merit the attention, compassion or concern of the entire Villanova community, conservatives and non-conservatives alike. Perhaps Mr. Palladino was not aware of the four incidences of campus rape reported last year, and I ponder his whereabouts during a certain Orientation session for the class of 1995, when the problem of campus rape was explicitly addressed by the University.

However, I feel compelled to criticize his blatant dismissal of campus rape as an issue of concern for those of us who "bleed," i.e. non-conservatives.

I am also obliged to question the wisdom of Mr. Palladino's decision to attend Villanova based upon its reputation as a "conservative Catholic institution." He would have done better to include an institution's academic quality amongst the criteria he considered when making his college choice. Attending an institution simply because one believes one will not encounter any sort of philosophical, intellectual or ideological conflict is problematic for three reasons. First of all, it robs one of the opportunity to gain knowledge through a lively exchange of ideas with one's peers. Secondly, one's convictions cannot be strengthened if he or she is never challenged through debate with persons holding opposite views. Thirdly, if by some strange chance Mr. Palladino escapes Villanova without once having to defend his beliefs, he will emerge from his conservative cocoon to be greeted by a world that is not necessarily as Catholic, conservative, heterosexual or kind as he may have liked to believe.

I suggest that he put his remaining years at Villanova to good use.

Michele L. Rossi is a sophomore honors major.

'Nova pride important

Just a few comments on last Saturday's football game with Connecticut. It is obvious that Andy Talley and his fine staff have put together a really exciting football team. For the students who did not see this event on a beautiful fall afternoon, you missed an opportunity to build what many of us call college memories. Memories that last long after the parties, held at other locations, fizzle out and fade away. Unfortunately, you are cheating yourselves out of this truly lasting college experience.

How about a hand for the band, I want to mention the Villanova University Band. Its performance, presence and enthusiasm is appreciated more than you probably realize. The half-time presentation was great, the band, marchers, twirlers, cheerleaders, etc. are all to be commended. Whether at full complement at home or a skeleton crew at the away games, they are the true spirit of Villanova.

Rosemont housing offers residents options

By MONTA MONACO
Staff Reporter

As the residence halls at Villanova fill up and the zoning laws make off-campus housing more and more problematic, many upperclassmen, transfers and University College students scramble to Rev. Frank Farsaci, O.S.A., in hopes of finding a miracle answer to their housing dilemmas. For several years now, Rosemont College has provided the answer to the prayers of many Villanova women.

Villanova leases one of the residence halls from Rosemont for Villanova women. Also, Rosemont has always been very willing to allow Villanova students to stay in extra rooms in other dormitories on the Rosemont campus, said Sr. Mary Frances McAllister, director of Residence Life at Rosemont.

Villanova women living on Rosemont College's campus have a very different dorm-life experience.

According to Farsaci, the relationship is symbiotic. "We're delighted to help Rosemont and Rosemont is delighted to help us. We need Rosemont right now and we need those rooms. Rosemont is a very fine college that offers a very fine education. They just happen to have empty beds," he said.

Connelly Hall, the dorm that Villanova leases from Rosemont, seems to be similar to the dorms on Villanova's own campus, said Junior Kathy Riley. "When you have a car, living at Rosemont is not bad. We don't feel isolated at Connelly because we live with all Villanova women," she said.

Last year, however, the Rosemont students were angry with the administration for giving up their beloved Connelly to Villanova. Apparently, a bulletin board was put up last year in protest of the situation. Students were encouraged to put their opinions up on the board. McAllister said that the negative feelings were brought about out of nostalgia for the old Rosemont freshman dorm rather than an objection to Villanova women living at Rosemont.

While the Villanovans in Connelly follow Villanova's rules, circumstances are quite different in halls such as Kaul which houses primarily Rosemont students. Here, the Villanova women are under Rosemont's complete jurisdiction.

> All of the Villanova women are invited to take advantage of anything Rosemont has to offer.

The rules at Rosemont are, indeed, different and somewhat more strict — especially where male visitors are concerned. This is one of the main gripes heard from Villanovans living in dorms like Kaul. Freshman Kerry Ann Sheehy said, "I don't think we should have to follow Rosemont dorm rules."

Even a few of the Rosemont students agreed with Sheehy. "Villanova women, here at Kaul, should follow Connelly's rules even if it would make the Rosemont women upset," said Annette Scotto, a sophomore from Rosemont.

On the other hand, JoAnne McAllister, a Resident Assistant at Kaul, said, "The Villanova women living at Kaul signed an agreement stating that they would follow the rules here. It would get so complicated if they had different rules. This way we don't have to worry about guys."

Another worry in Kaul is the relationship between the women from different schools. Julie Bentz, a transfer to Villanova, said, "I think they feel like we are intruding. This is their school. They must wonder why we are here. However, I think that the atmosphere is getting much friendlier."

McAllister said that if a problem arises between the two sets of students she sees to it right away. "The Villanova women fit into Rosemont and what's going on very well here. We don't make a distinction. They are not second class citizens. They are paying as much as anyone else so they should be allowed to enjoy resident

Student plays at Belle Air Terrace

By JOHN KOLMER
Managing Editor

This Tuesday, Villanova's own Pete Shauger is playing the Belle Air Terrace. In the tradition of rock/folk artists like Buddy Holly and Pete Seeger, Pete Shauger produces a sparse musical background for his delicate, yet excellent vocal style. His versions of classics, both old and new, hold true to the original recordings without compromising his own style.

> At Tuesday's show, Shauger plans on drawing about 20 songs from his extensive repertoire.

Pete Shauger is a sophomore in the arts college and has been playing the acoustic guitar for just over two years. He began playing guitar when his family was relocated from Beaver Falls, Pa., just outside of Pittsburgh, to Downingtown, Pa., over 300 miles away. The move saw an affinity for the guitar become apparent, and Shauger quickly developed a good ear for picking out his favorite songs on the radio.

Shauger attributes his playing style to a broad variety of past musical legends. He was especially influenced by the Beatles, Stevie Ray Vaughn, Buddy Holly, the Moody Blues and Badfinger.

Although this is his first time in front of a large audience, Shauger does not feel that stage fright will hinder his act. He hopes that this anticipation will actually enhance his performance.

At Tuesday's show, Shauger plans on drawing about 20 songs from his extensive repertoire. Among these cover tunes, Shauger expects to play Nick Lowe's "Cruel to be Kind," "Handle with Care" by the Traveling Wilburys, "Peggy Sue" by Buddy Holly and the Allman Brothers' "Melissa."

If this concert is a success, Shauger aims to continue playing locally as well as to introduce original material into his current body of music. Future plans may even include the formation of a new area band.

Pete Shauger is performing at the Belle Air Terrace this Tuesday from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.

"Home Tales" stresses origins

By PAULA SEPINUCK
Special to the Villanovan

"Home Tales" is a unique intergenerational and cross cultural theater piece that explores the issues of home and homelessness from the perspective of the 14 men, women and children performers who have experienced the loss of home. The piece uses script, music and dance to weave together the true stories of their lives.

The "Home Tales" project began over two years ago when I decided that I wanted to make a collaborative theater piece about the nature of home. The question I kept asking myself was how could I really know what home was unless I also knew what it meant not to have a home? I began thinking of all the kinds of people who have experienced the loss of home — refugees, immigrants, old people, migrant workers and the homeless of the United States. I thought it would be really exciting to make a piece that both told their individual and personal stories as well as explored the common ground of their shared voices, dreams and losses with us.

I began the project by conducting workshops and interviews with social service workers, academicians and people in shelters, migrant camps and refugee centers. From these original interviews, script writer Judith McDaniel and I began sorting through to get a sense of the central themes for the piece. The next step was to cast the piece and develop the script, music and dances from the true life stories, feelings and images of the performers.

> What does it mean to walk in another person's shoes? Who is the stranger – and can we let them in?

The questions and themes that kept presenting themselves were: What does it mean to walk in another person's shoes? Who is the stranger — and can we let them in? How do people rebuild home and community after they have lost it? What is it like to live in a new country and not to speak the language or know the customs? What does it feel like to be an old person who has to face moving into a nursing home or to be someone who lives on the street? And can we let the stranger into our lives, our homes, our hearts?

"Home Tales" has been an amazing experience for all of us. Working to create theater from the true stories of the performers is an exciting and daunting task. This incredibly diverse group has had to learn how to work together, perform on stage, share their life stories and create a new community. And they have. I believe in the power of this kind of work — the power of speaking out, telling truth and the power of positive energy flowing from performers to audience and back again. It is healing work.

The cast of performers in "Home Tales" includes: the Drug and alcohol counseling center aids students

Substance abuse is a genuine problem for many people. Alcohol and drugs can quickly become easy escapes from life's stresses and pressures. Unfortunately, these escapes have the potential to become deadly. For college students, the encouragement from peers to kick back and party is quite strong. But if this "advice" is taken too seriously, that one lost weekend can become one lost lifetime. Students must realize the fact that all actions have consequences. At Villanova University, the Center for Alcohol and Drug Assistance strives to educate students about the dangers of substance abuse.

To many students, the ground floor of Stanford Hall consists soley of a study lounge and weight room. Few notice the office on the left that houses the Center for Alcohol and Drug Assistance. Here, helpful, friendly counselors are on hand, ready and willing to advise and counsel students who are both first time and repeated substance abusers.

Lynne Hincken, one of the counselors at the Center, is a prevention specialist. Working with individuals and groups, her job is to evaluate students' problems relating to substance abuse and counsel each person according to his or her needs. Whether the problem is personal or that of a friend or family member, the Center provides a caring atmosphere in which students may discuss their problems and obtain advice and information that can lead to solutions. "Everything told to us by the student is strictly confidential, unless a Resident Assistant is involved. In this case the problem is a disciplinarian one, and they attend the sessions as well," said Hincken.

Essentially, the counselors' main objective is to help students regain their self-esteem and assertiveness lost to substance abuse. Through counseling, they can learn to abstain from or at least reduce their intake of alcohol and drugs.

Virtually everyone on campus has either been to or has known of parties in various residence halls. Many of these gatherings are broken up quickly, and the roommates pay the price — literally. In addition to a fine of $25, each student is required to attend an Intervention Seminar which discusses "safe hosting tips for a party as well as the need to realize that they are responsible for their guests' behavior and safety," said Hincken. The main goal of the seminar is "not to preach that one

'Novans accept the Nintendo Campus Challenge

By MAUREEN MEYER
Staff Reporter

You may have noticed that your classes were missing a few more people than usual at the beginning of the week. No, there was not a sudden outbreak of the flu or an unusual amount of afternoon naps being taken. A much better diversion from the monotony of academic life presented itself here at Villanova on Monday and Tuesday — the Nintendo Campus Challenge. "I skipped all of my classes and played Nintendo from 12 'till 4 p.m. today," one student commented. Another confessed, "I stopped and grabbed a quick game of Tetris before and after each of my classes in Bartley yesterday."

Held in the Quad and advertised to all who were passing by a huge inflatable "Doctor Mario" that could even be seen over the top of Sullivan Hall, the Nintendo Challenge was sposnored by Geo, the Disney Village Marketplace, Delco Electronics and GMAC Financial Services. The Challenge came to Villanova courtesy of the Student Programming Council. Two trailer arcades were set up to house the Nintendo Home Entertainment Systems that offered free games and portable Nintendo Game Boy stations were scattered throughout the Quad.

More competitive Nintendo players had the opportunity to enter a contest that will send the best Nintendo player from Villanova University to Walt Disney Land in Orlando, Fl. to compete in the National Championship against winners from 53 other colleges and universities across the country. The winner of the National Championship will receive a Geo and three runners-up will receive cash.

Throughout the two days of the carnival, ambitious players competed in rounds against 11 other players to win T-shirts. The six top scores for both men and women were recorded. On Tuesday at 4 p.m. the 12 top scorers held a Nintendo play-off to determine who would be going to Florida.

For those people whose forte or interests did not lie with video games, students had the chance to sign up and test drive a Geo. One sophomore remarked, "It was really great. I've never test driven a new car before!" Another sophomore decided that. "Villanova should do things like this more often. It was a lot of fun!"

Nellie Louree, a Rosemont sophomore, said, "We are sister and brother schools anyway. There are just people on campus that are close minded. Rosemont girls should be happy to meet other people."

The Villanova women in Kaul hold full meal plans at Rosemont while the girls in Connelly are allowed to buy meal tickets at both Rosemont and Villanova that give them 20 meals per card. This is also a nuisance for the women in Kaul. "I don't like the meal plan idea. I miss dinners a lot because I have a few late classes. It would be nice if we were offered a joint meal plan," said Freshman Kathleen DiBello.

The Villanova women are invited to take advantage of anything Rosemont has to offer. They are allowed to use the library and the gym, and they are asked to participate in events such as the T.G.'s with Villanova fraternities and house council meetings.

There is even a shuttle that runs back and forth from Villanova. Denae Thomas, a transfer to Villanova, said, "The shuttle is always on time, but it should run more frequently. They leave in time for my morning classes, but, afterward, you have to wait around. Basically, you can walk home from class faster."

All in all, the Connelly residents enjoy living at Rosemont. "It is quiet enough to study, unlike the dorms on campus, but we are still getting the opportunity to meet lots of really nice people from Villanova," Cathy Moynihan, a transfer to Villanova, said.

The Kaul residents seem a little more wary of their situation. Bentz said, "I think that living in Connelly would make the situation much better." DiBello added, "I don't feel like a part of the Villanova campus at all, and campus life is a big part of being a freshman at Villanova."

Living at Rosemont has its disadvantages as well as advantages. The distance from Villanova's campus may be a barrier to campus identity. However, it is then even more important for all members of the Villanova community to make an effort to bring their sense of community with them when they leave campus.

cannot drink before they are 21, but if one chooses to drink, to do so in moderation," added Hincken.

Three freshmen who participated in one of the Intervention Seminars all agreed that it was definitely a worthwhile experience. "I thought it would be preaching about how wrong drinking was, but the seminar was the complete opposite," said one student, "It was so realistic, and Mike Green, the speaker, spoke to us on our level." Another student added, "They stressed how important it is to drink in moderation and not lose control, which really made me think twice."

The whole purpose of the seminar is not to belittle students but to genuinely help them. For the three freshmen students, the program was such a positive experience that they agreed Mike Green should incorporate the seminar into the Orientation Program next year.

Sharing with others who have had similar experiences is something that is always a positive part of getting help. The Center also offers a Peer Assistance Program, based on "students helping students approach." Peer Education Resource teams are comprised of Villanova students who volunteer five to 10 hours of their free time to help others with problems they have experienced before. Some of the program topics include: "How to Help a Friend," "A Family Affair," "How Much is Too Much?" and "Booze, Drugs and Your Love Life." The resource teams use a variety of creative interactive techniques that encourage individual awareness and behavioral changes.

Not only does the Center offer one-on-one counselng, but pamphlets describing how to sustain changes are provided as well. There is an extensive resource library consisting of books and other resources on issues concerning substance abuse.

If you haven't been down to visit the Alcohol and Drug Assistance Center, they will be involved in several events throughout the year, such as Alcohol Awareness Week, Balloon Day, Greek Week, Students Against Driving Drunk and Safe Rides. Remember that these counselors are here to help students. ENTERTAINMENT

Theatre teaches 'Nova students

By COLEEN KENIREY
Staff Reporter

Although it is not a highly publicized organization, the Villanova Student Theatre combines the creative talents of many undergraduates to produce high quality entertainment. Under the guidance of advisor Ron Winston, the group will generate plays and revive Cafe' Innuendo this year. President Mary Ellen Summers refers to the project as "a learning experience" for the students involved because they gain insight about all aspects of theater production.

The Student Theatre is a great opportunity for students to expand artistically through acting, set design and costume design. Support for the organization is always needed and it can be creatively rewarding. A unique aspect of the Student Theatre is that decisions about future productions are not restricted to the executive board; suggestions from all members are welcomed and considered. The group's performances last year were very well received. During the fall semester, they presented "Once Upon A Crime," an original dinner theater production. In the spring they offered Sam Shepard's "Tooth Of A Crime," a rock opera. Striving to match these accomplishments, they will stage "Baby With The Bathwater" Nov. 1 and 2 in St. Mary Auditorium.

They will be somewhat secretive about the storyline of this work by playwright Chris Durang. The comedy is about character Davey Dingleberry's wife and her attempt to survive in an absurd world. Graduate student John McGowan will direct the show, which promises an unusual plot. Future productions are planned for this year, but the particular plays have not yet been chosen.

Monday night, the Student Theatre will operate Cafe' Innuendo, a project which was popular last year. Innuendo, which is entering its fifth semester, provides entertainment in an intimate coffee house atmosphere. Each evening includes various performances ranging from music and poetry to stand up comedy. This semester, Cafes are currently planned for Nov. 11, 18 and 25.

The Student Theatre needs the support of Villanova students to be able to continue providing unique entertainment. Students can provide this support by either getting involved or by attending the productions. The Farm portrays refreshing attitudes

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

The Farm spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive backstage interview for the Villanovan.

"We all found each other through contact magazines," confesses lead singer of the Farm, Peter Hooton, "The ad read: Lonely Boy Who Likes Drinking for Liverpool Band." This is simply a small example of both the humor and lightheartedness that surrounds the Farm, the hottest new import from Liverpool.

The Farm's debut album, Spartacus is filled with intriguing new tracks that shadow ideas such as unity, repression and truth.

Coming from Liverpool, the Farm tends to play to a much different audience than that in America. Hooton explains, "Here we are a big college band. But in England all boys and girls of young ages get into the Farm. We are pretty much a cult band. It's weird, ... the transition."

Due to their origins, comparisons to the Beatles seem inevitable. Hooton continues, "Only in America are we compared with the Beatles because we're both from Liverpool. However, we're nothing like them. We are all Beatles fans. I mean who isn't? I could be from Maine or Africa and still be a Beatles fan. At least we aren't compared to Frankie Goes to Hollywood!"

The instrumentation of the band is developed through the basics despite their progressive image which tends to side with synthesizers and sampling. Bassist Carl Hunter said, "All our songs are written on the guitar. We use sampling and it's good but it's just another instrument, another tool. The basis is on guitar." Hooton interrupted, "Our music was simply derived through evolution. Spartacus is not a rock LP, it's not a dance LP, — it was a fortunate mistake (laughs)."

Hits such as "All Together Now" and hot single "Groovy Train" have established some credit for the band. " 'Groovy Train' is just a pop jam — it's simply a superficial pop-classic," said Hooton. " 'All Together Now' was originally a tune called 'No Man's Land' which was released as a b-side to our club single, 'Stepping Stone' (cover of the Monkees' original)," said Hooton. "We picked it up again and reworked it with a classical piece of music. It's lighter now," claims Hunter.

The song "Hearts and Minds," clearly one of the Farm's best efforts, was formulated on a high scale grappling a difficult issue. "Originally the song was about politics and the 'plastic gangster.' It focuses on the crime in Liverpool. The poor look to crime as a better way of life. It's more about self-respect," declares Hooton.

Ex-Madness leader Graham McPherson, a.k.a. Suggs, produced Spartacus. When his name is mentioned, the boys in the band light up. "SU-U-UGGS! SUGGS BABY!" they scream in unison. "Suggs was extremely helpful. He's very instrumental. He put it all together. He's the one that made 'Stepping Stone' so innovative."

In an industry that is so competitive, the Farm is very amicable to their direct competition. "Jesus Jones is great. I love 'em. I don't care if they are our competitors. We sound different. America lumps us all together and you can't help that. EMF is nice too, but they're doing something a bit different too."

The Farm is an original band with a warm welcoming sound. Their livelihood is their charm. When asked where their name was derived from, guitarist Keith Mullin answered, "Me mum christened me Keith," "Mine Peter," jabs Hooton and Hunter yelped, "I popped out and me mum screamed ... CARL!" You can never get a straight answer from these guys.

'Cerulean' provides soft visions of nature

By COLEEN KENIREY
Staff Reporter

The follow up to The Ocean Blue's 1989 self-titled debut CD was definitely worth the wait. This progressive band's new release continues to deliver the melodic and serene style of music which was characteristic of their first album. Cerulean provides soothing sounds and beautiful lyrical images. There is a unity among all of the songs in their dreamlike quality and focus on visions of nature.

The simple poetic lyrics written by singer David Schelzel provide natural images such as a sailboat in the wind in "Breezing Up" and a golden patch of flowers in "Marigold." "Ballerina Out Of Control" is so effective that it creates a spinning and whirling musical sensation. "The Planetarium Scene," also the band's contribution to the Just Say Anything collection, offers a fine display of bass player Bobby Mittan's talents.

The title song, one of the best, revolves around visions of blue skies and the blue ocean and contains excellent guitar work reminiscent of The Cure. "Questions Of Travel" offers a mental journey "of England in the rain, of Swiss Alps in snow, of tiny German towns, of ruins at dusk in Rome." Romantic images such as these provide all of the songs. Schelzel's pleasantly mild voice enhances his imaginative lyrics.

The four members of The Ocean Blue, have developed the kind of music one would expect from a band with their name. Cerulean is aptly titled because it is a light azure blue color which visually captures the mood of the music.

The songs are relaxing and illusory, creating pictures like "daydreams of golden hue, crying yellow, raining green and singing blue." The cover and the inside phots of luminous blue waters also compliment The Ocean Blue's sound and lyrics. Cerulean carries a rich lucidity through all of its songs which makes it enjoyable.

FROM THE REELS

"The Fisher King"
Directed by Terry Gilliam
Tri Star Pictures

Amidst its cold, foreboding skyscrapers and its violent streets, New York can sometimes appear impersonal. Mirthless businessmen ignore each other as they pass, while each night another fatal gunshot rings through an alley. In a world that appears dry and meaningless, "The Fisher King" stresses dreams, imagination and the importance of life.

The film portrays Robin Williams as Parry, an unbalanced homeless man who wanders the streets as a true knight out to save innocents from the scourge of evil. His quest is to find the Holy Grail, which he believes to have seen in a magazine picture. In reality, however, the knight is an ex-professor who lost himself in a fantasy world when his wife was brutally murdered.

Jeff Bridges plays Jack Lucas, a smooth, egotistical talk show host whose off-hand remark to one disturbed listener causes a massacre in an uptown bar. His career plummets and he spends his time wallowing in booze and self-pity. Parry saves him one night from certain death at the hands of two youths. From this point on, Lucas is fascinated with his new friend's passion for life and his somewhat uncommon dreams and goals.

Lucas soon learns that the reason Parry is stuck in his medieval dream world was the shooting that he indirectly caused. Filled with guilt, Lucas tries to make amends, first with money and then with favors. He soon realizes that Parry's only passion (besides his quest for the Holy Grail) is his romantic affection for a shy office girl named Lydia.

At its strongest, the film combines fantasy and reality and then captures both in a grand spectacle. Just as the viewer might believe that good defeated bad and pageantry is a personal look at two relationships and the joys and sorrows love endures.

"The Fisher King" is a modern-day fable, complete with a happy ending (and a moral). It sweeps away the mundane and dry, making life tender and vital and worth pursuing. Yet in all its strength, "The Fisher King" tries too hard at some points, and its deliberately shocking reality might make some squeamish. The film constantly uses literary images that are obscure and confusing, but the basic plot is easily understood. For pure movie enjoyment, however, "The Fisher King" is a gem.

'Deceived' chills

"Deceived"
Directed by Damian Harris
Touchstone Pictures

Goldie Hawn, the hilariously lovable star of "Private Benjamin" and "Overboard," in her new film "Deceived," proves to the world that she can contend with the dramatic heavyweights of the '90s.

In "Deceived," a classic thriller along the lines of "Sleeping with the Enemy," Hawn plays an art/restaurateur named Adrienne Saunders who stumbles upon some extremely painful information concerning her husband. John Heard plays her husband, Jack Saunders, who turns her world upside down. Heard gives what is probably the best performance of his career.

Adrienne's perfect family unit is shattered when she discovers that her husband is involved in art forgery, murder, fake deaths, false identities and a plethora of other horrid acts. Hawn's performance is flawless and her emotion in genuine. Hawn did not act like the goofy, air-head that the entertainment world is accustomed to seeing.

Although the plot is complicated, "Deceived" flows smoothly with some great imagery intermittently placed throughout the film. The movie guarantees eye-covering, gasping and screams from the audience. Lie after heinous lie pulls the viewer deeper and deeper into this powerful thriller and leaves the viewer wondering, "Whom can you trust?"

"Paradise"
Directed by Mary Agnes Donaghue
Touchstone Pictures.

"Paradise," adapted and directed by Mary Agnes Donoghue, proves to be not only a moving story about the intricacies of human relationships, but a well directed, finely acted film with universal appeal.

The story, set in a small southern town named Paradise, focuses on the Reeds, a young married couple (Griffith and Johnson) who lost their three-year-old son several years ago. The tragedy has triggered a number of psychological barriers between the two, although they are unable to face the cause of their problems.

> Johnson's performance was a pleasant surprise and will change the public's opinion of his acting ability.

Along comes 10-year-old Willard Young, impressively played by Elijah Wood. He has been sent to Paradise by his mother, (Eve Gordon), a childhood friend of Mrs. Reed's, who also suffers from the inability to face the reality of her husband's departure from the family. Wanting to protect Willard from the truth, she sent him to stay in the country for the summer.

Although understandably uncomfortable in his surroundings, Willard has the good fortune to befriend a local tomboy named Billie, a film debut for the spunky Thora Birch. The scenes between Willard and Billie are the film's best. Their childhood innocence is a poignant reminder of how wonderful it is to be young. Billie's aggressive spirit encourages Willard to come out of his shell and enables him to turn to help the Reeds come to terms with their loss.

Don Johnson's performance was a pleasant surprise. It will change the public's opinion of his acting ability. The scenes between Johnson and Wood are heart-warming, as the little boy insists on pursuing a relationship with his disillusioned guardian. Melanie Griffith is especially powerful in the scene where she confesses her guilt in their child's death.

The cinematography captures the tranquility of the countryside in Paradise, but we learn you cannot escape feelings of failure or betrayal.

Duvall saves 'Rose' from its perversity

By MAT A. TOENNIESSEN

"Ramblin' Rose"
Directed by Martha Coolidge
Seven Arts-Through New Line Cinema

"Ramblin' Rose" is a period piece film about a lost, nymphomaniac teenage girl who comes to live and work with a southern family during the Depression.

Rose, played by Laura Dern ("Wild At Heart"), is welcomed into the household by "Daddy," played with remarkable reserve by Robert Duvall. "It's a crime to hire another person to clean house. I prefer to think of you as a member of the family," Daddy says. Rose likes the idea and proceeds to love the family as her own.

She soon turns that love into lust for Daddy, who resists her sexual advances. Having been spurned, Rose sneaks into the room of the oldest son, 13-year-old Buddy, and lets him find out what a female body feels like firsthand.

This would be interesting enough if not for the extreme dislike one starts to feel for Rose as she goes through her motions. Ignoring the morals and styles of the time, she heads into town wearing a skintight dress, sans underwear and starts inviting men to the house and into her room.

Then Rose is arrested for starting a bar fight. She starts having an affair with the town doctor, becomes known as the town slut and finally forces Daddy to fire her. Unfortunately, Rose's apparent pregnancy prevents her removal, yet sets the stage for her eventual reacceptance to the family.

Directed by Martha Coolidge ("Valley Girl"), the film has a slow, disorienting pace to it. Dern is more obnoxious and annoying than ever. She whines and mumbles her lines in such a way that the viewer wishes another actor would slap her to shut her up.

Luckily, Robert Duvall saves the film as much as possible. His portrayal of Daddy is believable, human and his best performance in years. Duvall has the best lines; "Men are supposed to make (sexual) fools of themselves, not women;" the best actions; when he chases Rose's boyfriends away by foot or shotgun and the best motivation by bringing his house back to normal.

If it was not for Duvall, "Ramblin' Rose" would be more of a weak abstract film about the poor South. The film leads the viewer not to pity Rose, as the filmmakers expect, but to loathe and despise her. If the audience does not care about the main character, they cannot care about the film.

For Robert Duvall fans, "Ramblin' Rose" is a pleasure; otherwise find another way to spend your time and money.

'90210' flaunts new trends

By CHRISTINA FRANGOS
Assistant Entertainment Editor

Spotlight: Teen sagas have come and gone to daytime as well as primetime television. The depictions are usually awkward, inaccurate and obviously from an adult's view. While other stations hestitate to take a chance on "risky" programs, Fox has earned a reputation for doing just that. It's programming has turned the once forgotten station around and gained the attention of a large share of viewers.

"In Living Color," "The Simpsons" and "Married With Children" are just a few of the hits Fox has created. However the show which has everyone talking is "Beverly Hills 90210." This posh exhibition of the "in crowd" has affected every teenager from Los Angeles to Long Island, acclaimed by many as the most realistic of all shows in its genre.

What makes "90210" so unique is its down-to-earth coverage of pressing teen issues. Without hesitation the drama ranges from topics like premarital sex to alcoholism to gambling. At the same time it reveals new sides to common youth-related issues such as popularity, dealing with divorced parents and relationships.

Many of "90210's" fans tune in to see who's wearing what or to hear the daily gossip (which is pretty juicy at West Beverly), but the real attention getters are the extravagant and always handsome stars.

Brandon (Jason Priestley) is the adorable do-gooder and twin brother to Brenda (Shannon Dougherty). Most of the shows conflicts revolve around Brenda, who spends her time parading around with her flamboyant friends, Kelly (Jenny Garth) and Lisa (Tori Spelling). Her main attraction, and the show's focus is the rebellious Dillon (Luke Perry).

The James Dean good looks and mannerisms Perry fronts have made him a household name. Much like what "21 Jump Street" did for actors Richard Grieco and Johnny Depp, "90210" is turning Perry and Priestley into the teen idols of the '90s. And to think Fox was the catalyst for all four of these sex symbols. Could there be a connection? Is the new superstation using good looks, fast cars, controversial topics and hot clothes to pull itself out of the low ratings abyss?

Flash: Speaking of Fox and all the exciting things it is doing to our television options, last week marked the return of "Baywatch." After being dropped by NBC due to poor ratings, the show has been changed around. Now geared to a younger audience, it has brighter lights, faster boat chases, louder music and smaller bathing suits.

These are merely the attention getters, though. "Baywatch" does mix in interesting story lines involving timely issues. The show's ability to set trends and rampid dramatics could be based on the acting talents of David Hasselhoff (Knight Rider) and Parker Stevenson (Hardy Boys).

The combination of good looks and intelligence which the actors possess make "Baywatch" somewhat believable, although the season opener did leave much to be desired. Perhaps it had too much sizzle and not enough plot? Maybe the hi-fi boat rides confused viewers into believing they were watching MTV? Whatever the case may be, unless future episodes of "Baywatch" can combine their new chic image with realistic plots, the show's creators could be looking for yet another network to air their program . . .

Sparks: Michelle Pfeiffer and Al Pacino can be seen next week in their new film, "Frankie and Johnny." Since the last time the pair appeared together in "Scarface," Pfeiffer's status as an actress has changed. Movies such "The Fabulous Baker Boys," "Married To The Mob," and "The Russia House" have revealed her strengths and made her a contender as a top female star . . .

George Michael kicked off the U.S. leg of his "Cover To Cover" tour this week. The singer-gone-social recluse is sporting a much more mature, sophisticated image this time around. Mixed in with popular oldies "Freedom," "Careless Whisper" and "Father Figure" will be performances of R&B classics

Ozzy and Cult carry on

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

ROCK QUARRY

Ozzy. Perhaps recognized as the more familiar arena chant, "Ozzy! Ozzy! Ozzy!" Regardless, Ozzy Osbourne's return was inevitable and the time has come as No More Tears, rumored to be his last solo album, hits the racks.

Although the idea of a new Ozzy album might appear tired, you have to read between the lines. Free of suicidal messages, satanic symbolism and bat heads, No More Tears fairs well on the heavy metal rock-till-your-ear-drums-pop scale.

The majority of the credit for this praise goes to Osbourne's band. Guitarist Zakk Wylde, bassist Michael Inez and veteran Ozz drummer Randy Castillo take the spotlight even though they are second billed. The sound they create on songs such as "S.I.N." and the title track are piercing. They remain as one of the two crutches that are holding up Ozzy.

The other crutch is the producers and engineers, Duane Baron and John Purdell. Their work, especially evident through the Ozzy' vocals, keeps the album well formulated, balanced and above all, slick. Mix these attributes with a few of Ozzy's crackles, vocal grimaces and fanged lyrics and low and behold it works.

"Mr. Tinkertrain" and "Desire" are the leaders of the pack with more attacking howls and whammy bar action to fulfill any metal head. Meanwhile, the ballad "Mama, I'm Coming Home" proves Osbourne learned from his past hit duet with Lita Ford, "Close My Eyes Forever," that if you slow down the pace, the sales will rise.

"I can't stop rockin' because it drives my crazy," cries Ozzy desperately but gracefully seeking a comeback. There is something beautiful about the slow decaying process of a legend. Ozzy can still pack arenas, sell albums and T-shirts. No one can match his evil persona, even without the bat heads.

The Cult, by far, is one of the most underated bands in the market today. Past albums, Love, Electric and Sonic Temple were exotic if not extraordinary. The gerth of lead singer Ian Astbury has been pushed off to the side while Axl Rose (Guns N'Roses) has numerous temper tantrums in the public, beats up his neighbors and battles the press single handedly. On Ceremony, Astbury gasps for yet another stab as rock's leading frontman.

The Cult, once a four-some in 1987 then reduced to a three-some in 1989, is now a two member band. Long time guitarist Bill Duffy, sticks it out with Astbury as they team up with producer Richie Zito (Eddie Money) to tune up their chops.

The lead title track is the definitive bottom line for the Cult. Its thunderous energy surpasses past hits, "Fire Woman" and "Love Removal Machine." Zito's production help conger a fuller sound than Rick Rubin formulated on Electric.

Morrison-like Astbury scowls on tracks "Full Tilt" and first single, "Wild Hearted Son." But much like the young Indian brave donned in war paint on the cover, Astbury seems a bit intrusive. His depth seems to be overlooked by his internal anger. He comes to grips with this on tracks, "Indian" and "Wonderland" where Astbury reveals his code of "Earth, Soul and Rock-n-Roll."

Past Cult albums did have one fault: there was no break, no diversity, just strict rockers. Songs "If" and "White" live up to that reputation. However, "Sweet Salvation" and "Heart of Soul" are their penance. With a slower pace, yet without selling-out to commercial ballad-land, these songs carry a mystical aura about them.

The Cult refuses to give into the almighty dollar and they should be praised for that. But, their efforts are not recognized by the general public. With bands like Warrant and Winger on the charts, that might not be a bad thing . . .

SINGLE SPOTLIGHT: The Crue has returned, Motley Crue that is, with wonder producer Bob Rock heading for a hit with the lead single, "Primal Scream," from their greatest hits compilation, Decade of Decadence. Tommy Lee's sharp drums in combination with Mick Mars on the edge guitar chords put the track into a fine trash smash. Two more new tracks will follow.

PEBBLES: Van Halen has selected hard line new comers Alice in Chains as the opening band for their fall tour . . . Eric Clapton will release his 24 Nights live double album recorded last year at Albert Hall in London. He has already been writing for his next studio LP which will be dedicated to his deceased 5-year-old son . . . M.C. Hammer has taken up John Mellencamp's (formerly John "Cougar" Mellencamp) view upon things by changing his name to simply Hammer . . . Run-D.M.C. will release their greatest hits package, Together Forever, for the Xmas season.

Jones' Big Audio Dynamite explodes in Center City

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

Mick Jones, although small in stature, packs a walloping guitar riff as well as a funky beat. His revamped version of Big Audio Dynamite, with the addition of "II" tacked on the end, tore up the Chestnut Cabaret Sept. 23.

The Clash died a slow, painful death in the mid-80s. After a tremendous comeback with Combat Rock spawning hits, "Rock the Cashah" and "Should I Stay or Should I Go?" reviving the interest and injected the flavor of punk once again into the rock scene, along came Cut the Crap. The album lacked everything the Clash stood for, hence killing the band. Jones' B.A.D. II brings back that double guitar crunch.

"The 'II' stands for two guitars, so we're just gonna jam. Err ... K?," declared Jones as he, his three-man band and on-stage DJ kicked into "Kool-Aid" from their new album, The Globe.

The new band consisting of drummer Chris Kavanagh, guitarist Nick Hawkins and bassist Gary Stonadge overcame the original power of B.A.D. I. Stonadge's bass thump went head to head with Jones' classic guitar hooks. Old songs such as "Other 99," E=Mc²" and "Contact" swooned the audience into a dancing frenzy.

The two-set two-hour performance fed heavy off of The Globe. "Can't Wait," "Innocent Child" and the title track were welcomed with a warm response. The sampling from Jones' house DJ scratched some Clash songs but none were performed in their entirety.

The Clash died a slow, painful death in the mid '80's.

Encores of past hit, "Medicine Show" and new single, "Rush" closed the show. The version of "Rush" Jones and Co. performed was without the funky sampling but rather straight ahead rock-n-roll. The audience flooded the stage for a cover of Prince's "1999" capping off the evening.

Progressive-pop opening band the Farm were of high spirits performing hits, "All Together Now" and "Groovy Train" from their popular Spartacus LP. However, the audience was limp causing lead singer Peter Hooton to scream out, "What, do ya all have exams tomorrow?"

Rappers Downtown Science also were taken by a luke-warm response. The audience seemed to have a "jones" for something harder edged.

The Mighty Lemon Drops will appear at Chestnut Cabaret Oct. 9

Lemon Drops top their form

By E. VAUGHN VOGEL
Assistant Entertainment Editor

With a raw, sixties-sparked style, the tasty Mighty Lemon Drops bring with them a sound that reaches around your preconceptions. The Lemon Drops, headed by vocalist Paul Marsh, are at the top of their form: melodic, rollicking and a whole lot of fun.

Marsh, along with David Newton on guitar, Marcus Williams on bass and Keith Rowley on drums, formed the Lemon Drops in Wolverhampton, U.K., in 1985. Their sharp-edged pop and roll quickly caught the attention of local audiences, and their popularity soon spread. Before long the band found themselves in an extensive country-wide tour.

The Lemon Drops gained quick recognition in the states and barnstormed through the United States in 1990 on the famed Laughter tour with lablemates The Ocean Blue and John Wesley Harding.

Recently the Lemon Drops released their newest full-fledged studio album entitled Sound, featuring the track "Unkind." With a raw sound and electrifying energy, the Lemon Drops present a memorable performance.

The Mighty Lemon Drops can be seen live at the Chestnut Cabaret Oct. 9. Doors open at 8 p.m.

CABARET FLASH: Robert Hazard and the original Heroes, Ken Bernard, John Lilley, Rob Millers, Michael Philla and Jerry Weindel will reunite for two special nights Oct. 11 and 12.

The Chestnut Cabaret will be the place for the once in a lifetime concert reunion event of Hazard and the Heroes. Robert Hazard and the Heroes were the first Philadelphia band to release a successful, independent record.

These two nights promise to be the Chestnut Hill musical event of the year with a limited number of tickets. Don't be left on the sidewalk.

Soccer takes pair; now 5-2

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's soccer team improved its record to 5-2 with a pair of victories last week. The Cats overcame a 2-0 deficit to defeat Temple 3-2, then went on to beat Syracuse 1-0.

Two members of the team, junior Mike Guarino and freshman Ryan Daly, were honored for their outstanding play by the Big East conference and the Philadelphia Soccer 7 respectively.

The Wildcats took on the Temple Owls in the rain Sept. 24. They fell behind 2-0 early in the first half, before beginning to claw their way back when freshman walk-on Ryan Daly scored on a corner kick from Hector Campos at the 27:53 mark of the first half.

Trailing 2-1 at the half, the Cats tied the score just 1:35 into the second period. Once again, it was Ryan Daly who netted the goal, scoring from five yards out on a pass from junior Eric Hands. Twelve minutes later, Villanova took the lead for good when Hector Campos scored after a scramble in front of the goal. Junior Scott Aimetti was credited with an assist on the play.

Defensively, goalkeeper Guarino registered eight saves, including a diving, fingertip gem with just twelve seconds remaining.

The Cats travelled to Syracuse to take on the Orangemen in a Big East game Sept. 28. The teams were locked into a scoreless tie until senior Rich Maue scored the game's only goal on an assist from Daly with 22:38 remaining in regulation. The Cats prevailed 1-0. Guarino recorded six saves on the afternoon for his third shutout of the season.

Two Villanova players were singled out for their impressive play last week. Daly was named the Philadelphia Soccer 7 Co-Player of the Week for his two-goal performance against Temple. Daly, a freshman walk-on playing in only his second collegiate game, was a major factor in Villanova's 3-2 victory. He also contributed at Syracuse, assisting on the game's only goal in the 1-0 win. Also, junior goalie Guarino was named the Big East Conference Defensive Player of the Week. Guarino recorded his third shutout of the season in the Syracuse win, lowering his goals against average to 1.91 per game, and improving his save percentage to .774. This has been Guarino's first season of regular playing time, playing all 660 minutes of action this season after only playing just 167 career minutes prior to this year.

Villanova, now 2-1 in the Big East and 5-2 overall, will travel to St. Joseph's and LaSalle next week for a pair of Soccer 7 matchups.

Water polo opens strong

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The water polo team dominated the early rounds of its Wildcat Invitational, but suffered a heartbreaking loss to George Washington in the final game.

The Cats started the tournament against St. Francis College. Eight seconds into the game, Steve Abbott fired a shot into the goal and it was all Villanova from there. Solid defense by Brian Pearce, who had six steals, and Paul Cera kept the ball in the Cats' hands and allowed sophomore goalie Jeff Bodle to relax. When the pool calmed, the Wildcats were on top 14-6, and freshmen Jeff Bernaducci was the team's leading scorer with four goals. Kevin Engstrom and Marc Verotsky had three apiece.

> On Sunday we did not come to play.
> Head Coach Dan Sharidan

George Washington was the second team the Cats faced, and the team they would meet up with again in the finals. Seniors Engstrom and Abbott displayed their full offensive capabilities, scoring six and four goals, respectively. Adam Zakarian recorded 11 saves in goal as Villanova cruised to a 17-10 victory.

In their third game, the Wildcats faced Johns Hopkins, a team they had beaten a week earlier at a tournament in Annapolis. The effectiveness of Marc Verotsky was clearly evident as he consistently assisted and set up the open Villanova players for goals. Engstrom had five steals in the first quarter and scored four goals, while Bodle saved fifteen as Villanova conquered by a 17-11 margin.

Entering the final game, the Wildcats were the only unbeaten team. Having beaten George Washington on the previous day, they were highly favored to win. Villanova led 9-7 at halftime thanks to Abbott's three goals and Verotsky's three assists.

But the second half saw the Wildcats fall apart. "We played horrible," said Villanova coach Dan Sharidan. The Cats failed to score in the third quarter. This was due in part to George Washington's extremely physical defense and strong goalie. Steve Hinton was responsible for Villanova's only two goals in the second half as the Cats were unable to get or keep their hands on the ball and lost 14-11.

"The games we played in the prelims were played well. However, on Sunday we did not come to play," said Sharidan who was pleased with how the tournament ran, but was disappointed in his team's play in the final game.

Volleyball takes tourney

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Staff Reporter

The volleyball team captured the Drexel Invitational Tournament last weekend, defeating Drexel, Yale, and conference rival Georgetown. Villanova hosted Georgetown, and played at Drexel for the following two rounds.

The Georgetown match marked the Wildcats' first Big East competition of the season. Earlier in the year, the Hoyas beat the Cats in a non-conference match at the George Washington Invitational.

Against Georgetown, 'Nova overcame a slow start to prevail in four games (8-15, 15-10, 15-8, 15-11). "They were too charged in the first game," Coach David Berkley said of the team's last opener. "Once they settled down and realized what was available for them out there, they went out and took it."

Indeed, both the team and the rather large crowd turned it up a notch in the second game. The Cats utilized a solid overall effort to counter the play of the highly talented Hoyas. With every point Villanova scored, both the team and their fans seemed to get more focused.

Barkley found it difficult to point to any one player whose performance stood above the rest. "There's no one to single out tonight because all eleven players really did their job," he said.

"One reason we were able to win was because of the number of fans and the way the fans really were in it. Everybody was great, but this one section of fans was especially good — that group of painted faces."

> There's no one player to single out because all 11 players did their job.
> Head Coach David Barkley

Barkley himself was extremely enthused after the contest. "That's a great win because Georgetown is a great team. I'm very, very proud of them. I'm excited!"

The game had special meaning for outside hitter Mara Austrins, whose sister Lija plays for the Hoyas. When asked if competing against Lija affected her, Mara replied, "I still had it in the back of my mind. I served right to her. I was trying to intimidate her." She later added that beating her sister made the win "a lot sweeter."

The team was still drained from the Georgetown match when it played Yale. Barkley described the contest as being difficult mentally. "We were so emotionally consumed with our win against Georgetown that what we had to do to win was come out and execute. As long as we kept away from unforced errors, we were gonna win," he said.

Against Yale, 'Nova dropped the third game after winning the first two. But the Cats responded with a 15-0 blanking in the fourth and decisive frame. This marked the first time all season that the Cats have shut out an opponent in a game.

Villanova concluded the tournament by defeating Drexel in three straight games (15-10, 15-8, 15-12). The win raised the team's overall record to 13-2, its best start ever.

Becky Kulbago and Pam Clifford earned first team All-Tournament honors. Amy Burke and Vicky Dispenza were named to the second team. In addition, for the second consecutive week, a Villanova player was selected as the Big East Conference Volleyball Player of the Week. Kulbago, a sophomore mid-hitter, claimed this award for the week ending Sept. 29. Dispenza, a junior setter, received the award the previous week.

The Cats will play this weekend in the LaSalle Tournament. Barkley foresees the competition as being "a big mental practice. It is a tournament that we expect to win," he added.

Regan keeps close eye on Cats

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Assistant Sports Editor

"Where are the athletic dorms? What, no athletes driving around in brand-new convertibles? No classes in basket-weaving? Probably no cash payments from generous boosters either? That is no way to run a program."

This person obviously has been to Villanova. As we all know, there are no athletic dorms, no brand-new convertibles (driven by athletes anyway), no Weaving 101, no illegal cash payments from boosters. But the bottom line is we have an athletic program that is one of the most successful in the country. The University must be doing something right.

Every athlete, whether a future Hall of Famer or a third-stringer on the volleyball team is treated equally. And, according to Dan Regan, the academic advisor for the athletes, he wouldn't have it any other way.

"We are totally committed to running an intercollegiate program right and being successful," said Regan.

The track record of Villanova at the NCAA is proof of t(is. With so many universities facing penalties and investigations, the one school never mentioned is Villanova. The man responsible &or actually maintaining this reputation that 'Nova enjoys is the academic advisor. So how does he do it?

"What I do at Villanova is supervise the academic careers of the athletes, abide by t(e rules set forth by the NCAA, and maintain the academic posture at Villanova," said Regan.

"We must make tutors available to the athletes. That is a rule of the NCAA. An athlete (ere at Villanova must maintain a 2.0 GPA to be eligible. If not, I must declare that athlete ineligible for the semester. If the GPA falls under a 2.3, study hall is then mandatory."

When it comes to scheduling, athletes go through the same hectic process all students do. They receive their registration date in the mail and sometimes must encounter drop and add. Regan will help an athlete if he or she needs to have a class worked around practices or games. Then he has to contact the deans and "make some pleas but [we] usually work it out somehow."

Regan is responsible for 27 teams and 580 athletes. He works with a staff of four regular academic advisors, and must report to his boss, Vice President of Academic Affairs the Rev. Lawrence Gallan, O.S.A. Regan enforces the standards according to how the administration and the NCAA want programs run.

> We are totally committed to running an intercollegiate program right and being successful.
> Academic Advisor Dan Regan

Regan is not involved with the admissions office. "Thank God, no," he said. "I come into play when the athletes get here, and I have no contact with the admissions office. I work with the athletic department, student and the student's family." However, Regan does talk with recruits about the academic expectations the University maintains.

There had been speculation that academics played a part in Lloyd Mumford being dismissed from the basketball team. Head Coach Rollie Massimino has graduated every player that has been in his program for four full years, so was Mumford struggling academically?

"Lloyd was in excellent academic standing. There was no problem at all, and I never once was contacted by any professors," said Regan.

In the eighties, cheating was said to be rampant at many schools and education took a back seat to the sports department. That trend started to shift with the implementation of Proposition 48 in 1986. It declared athletes that failed to score a combined 700 on the SAT's ineligible for their freshman year. Therefore, the athlete would have only three years of remaining eligibility.

"I really have no faith in the SAT's," said Regan, "but a great part of Prop. 48 that a lot of people don't know is that it requires progress toward a degree. I remember in the eighties there were football players that would drop their classes in December and not receive any penalty. Now they have to carry at least 12 credits per semester to stay eligible."

Villanova has never admitted a Proposition 48 student. Regan knows the SAT's are culturally biased, but admits there is "no chance of a student getting accepted at Villanova who did not score a 700."

"A major reason why we do so well is that we recruit good students. They are capable of succeeding at Villanova even without their athletic background," said Regan. "Our size is also a factor."

After 18 years, Regan has seen the world of college athletics spiral into a win-at-all costs mentality. But he feels strongly that a program can abide by all the rules and excel both on the court or field and in the classroom. "In general, cheaters are down to a minimal," said Regan.

An ex-jock, Regan enjoys the sports background of his job. The paper-work is the only drawback, but for the most part, it's "been fun," said Regan. Although he is a little biased, Regan sums it up well. "We do it right, the best in the country."

Wildcats break streak

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

The women's field hockey team put an end to its misfortunes Sept. 29, stopping Boston College at home 1-0. With this win, the Wildcats broke a five-game winless streak and raised their record to 2-4-1. This win was also the season's first in the Big East, in which they now hold a 1-2 record.

Before this victory, however, Villanova fell victim to another frustrating loss. The team faced neighborhood rival Drexel, and lost 1-0 Sept. 24. It was the third time this season the Cats lost by one goal, a point of frustration for both players and coaches alike.

The stickwomen returned to Villanova Stadium to face B.C. with hopes of turning their luck around. As usual, the Wildcats looked dominant early on in the game, and blasted the Boston College defense throughout the first half. Several shots narrowly missed becoming 'Nova points, including one missile that bounced off the B.C. post.

The Eagles' luck could not hold up forever under this kind of attack, and captain Missy Paolantionio made this apparent when she drove one home at 32:20 in the first half. This gave the Wildcats a 1-0 lead as they headed to the sidelines for halftime.

'Nova put Boston College back on the defensive quickly as the second half began. The Wildcats kept the ball in the B.C. half most of the period, and kept constant pressure on the Eagle defense. Although the Wildcats were unable to put it in the net, they were controlling the game until the last three minutes.

In these final few minutes, the Eagles looked as though they could have set Villanova back with another close loss. The ball was up for grabs in front of the Villanova net after a corner hit, as Wildcat goalie Chrissy Thomas kicked the ball out of danger. With less than one minute remaining, the Eagles had one last chance to take this one with a fast break. This one was quickly broken up, and Villanova got its first victory.

Paolantonio, possessor of the game's only goal, later said, "We played well as a team today. We were passing the ball and we worked well together."

Coach Jackie Gerzabek also had praise for the improved team play of her troops. "We finally finished the ball," she said. "We still need to score a little bit more, but everyone played one hundred percent."

The Wildcats hope to carry their improved level of play into Temple tomorrow.

Villanova v. Boston University

The Wildcats hope to jump out to a 4-0 conference record and solidify their Top 10 status nationally with a win over the Terriers. Boston, looking for its first conference win, must play its best game of the year to stop the Cats, who have steamrolled every opponent this year. The seemingly overmatched BU team's only hope of winning would be a defensive struggle. The defense, which returns ten starters from last year, is solid and experienced. The Terrapins possess one of the best groups of linebackers in the conference, led by all-Yankee candidate John Dowd. If the backers can stymie 'Nova on the ground, Boston could stay in the game. Unfortunately, no one had stopped the Cat rushing attack, which averages 212.0 yards per game.

Offensively, the Terrapins are rebuilding with only one senior, fullback Jay Hillman, starting. The offensive line, comprised of two freshman and one sophomore will be thrown to the wolves against a dominating Cat front seven. If the Terrapins gain more than 200 yards total offense, it will be a moral victory.

Golf scores sixth

In defense of its Big East title, the golf team placed a disappointing sixth in the annual conference championships this past weekend. The event was held at the Tournament Players Club in Potomac, Md.

Big East newcomer University of Miami claimed the 36-hole event, dominating both days of competition. The host team, Georgetown University, took second place, finishing 30 strokes behind the Hurricanes. Also topping Villanova were Providence, St. Johns and UConn.

The TPC at Avenel course is a stadium-style layout with tricky water hazards and large, undulating greens. It has hosted the Big East Championship for the past four years, and is also to the PGA Tour's Kemper Open.

"It's a great course that's very penalizing if you don't hit good shots. This weekend we all struggled, and you can't succeed on a course like this one unless you're on top of your game," said Chris Cox, a member of last year's Big East champion team.

Villanova occupied sixth place after Saturday's round, shooting a team total of 327. Sunday proved equally frustrating for the Wildcats as they posted a 328 for a two-day aggregate of 655. Miami's impressive total of 608 earned it a victory in its Big East debut.

Villanova took a young team to the conference championships this year, including freshmen Jon Kelly and Chad Wasserman and sophomore Jason Cordes.

"We really have a strong team, but we're basically young, so a tough weekend like this can be a good learning experience. We just have to play hard everyday and work to break out of this slump that we're in," said Cordes.

The Wildcats will travel to University Park, Pa. this weekend to compete in the Penn State Invitational.

Tennis takes fifth in a row

The women's tennis team raised its record to 10-3, winning four of its five matches last week.

In a 7-1 win over Delaware, the Wildcats won five of the six singles matches. Senior Krista Chamberlain and sophomore Julie Homicz dominated their Blue Hen opponents.

The Cats pulled out a 5-4 victory over Army Sept. 26. Sophomore Carolyn Daley led Villanova as she won her #1 singles match in 6-2 and 6-4 sets. The team also won four of the next five singles matches.

Queens College forfeited its match for the third Villanova win of the week.

Villanova visited New York University Sept. 29, and blanked the home team 8-0. Senior Michelle Bush and freshman Kerry Dillon shut down their opponents in the #5 and #6 singles matches.

The Wildcats lost 6-3 at Lafayette University Sept. 30. With the help of Dillon the Cats tied their opponents in singles play. She won the #6 singles match with 6-2 and 6-2 sets. However, Lafayette secured the victory by sweeping the doubles matches.

Villanova hopes to continue its consisted play during Parents' Weekend. The Wildcats host St. John's University tomorrow at 11 a.m. and face Fordham University at Seton Hall Sunday at noon.

No. 8 Cats turn back Huskies, 35-13

Trailing 13-7 at the half, the Cats were in jeopardy of losing not only their home opener, but their first game of the year.

It wouldn't last.

UConn's fun was short-lived as the Cat offense took the ball four times in the second half and scored touchdowns each time to blow away the Huskies 35-13. On the strength of the victory, the Cats are now eighth in the latest Division I-AA Poll.

"We stopped ourselves in the first-half," said Head Coach Andy Talley. That is evident in the first-half statistics which show that 'Nova outgained UConn 247-171 in total yards. The Cats had 13 first downs to UConn's seven.

Linebacker Curtis Eller, who had seven tackles, attributed the half-time deficit to "only two big plays." The first one came in the first quarter when, on a 4th-and-8 from the 'Nova 19-yard line, Huskie quarterback Cornelius Benton (9 for 18, 98 yards passing) eluded the Villanova pass rush and hit a wide-open Leonard Dandridge for a touchdown to tie the game at seven.

The other big play occurred in the second quarter when running back Dandridge (12 carries, 121 yards) burst through the middle for a 63-yard gain all the way to the 'Nova 5-yard line before being hauled down from behind by 'Nova cornerback Mike Brown.

Meanwhile, the Cats were moving the ball up and down the field but had only one TD to show for it. A missed field goal, an interception and an incompletion on fourth down from the Huskie 16 all ended drives that stalled deep in Huskie territory.

But the second half brought out a whole new breed of Cat. The offense took the kickoff and went 68 yards in 5:20 to take a 14-13 lead. The drive was grounded out by backs Pat Kennedy and Jeff Johnson, and was capped off by a Johnson two-yard scamper. The Cats never faced a third down, and the drive would enable them to regain the momentum.

> .The offensive line matured today. It really stepped up.
> Head Coach Andy Talley

"Everything's not going to be perfect, if you think it's going to be you're crazy," said quarterback Tom Colombo, who had another consistent day completing 23 of 31 for 257 yards. "I looked at the second half as a great opportunity to prove myself. I took it as a personal hurdle."

After the defense held, Colombo led the Cats down to the Huskie 21-yard line where they faced a fourth and 5. After a time out, Colombo bobbled a low snap out of the shotgun and rolled out amidst the pressure of the Huskie defense. He dumped the ball across the middle as tight end Scott Donald broke free. Donald snagged it and scored, making it 21-13 Cats.

"That was a very, very big play," said Talley. "We were running a wide delay and Colombo was able to slip it into the middle."

That would be more than enough for the Cat defense. The defensive line was giving Benton no time to pass and a hamstring injury to Dandridge killed the Huskie offense. But there was no stopping the Cats in the second half.

"The offensive line matured today. It really stepped up," said Talley. Kennedy also sung the praises of the line saying it is "the best offensive line since I've been here."

After the game, Talley praised the Huskies, saying "their offense is very potent" and that the 0-4 Huskies "will beat teams this year." Fortunately for the Cats, they turned up the heat in the second half to avoid the upset.

Tomorrow, the Cats will go for their fifth win in a row against a 1-3 Boston University team that is rebuilding offensively. Using the UConn game as a learning experience, 'Nova will look to jump out on the Terriers at Villanova Stadium.

"The team reached up to another level and we have the ingredients to go very far," said Talley.

NOTES: After this week's game, the Cats will have two weeks to prepare for a first-place showdown at 5th-ranked Delaware Oct. 19.

Women improve to 6-3-1

By ED WASIELEWSKI

Coming off a tough loss to Providence College, the women's soccer team rebounded with a solid week, raising its overall mark to 6-3-1. The Cats trounced the University of Maryland 5-1 and Buffalo State University 6-1, before playing Colgate University to a 2-2 deadlock.

In a bizarre contest against Maryland, the Cats emerged with a 5-1 overtime win. Early in the first half, freshman Marcy Micek headed in the game's first score, beating the Terrapin goalkeeper who slipped on the wet artificial turf in Villanova Stadium. Staked to a 1-0 lead, 'Nova successfully bottled up the Terrapin offense through the first 45 minutes of action.

In the second half, the Cats repelled numerous Maryland charges at the net as keeper Karen Del Sarto made several clutch saves down the stretch. Yet with only 1:16 remaining in regulation, the Terrapins struck paydirt when Randy Goldblatt took a corner kick and beat the 'Nova defense to send the game into overtime.

Having lost to Maryland the last three years, Head Coach Don Paxson was weary of the Terps' last-minute score.

"It was like the kiss of death. We often outplay Maryland, but they usually come up with a weird play to pull it out," he said.

After playing a scoreless first overtime, the Cats erupted to score four times in the second extra session. Only :28 into the period, Tina Conti set up Micek for the winning score. The Cats continued to pounce on the rattled Terrapins with Gail Kegolis and Sharon Hewitt (two goals, one assist) adding insurance scores. Conti was credited with four assists on the afternoon.

"It feels great (to beat Maryland)," said Paxson. "I thought we deserved to win that kind of game." Paxson also praised his defense, in particular the triumvirate of Nikki Thelen, Dawn Clancy and Karen Del Sarto who "played an exceptional game."

With the victory over Maryland, Conti looked ahead to the rest of the schedule. "The season's half over and it's only going to get tougher. We have some upcoming ECAC (tournament) related games which we're really going to have to motivate ourselves for."

The Cats next traveled to Colgate, where they confronted Buffalo State Univ. and the host Red Raiders. In a lopsided affair, 'Nova pounded Buffalo State 6-1 as five Wildcats provided the offense. Micek tallied two scores in the first half and Rachel Moreau, Tina Conti, Kim Mullany and Sharon Hewitt each pumped in a second-period goal. The Cats outshot their opponents 21-11 as keeper Del Sarto faced only three shots on goal.

After two dramatic victories, 'Nova faced a challenging Red Raider team that played even with the Cats throughout the game. At 25:01 in the first period, Micek laced her team-leading sixth goal of the season. The Colgate offense responded with a score with only five seconds remaining in the first half. The Red Raiders hit again 5:18 into the second period before Sara Levandusky erased the 2-1 deficit with her second goal this season. The teams matched each other statistically as the Cats outshot Colgate 24-16. Del Sarto saved 11 shots as the Red Raider goalie was called upon to turn away 17 'Nova shots en route to the 2-2 deadlock.

EXTRA POINTS

Cats move to 1-a both risky and premature

By TOM COLLINS AND CHRIS ABELES
Sports Editors

Despite the football team's 4-0 record and No. 8 Division I-AA national ranking, there is still talk of a jump to Division I-A. If 'Nova is to move up to Division I-A, it will have to increase its scholarship offerings to 85, in addition to increasing its home seating.

Also, the Cats would join the Big East Conference, according to proposals. Besides the financial problems such a move would cause, Cats players would also have problems on the field, facing such powerhouses as Miami, Pittsburgh and Syracuse.

All factors considered, would it be wise to make such a risky move? This jump would be premature. With the school's current economics, a tuition hike due to the extra $30 million spent on the jump to I-A would not be well received by the student populace.

Another problem which could result in more loss of funds would be attendance. With the jump, Villanova Stadium could not be used due to lack of seating. Instead, the team would have to find a stadium that would meet the number of seats set forth by the Division I-A committee. This move could put 'Nova's home stadium a good distance from the campus population. So the problem faced is the possible drop in attendance due to the lack of accessibility to the students and town members, which comprise a good deal of the crowd at home contests.

With the transfer, it would take 'Nova a good deal of time to establish itself as a potential contender in the strong Big East conference. Even though Villanova has risen extremely fast in the rankings since the football program was re-introduced in 1985, starting out in Division I-A will be much harder. In financially tight times, fans would have to ask themselves if they would pay an increased ticket price in addition to transportation costs to see overmatched Villanova play national powerhouse Miami.

Villanova's football team has become a Yankee conference powerhouse. The current success it is experiencing should be enjoyed. In the long run, a switch to Division I-A could be very rewarding, but at this point in time a jump could put both the team and the University in jeopardy.

Senate meets today

By LARISA EPATKO and JENNIFER CASTELLI

The University Senate will hold its second meeting of the 1991-92 year today at 4 p.m. in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

The Executive Committee is scheduled to question the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of Arts and Sciences, on the proposed changes to the College of Arts and Sciences' core curriculum.

Specifically, the committee will question why Ellis bypassed the existing sub-committee of the Academic Policy Committee in favor of a separate Ad-Hoc committee responsible for developing the proposed "controversial" core curriculum.

The Senate will also inquire what the "primary reason" was for altering the "traditional core curriculum of a very respectable University," according to the Senate agenda.

The Executive Committee cited its power of interpellation, which mandates that administrators who are addressed by the Executive Committee must respond to the University Senate, in the questions addressed to Ellis.

The University Senate will also discuss topics to be presented to the University's Board of Trustees, and will hear a report from the Budget Committee.

Lottery applications for basketball tickets due today

By ANTHONY PALLADINO

All lottery applications for basketball tickets are due to the Athletics Office today.

For a price of $130, tickets are available for 10 games at duPont Pavilion and four Spectrum games, as the Wildcats play top ranked teams.

"All of the students who applied for the lottery last year received tickets," said Dr. Theodore Aceto, director of Intercollegiate Athletics.

Of the 1,844 seats set aside for the students, about 55 are reserved for the band and 90 are held for new recruits. Students who submit lottery applications then bid for the remaining 1,699 seats.

Of the 4,656 of 6,500 seats not sold to students, a large number of tickets are reserved for Villanova alumni, advertisers and various other contributors. Those seats are not offered at the $5 student price, but at costs of $12, $15 and $25, Aceto added.

Although the student tickets are offered at discounted prices, some students feel the University is taking advantage of them. "DuPont should have seats for all of the students and not have as

Another week of classes will be added in '92-'93

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Staff Reporter

Beginning with the 1992-93 school year, Villanova will add another week of classes to both the fall and spring semesters, said the Rev. Lawrence C. Gallen, O.S.A., vice president for Academic Affairs. According to this new plan, Villanova students will attend classes for 14 weeks per semester plus one week of exams, as opposed to the current schedule of 13 weeks of classes and one week of exams.

The new schedule was proposed directly to the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, by the Faculty Affairs Committee of the University Senate, and Dobbin agreed that another week of classes should be added.

"It is the students of Villanova who are cheated by the current schedule followed at the University. It would only prove beneficial to the students to add another week of class to each semester," Gallen said.

The proposal has been sent to the Academic Policy Committee of the Senate. Members of the University Senate and a selected subcommittee will meet Oct. 31 to determine how another week of classes will be fit into the current semester schedule.

It has not been determined if Fall and Spring breaks will be affected by this new schedule, Gallen said.

Local police issue citations at parties

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

Police departments in the Villanova area have issued citations and made arrests this year at several beer parties in Wayne, Bryn Mawr and Ardmore for violation of Pennsylvania laws on underage drinking, disorderly conduct and public drunkenness.

The Havertown officers take "swift and decisive action" against violators and issue no warnings, said Lt. James Metzler of the Havertown Police Department. Once they receive a complaint from a resident, the officers make "appropriate arrests and issue summary citations to violators and persons who supply beer or alcohol without a license from the state," Metzler said.

A four-keg beer party at a home in the 600 block of Dayton Road in Bryn Mawr was raided by Havertown police Sept. 6. The officers cited 36 people for underage drinking.

A second party took place Sept. 7 on the 2500 block of Rosemont Ave., Ardmore, where 22 participants were cited for underage drinking and disorderly conduct. The Havertown police again confiscated four kegs.

Violators of the underage drinking law have their driving privileges suspended if they are convicted of lying about their age to obtain alcohol; purchasing, consuming, possessing or transporting alcohol; or caught carrying a false identification card.

A first underage drinking offense results in the loss of driving privileges for 90 days, a second offense causes the violator to lose driving privileges for a year and three or more offenses results in the loss of a license for two years.

Two incidents at private residences on Conestoga Road and on School Lane in Wayne required police action last week, Lt. Jerry Gregory, of the Radnor Police Department said. "The officers on discovered a large amount of underage drinkers," Gregory added.

Fines that accompany the loss of driving privileges can amount to $300 and are determined by Judge Beverly Foster for the Villanova area, not the police department, Gregory said.

People do not have to be in or near a car, have a driver's license or be old enough to drive for the underage drinking law to apply, according to the Pennsylvania Liquor Control Board.

Police action since Sept. 4 is normal beginning of the year activity, said Lt. John Malloy, watch commander, patrol division

Council revises risk policy

By THOMAS BROWN
Staff Reporter

The Interfraternity Council (IFC) and the Panhellenic Council passed a new Risk Management Policy Oct. 1. The proposal passed after the councils voted unanimously to implement the new policy.

Greek leaders were pleased that the new policy passed unanimously because fraternities and sororities have been without a risk management policy since last spring. IFC and the Panhellenic Council voted to remove the previous risk management policy, saying it was "unworkable."

Several elements of the old policy have been included in the new policy. Possession and consumption of alcoholic beverages at any Greek sponsored event will be in compliance with all state, township and University regulations; illegal drugs will not be permitted; all rush activities will not involve alcohol; hazing will not be permitted in any form; and sexual harassment or abuse will be strictly forbidden.

The old policy restricted Greek-sponsored open parties, the purchase of alcohol with treasury funds and kegs and alcohol at pledge functions. The new policy does not mention any of these restrictions.

The new policy includes several additions to the old policy. Fraternity/sorority co-sponsored events that include alcohol will be limited to three hours in length and safe transportation must be readily available.

Chapter leaders must participate in educating their members on liability awareness, substance abuse and the contents of the new policy. All Greeks will be required to attend at least one sexual harassment/abuse seminar.

Scott O'Neil, IFC president, said that the drafters of the new policy were like a "unified front."

Elliott Abrahms, the former assistant secretary of State who was an advocate of armed support for the Nicaraguan rebels, pleaded guilty Oct. 8 on two misdemeanor counts of withholding information from Congress about secret efforts to aid the guerrillas.

Abrahms' guilty pleas may open an avenue for investigators as they make a final push to broaden their search for wrongdoing in the Reagan Administration.

Independent prosecutor Lawrence Walsh recently dropped all charges against Oliver North, the main figure in this case, but he made headway in pursuing efforts to conceal the affair at the Central Intelligence Agency. The Abrahms investigation takes Walsh for the first time into the Reagan State Department.

Seven weeks after a failed coup attempt finally put an end to communism, the "democrats" who followed Boris Yeltsin to power in Russia and other republics are quarrelling over what is left of the old empire.

Quick to proclaim "sovereignty" and independence, the republics have been far slower to negotiate a common market and to begin long-promised reforms. Tribal conflicts continue to smolder across the country.

The giant Russian federation, to which other republics should be looking for political leadership, has barely managed to cope with its own political conflict.

Computer Science accredited

By SONNY THOMPSON
Staff Reporter

The recent accreditation of the full-time undergraduate computer science program from the Computer Science Accreditation Board (CSAB) is well timed for the computer job market, said Dr. Robert Beck, director of Computer Science.

Beck worked with the faculty to improve the quality of the teachers, classes, facilities and curriculum of the program in order to meet standards of the CSAB.

The accreditation is a self-evaluation process that consists of a 300-page evaluation discussing every aspect of the program.

The evaluation staff consisted of impartial members formed by the computer science program. Currently, the program consists of 12 faculty members, 65 undergraduate majors and 250 part-time students.

Beck hopes that news of the accreditation will reach high school applicants and help them decide to enroll at the University. "Computer science offers substantial opportunities to high school students interested in computing," he added.

The University joins the group of a growing number of schools who have received accreditation for this program. Presently, there are 107 universities, including Drexel and Lehigh, that have computer science accreditation. Ten to 12 universities are accredited every year.

The computer science program's next step is to form a department of computer science separate from the math department.

The department hopes to fit the needs of the growing number of students interested in careers in computing, Beck said.

The number of businesses who are coming to Beck to hire graduating students has increased and many employers prefer to hire computer students who understand a more technical side of the business.

The expansion to meet the accreditation guidelines provides students with opportunities in a difficult job market. It also represents one of many enhancements the University has planned for the future, Beck said.

Parents enjoy a weekend at 'Nova

By MARYBETH GOELLER
Staff Reporter

Parents and students participated in numerous activities held over Parents' Weekend, Oct. 4-6. The weekend's activities were sponsored by the Student Programming Council.

The weekend began Oct. 4 with an Oktoberfest held at Connelly Center. Hoagies and beer were served to parents and students, while cultural music was broadcast through the Villanova Room. "It was a great way to begin Parents' Weekend. I loved the idea that everyone was given the chance to become reacquainted with each other," one sophomore said.

Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities, was one of the coordinators of the weekend. "Overall, the weekend was a very successful one, one of the most successful ever. Over 800 families bought tickets, and the Oktoberfest on Friday night was the greatest turnout, as well as the Music Review."

Parents were given the opportunity to meet and speak with the different deans from each school on Saturday morning, who discussed the various Honors Programs as well as general academic procedures.

"I thought the football game was a definite factor of Parents' Weekend, which demonstrated the large amount of school spirit everyone has here. It made me want to return to my college years," said Mrs. Oona Clare, mother of freshman Melissa Clare.

A Musical Review was held in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse Saturday night. Over 200 students and campus personnel donated their time and energy into making the night a success.

Rafaella Steen, a member of the Glee Club and part of the mini-musical "Godspell," said, "There was a great turnout and we definitely enjoyed all the support we got."

Musical numbers included pieces from the Jazz Ensemble, the Student Musical Theater which presented "Fiddler on the Roof," "Godspell," "Barnum" and "Anything Goes" and the Dance Ensemble and Glee Club.

"The show was a lot of fun and the audience really seemed to have a good time," Steen said.

The weekend came to a close Sunday, with a family mass in duPont Pavilion for all the families.

Following mass, several brunches were held around campus.

Pro-life group sponsors speakers

By JENNIFER CASTELLI

Villanovans for Life observed "Respect Life Week '91" by sponsoring three speakers who discussed abortion Oct. 8-10 in the Connelly Center. The speakers were Dr. Joseph Betz, Rebecca King and Joan Bydell.

> . . . at least 100 female Villanova students went to the Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center in Bryn Mawr for information and services.
> Dr. Joseph Betz, philosophy and moderator of Villanovans for Life.

Betz critiqued Judith Jarvis Thompson's book A Defense of Abortion on Oct. 8. Thompson's book was originally published in 1971, one and a half years before the precedent setting case Roe v. Wade legalized abortion.

He added that in the past year, at least 100 female Villanova students went to the Amnion Crisis Pregnancy Center in Bryn Mawr for information and services.

Betz criticized the book by offering opposition to Thompson's use of "argument by analogy." In one analogy, Thompson claimed that a fetus was to a baby like an acorn was to an oak.

Thompson writes that abortion is justified in cases when the right to life of a fetus comes in conflict with the right to life of the pregnant woman or the right of the woman to control what happens in or to her own body, recounted Betz.

The "wildly imaginative" analogies of Thompson do not "earn her the right of her conclusion because there are too many dissimilarities in her analogies," he said.

Rebecca King discussed minorities and abortion Oct. 9 and Joan Bydell spoke on post-abortion syndrome Oct. 10.

Recycling projects promote awareness

By JIM DOWNS
Staff Reporter

The University's recycling program benefited from a new program Oct. 7 involving the pick-up of aluminum cans from accessible places in each residency hall by the Student Activities' van. This will continue every Monday through the efforts of Residence Life, the Resident Student Association (RSA), the Villanova Environmental Group (VEG), Student Government and superintendent of Grounds/Recycling coordinator Kevin O'Donnell.

The University does not profit from the proceeds of the recycled goods. "We just break even. We are recycling because it is environmentally positive," said O'Donnell.

O'Donnell implemented an incentive program to encourage residence hall participation in exchange for cash to be used in the house council's treasury.

"Everyone generates trash and is responsible to reduce it," said O'Donnell.

This is the second year of the recycling effort at the University. With the success of this phase, the program may expand to include newspaper and glass, said Mark O'Rourke, Student Government president.

The addition of the van in the recycling program should greatly increase the amount of recycling, since last year students were expected to bring their recyclable to duPont Pavilion, said O'Rourke.

Student Government ships the items to various vendors in the area to be processed. "If it was not for Student Government, recycling would not work," said O'Donnell.

VU offers new alternatives for healthy lifestyles

By CHRISTINE FINGERHUT
Staff Reporter

Attitudes on college campuses across the nation reflect a national awareness to eat healthy and exercise more, and Villanova is no exception. Between free daily aerobic classes and "Lite-Line" desserts in the dining halls, Villanova University seems to promote healthy lifestyles.

According to Dr. Norman Pitt, assistant director of the Counseling Center, 37 percent of the nations' undergraduate students suffer from bulemia or anorexia. Many people rationalize compulsive eating or enormous weight loss on a health food basis but such obsessive eating habits are not healthy dietary habits, said Pitt.

The Counseling Center sponsors an Eating Awareness Group that meets once a week for eight sessions. The group is not only limited to people who suffer from anorexia or bulemia; anyone who has any questions concerning eating habits is invited to attend the meetings.

Pitt does not feel that the University is necessarily promoting a "thin is best" attitude, but rather the University is reaffirming a national attitude to eat healthier and exercise more. By offering students the option of healthier foods and the availability of exercise facilities, Villanova creates an awareness for each individual to make his or her own health conscious decisions.

According to Carol S. Fagan, R.D., a nutritionist in the Food Services department, Villanova promotes healthier eating choices for a lifetime, not dieting for immediate weight loss results. This year the dining halls offer "Lite-Line" desserts and low fat salad dressings, which reduce the risk of heart disease.

Also available to students this year is 2 percent milk instead of whole milk, and the choice between unfried chicken breast and items such as fried turkey nuggets. By offering both choices side-by-side, Fagan says that Villanova teaches lifetime choices for healthier eating habits, all of which is a reflection of the national awareness of healthier eating.

Correction

Due to a printer error in the October 4, 1991 issue of the Villanovan, an article titled "New task force formed to focus on AIDS awareness" incorrectly quoted Gary Bonas, assistant director of Student Activities.

The quote should have stated, "At Villanova University as many as 195 students might be HIV [Human Immunodeficiency Virus] positive," rather than "as many as 195 students are HIV [Human Immunodeficiency Virus] positive."

The Villanovan regrets this error.

Law Review Symposium

Courtesy School of Law

The Villanova Law Review will sponsor its 26th Annual Symposium on Oct. 26 at 1 p.m. at the University School of Law in Room 29. The symposium will address the topic "The Right to Personal Autonomy: Integrating Legal and Psychological Perspectives."

Individuals are generally entitled to self-determination regarding fundamental issues such as medical care, finances, living situation, wills, marriages and sexual behavior. The right to make such decisions may be removed by our legal system and certain groups of people are particularly susceptible to having these rights removed — children, senior citizens and persons with mental illness or retardation," said Louis Cali, symposium editor for the Villanova Law Review.

"This Law Review Symposium will focus on ways in which psychological science can contribute to legal treatment of the right of vulnerable populations to autonomous decision making," said Stephen Anderer, managing symposioum editor.

Speakers will include Dr. Donald Bersoff, J.D., director of the Villanova/Hahnemann Law and psychology program; David Wexler, J.D., professor of psychology and law at the University of Arizona; Bruce Winick, J.D., professor of law at the University of Miami School of Law; James Ellis, J.D., professor of law at the University of New Mexico School of Law; Elizabeth Scott, J.D., professor of law at the University of Virginia School of Law; William Altman, J.D., from the United States Department of Health and Human Services, formerly with the American Psychological Association; Dr. Michael Smyer, professor at Pennsylvania State University and Dr. Patricia Parmelee, from the Philadelphia Geriatric Center.

The symposium is open to the public. The University School of Law is located in Garey Hall at the corner of Spring Mill and County Line roads in Villanova. For more information call 645-7050.

Education officials request change in crime reporting

By College Press Service

Students may be able to get more detailed information about crime on their campuses if Congress amends a federal privacy-protection law many colleges have been citing to withhold security reports.

The U.S. Department of Education, which oversees most federal college programs, asked July 11 that the Family Educational Rights and Privacy Act (FERPA), a 1974 law known as the Buckley Amendment, be changed to allow campuses to release crime reports to the public.

Most state open-records laws require the release of reports by campus officers with the power to make arrests, but most colleges have refused to release the reports, citing the Education Department's interpretation of the Buckley Amendment.

As the law is written, the department says, it is illegal to release campus crime reports that include the names of students arrested by campus security officers.

The law, Education Secretary Lamar Alexander said in a statement, "has made it difficult, sometimes impossible, for a college to report campus crime. That makes no sense. The federal government shouldn't keep colleges from making campus crime information available to students and their families. I don't think Congress ever expected that."

of the Lower Merion Township Police Department. "In my 30 years here it has been my experience that the new freshmen come in and classes aren't into the pressure of work, papers and finals, so they have a lot of free time on weekends and during the week," Malloy said.

It is a perception that the police are stricter on University students than others in the community, Gregory said, adding that "we are not looking for Villanova students ... We're public service-oriented; it's not our main priority to make arrests."

Radnor police found years ago that issuing warnings were not effective, said Gregory. "The neighbors got very upset ... and put a tremendous amount of pressure on us."

Radnor Township's noise ordinance states that noise from resident homes should not reach the street. If officers verify a complaint about noise, they will talk to the owners of the house and make arrests if the situation does not improve, Gregory said.

Radnor police responded to 320 noise-related incidents from Jan. 1 to Oct. 9. No one was arrested but a large percentage involved Villanova students, said Gregory.

Since Jan. 1, 255 people received citations for underage drinking, disorderly conduct and public drunkenness. "Not all of these are related to Villanova students, but a lot occurred at Smokey Joe's, Radnor House, Villanova University and [Minella's] Diner," said Gregory.

"There will always be a few who pull out shrubs and break windows; it's the 1 percent who do something that bring the heat down on everyone else," Gregory added.

primarily concerned with the safety of Greeks at Villanova.

"All of the presidents worked hard to implement the new policy and we are certain that all parties involved will be able to work within its boundaries," said O'Neil.

"No one wants a policy in the first place, but something has to change or we're jeopardizing the future of our chapters. The problem with the old policy was that it was too drastic a change; the new policy, however, may not be restrictive enough. I think the main obstacle is that no one at Villanova thinks they can have fun without alcohol. We need to confront this problem before we can expect any Risk Management policy to really influence Greek social life," said Jen Allard, Panhellenic secretary.

Senator Bob Carey, brother of Alpha Phi Delta, called the new policy "just a piece of paper to please the administration. It doesn't hold Greek life back or change anything. It is merely a restatement of the facts," said Carey.

During the 1960s, when basketball games were played in Jake Nevin Fieldhouse, all tickets were bought at the door. In an effort to alleviate long lines, a lottery was established last year to enable interested students to reserve tickets in advance, Aceto said.

As the Athletics Office receives lottery applications they sort them according to the students' years. Upperclassmen receive the most tickets. Applications will not be accepted if they are not accompanied by a check for $130 and a self-addressed stamped envelope.

Colleges asked to change divestiture policies

By College Press Service

Citing recent racial reforms in South Africa, the Bush administration has urged colleges and universities to revoke policies against owning stock in companies that do business in that country.

The request came July 10 as President Bush announced that the United States would lift the economic sanctions that were imposed on South Africa in 1986.

"We hope that state and local governments and private institutions in the United States will take note of our action and act accordingly," Bush said.

In recent years, scores of campuses have sold off stocks in companies that do business in South Africa. In 1989 at least 36 institutions with endowments of more than $50 million had totally divested and an additional 40 had partially divested, according to the Investor Responsibility Research Center, a non-profit center that provides information to institutional investors.

College officials who try to revoke divestment policies can expect strong student opposition, activists promise.

"I don't think it's time to stop divesting until everyone has a vote," said Julius Davis, president of the United States Student Association, a Washington, D.C., group representing student governments. "It's still not a democratic country."

> Blacks still can't run for office or vote. That doesn't sound like a democracy to me.
> Richard Knight, the Africa Fund

"We definitely don't think it's time, added Richard Knight of the New York-based Africa Fund, which has coordinated much of the anti-apartheid activity on American campuses for 20 years. "Bush never liked the sanctions and he took the first opportunity to lift them."

Meanwhile, colleges that spent years debating divestiture policy are not expected to suddenly reverse themselves.

The University of Illinois is unlikely to change its divestiture policy anytime soon, several members of the board of trustees recently told The Daily Illini. In 1987 the board decided that the university should stop investing in companies with operations in South Africa.

"I would really doubt that the board would wish to get back into that issue without first seeing some real commitment by the South African government ... some reassurance that the problems that led to the university's position were corrected," Trustee Tom Lamont told The Daily Illini.

In recommending cancellation of the five-year-old economic sanctions — which included a ban on new investment and bank loans to South Africa, prohibited sales to the South African police and military and prohibited the import of certain goods — the administration said that the South African government had satisfied the conditions set by Congress in 1986 for dismantling apartheid and opening negotiations with representatives of the country's black majority.

In June, the government of President F.W. de Klerk repealed a series of major apartheid laws, including the Group Areas Act, which designated where racial groups could live.

The black majority still is barred from the political process.

"Blacks still can't run for office or vote. That doesn't sound like a democracy to me," Knight said. Students "shouldn't interpret victories on the road to freedom as freedom," he added.

But the Bush administration wants campuses and others to revoke their divestment policies.

In fact, the Justice Department is looking at legal avenues for pressuring state and local governments to repeal laws banning South Africa-related investments.

As of April, 28 states, 24 counties and 92 cities had adopted sanctions against South Africa-related investments, according to the Africa Fund. Many of those sanctions cover the endowments of public colleges.

Some 'Nova students may need vaccines

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Staff Reporter

Although Villanova students are required to have a doctor complete a medical report before they begin classes, students are not required to have their immunizations readministered if necessary, said Denis A. Boyle, M.D., University physician.

Recent medical reports by the National Center for Disease Control have concluded that immunizations given prior to a person's first birthday are ineffective. State law mandates that any person over 18 must consent to medical treatment, and it is therefore the responsibility of the student to have their immunizations checked and readministered, if necessary.

The University infirmary informs students if they are in need of a vaccine, and will provide the vaccine if the student consents, said Elizabeth Kenney, R.N., a nurse in the Middleton Hall. State law requires that students between kindergarten and twelfth grade be vaccinated for diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis, polio, measles, rubella and mumps. According to infirmary statistics, 95 percent of Villanova students are properly immunized.

Medical, moral and religious conditions may exempt a child from receiving a vaccine in the commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The University recognizes that problems could arise if students were denied enrollment due to an incomplete medical/immunization report, infirmary officials said.

Earn your grades

"The University is a community of persons of diverse professional, academic and personal interest who, in a spirit of collegiality, cooperate to achieve their common goals and objectives in the transmission, the pursuit and the discovery of knowledge," states the University Mission Statement.

In a university, the students along with administrators, faculty and staff make up the academic community called Villanova. With the pressures of mid-term exams culminating next week, the student body must bear in mind the importance and purpose of academic honesty.

If a student cheats, plagiarizes or commits an act of academic dishonesty, he or she will be tainting the integrity of the community's academic goals. The University established academic goals to provide an environment of higher education for students who desire to engage the pursuit of knowledge. Copying from classmates' exams, failing to document sources in assignments, fabricating or altering information and submitting another's work in place of your own illustrate acts sidetracking the quest for knowledge.

A demanding capitalistic society imposes high expectations on today's student. Often students feel pressured into achieving the highest possible grade at any cost. These sometimes unattainable expectations may influence the anxious student toward an act of dishonesty rather than pursuit of knowledge for the sake of developing an individual's potential.

Remember we share the common goal of developing the self through the community's pursuit of knowledge. During mid-term exams next week, students should remember when the opportunity to cheat arises, they will be forced to decide between receiving a grade or earning one. Earning a grade, even when it is less than desired, is much more fulfilling than cheating for it.

Parents' Weekend successful

The efforts of the Student Programming Council (SPC) and the entire Villanova community broke the "Parent's Weekend jinx" Villanova has faced over the past few years.

The problems experienced during the past few Parents' Weekends have included a vulgar performance by Robin Williams which had to be stopped to avoid parental offense; a late appearance by The Spinners which caused a crowd to sit and wait; and a weak sound system which did not allow much of the crowd to hear Bob Newhart speak a year ago.

Coordinators decided not to "overplan" Parents' Weekend this year and it worked to their advantage.

The football game, although usually drawing a decent crowd, was packed with students and parents. Both student sections were completely full by halftime.

The success of this year's squad certainly contributed to fan interest; however the allowance of Parent/Student tailgating in the lots around the stadium also brought spectators to the game. It provided parents with an opportunity to meet the parents of their sons and daughters in an informal setting. Students whose parents were unable to come for the weekend were able to join in and not feel left out.

Other successful activites on the weekend included an Octoberfest "Beef and Beer" party Friday night and a classy Champagne Brunch Sunday morning. Both events received impressive responses from parents and students.

This year's Parents' Weekend events, planned by the SPC, along with a strong effort by students to join in the festivities, made it an exciting celebration, breaking the "Parents' Weekend jinx" for future students and their parents.

Praise and sarcasm for Villanovans

To the Editor:

Congratulations and many thanks to everyone who worked so hard to make Parents' Weekend a great success. As a senior parent, I appreciated all the time spent by the staff of the Student Activities Office: Cathy McMahon, Lois Kealy and the Directors Luci Gorski and Gary Bonas; the Student Programming Council Jeanne Maguire and Randy Farmer; the Connelly Center staff; and Campus Ministry. Thank you for this weekend and for a grand four years of Parents' Weekends.

And to those skeptics who are mumbling to themselves that I probably didn't know about the Newhart Concert and The Four Tops, etc. Well, I was there too. The Villanova people should not be faulted for the lack of professionalism shown by those performers.

Mary C. Quilten

To the Editor:

I am writing to express my heartfelt congratulations to the Student Programming Council for its attempt to enrich the cultural and academic life at Villanova. Never have their efforts yielded such magnificent results as those achieved during the recent Nintendo Carnival. I know I am sharing in the pride felt by all Villanovans when I say that the Nintendo Carnival represented the summit of the already distinguished intellectual tradition at Villanova University.

Perhaps there are some pessimistic members of our community who would decry this unabashed celebration of the wonders of the Villanovan mind as nothing but a shameless promotional gimick on the part of the Geo car company.

However, to answer these critics, I need only mention that to doubt the philanthropic intentions of the Geo car company smatters of apostasy. These nearsighted individuals fail to see the Nintendo Carnival for what it truly was: a fitting showcase for the intellectual adroitness and cultural savvy of our University. Where else, save for the most distinguished shopping malls of this nation, can one witness such a blindingly brilliant display of enlightened youth demonstrating its noblest intellectual proclivities so freely? Is it not the mission of the University to foster an environment wherein the glories of the human mind can flourish unhindered?

One can only hope the Student Programming Council, along with the support of the Administration, continues to encourage Villanovans in the pursuit of such lofty and sublime goals as a score of 10,000 on Super Mario Brothers.

To the Editor:

I would like to comment on the behavior of the students and appearance of the dorms on Parents' Weekend. As I walked through the dorms, whether male or female, the atmosphere was of pride and togetherness. People saying hello, asking directions and acknowledging help with a thank you and a smile.

It was invigorating to walk down the halls Sunday and literally see the pride of the students living in each residence hall dorm by the appearance of the hallways, lobbies and outside of buildings. The litter was nonexistent, the stench of garbage and old beer was gone. Villanova was a place to be proud of, not because it was Parents' Weekend, but because it showed that students can and do care about where they live and how they act. Why can't every day be like Parents' Weekend?

COMMENTARY

The season to be jolly: When should it begin?

By ELLEN GOODMAN

It is 75 degrees and the leaves on the maple tree in my yard are barely tinged with red. An entire division of bees, flying in a tight-winged formation that would put the Blue Angels to shame, is competing for a landing spot on the snapdragons.

The raspberries we planted last year are offering their second, shabbier growth. The tomato plants, in a fit of undue optimism, have put out another set of flowers.

We are talking apples today. We are talking foliage. We are talking Indian summer. We are most definitely not talking reindeer and large, cherry men in red outfits.

So why are there five Christmas catalogs in my mail? Deck the Halls with boughs of pumpkin? Jingle leaves, jingle leaves? What is going on here?

We are planning for the three-day Columbus Day weekend, and they are into the twelfth day of Noel. We are barely out of air conditioning and they are offering goose down. We are thinking of baked apples and they are thinking of fruitcake. (Something no decent person should ever think about at any time.) Even my gardening catalog, normally a paragon of well-bred and hybrid discretion, is hocking Holly wreaths in October instead of tulip bulbs.

Something is out of whack here and for once you can't blame the greenhouse effect or chlorofluorocarbons. In the land of merchandising, the seasons have simply gone out of season. Where is Vivaldi when you need him? He's in an air-conditioned mall somewhere playing "White Christmas" on an organ.

I was once impressed to discover that Eleanor Roosevelt had completed all of her Christmas shopping by Halloween. By today's standards she would be a procrastinator.

My first hint that people were playing around with the calendar happened when I went shopping for a bathing suit one July. The salesclerk told me in the patronizing tone reserved for small, slow children that I was rather late to get a complete selection. The suits began to arrive in early April, when I was occupied with other things, like chipping ice off my windshield.

I would like to blame this trend on places like California where they don't have seasons and have always tried to undermine ours. In Olde New England, as Olde as the early 1950s, we still had a strawberry season, one brief and luscious interlude, follwed by asparagus and tomato. We ate what was growing around us, and waited until it came around again. Postponed gratification was good for our Puritanical palates.

We are planning for the three-day Columbus Day weekend, and they are into the 12th day of Noel.

Now we have something that masquerades as a strawberry all year round. Every winter salad is topped by something indistinguishable — in a photograph that is — from a tomato. In a blind tasting, three out of four people won't be able to tell the tomato from the strawberry. They are dreadful and plentiful.

But it's the merchants who are playing calendar roulette. They have turned Lincoln's birth date into a moveable Monday, lugged from one day to another like a samples case. They've put Washington's birthday continually up for sale. And now they are telling us that Labor Day begins the Christmas season.

The creation of one national mail-order market has produced catalogs without the slightest respect for any season or region. Their holidays are now harvested, transported and chemically ripened on the way to your home. The only date that has become inflexible is the one marked "shipping."

Remember all those sappy movies that ended with the young hero wishing that the spirit of Christmas could prevail all year round? Be careful what you wish for.

You could end up with a Santa Claus costume for Halloween, trick or treat under the mistletoe, and a burning yule log — electric of course — for Thanksgiving. Even a plastic tree is going to start dropping its needles at some point.

It's not nice to fool Mother Nature. I refuse to fast-forward through the fall. I won't make a list and check it twice, think about who was naughty and nice, until the very last piece of leftover turkey has been stuffed into the last unwary visitor who knows not the mysteries of fricassee.

But I do see, one tiny glimmer of hope in the pre-emptive strike of the Christmas catalogs. Call me a cockeyed October optimist, but if Christmas is already here, can spring be far behind?

White deserves praise

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the Villanovan and Andy Fitzpatrick for the kind article in last week's edition. However, I would be remiss, if I did not point out an egregious omission in the description of the office of Academic Advising for Athletics at Villanova. This omission may indeed have been due to my failure to express clearly the role Mrs. Nancy White plays in the academic support given to our student athletes.

Many, if not most, of our 580 student athletes do not know me personally. However, in the day-to-day activity almost all our student athletes deal with the one full-time staff member of the office, Mrs. White. As coordinator of academic services for athletes, Mrs. White is one of the least recognized and least appreciated full-time employees working in athletics. In fact, if it were not for our full-time associate and assistant coaches, who do all the work while the head coaches take all the credit, Mrs. White would be the least appreciated person in the area of athletics.

To appreciate what Mrs. White contributes to the office of academic advising, try imagining the Eagles without Randall Cunningham or Jim McMahon. That may be too ugly to dwell on. In any event, as the person who relies on her work, I wanted to make sure that the Villanova Community understands how important the contribution she makes to Villanova's athletics and how unselfishly responsive she is to the needs of our student athletes.

Pros and cons of core theme 'multiculturalism' discussed

By WILLIAM WERPEHOWSKI

In her commentary in the Oct. 4, 1991 issue of the Villanovan, Professor Colleen A. Sheehan urges greater clarity "about what we are trying to achieve" with a required core curriculum course that studies ethnic, minority and women's experiences along with history.

Referring to Recommendation Nine of the final report of the Advisory Committee on the College Core Curriculum, Sheehan sets forth a fair challenge regarding the proposed core multicultural component, "We need to make our purpose absolutely clear before the fact, and we must be able to justify it academically. Thus far, we have done neither."

In order to carry forward the conversation Sheehan started, let me briefly indicate five grounds for a mutlicultural core course at Villanova.

> Finally, it seems the purpose of the core requirement should be to generate alternative perspectives in education that ideally result in mainstream courses that reflect and include these perspectives.

First, the Advisory Committee's final report cites its own reason for both "multicultural" and "international" components "to widen the student's knowledge in areas where there is a strong presumption of ignorance on their part. The overcoming of such ignorance is one of the main goals of higher education, and the attempt to resolve these shortcomings should not be associated with any social or political agenda." I take this to mean the University must seek to nurture what John Henry Newman called an "integrative habit of mind," in which connections between areas of knowledge and experience are sought and tested.

This virtue disposes us to explore, as honestly and critically as possible, how the parts of our world may be viewed as a whole. But such a mind, for Newman, "cannot be partial, cannot be exclusive and cannot be impetuous." If there is considerable ignorance in this University about ethnic, minority and women's experiences and history, then the connections we seek go awry, precisely because in our partiality and exclusivity we ignore parts of experience that must be accounted for and to which we are accountable.

One need look no further than the Vision Statement of Villanova's Campaign for Community to see the point, "differences among people do not have to serve as barriers, but rather as opportunities to grow and learn." Perhaps the Advisory Committee did not mean any of this. If it didn't, it should have.

Second, the practice of humanistic inquiry is a good in itself, but that practice should also equip students to gain a deeper understanding of the changing face of our world as workers and citizens. Through the 1990s, for example, 75 percent of those entering the workforce in the United States will be women and members of groups traditionally designated minorities. In this decade, white Americans will be the largest minority in a nation without any ethnic majority population, and California will become the first majority minority state.

These changes indicate there is a need for a contemporary focus on multicultural studies that the Advisory Committee in fact commends.

> The core requirement might challenge the way issues and experiences concerning race, women and ethnicity are being engaged in mainstream courses.

Third, the Catholic character of Villanova affords a basis for recommending a core multicultural component. Minimally, we can join with the Presidential Task Force Report on Catholic Character. "Villanova identifies with the university implied in both the terms 'Catholic' and 'university' and is therefore challenged to esteem all persons and cultures, both in scholarly endeavors and in personal encounters."

The challenge extends at least to overcoming the ignorance about differences that appear so evident on campus. Beyond that, Catholic social teaching has insisted that education should work to awaken a critical sense, through which injustice violative of a divinely bestowed human dignity may be renounced. Surely anlayses involving issues of gender, race, ethnicity and class can serve this goal.

Fourth, the initial warrant for a multicultural core requirement leads me to a question regarding Professor Sheehan's claim that the designation multicultural "is insulting to those very people it appears to promote." I am not sure that the designation is negatively categorizing at all. No doubt there is a meaningful sense in which women, blacks and hispanics who are citizens of America are no less American than white male Americans. But the central question is whether dominant cultural conceptions of being American have decisively attended to the experiences of women, blacks and hispanics or whether these experiences in their uniqueness are ignored or subordinated. This is the question that talk of multicultural interests is supposed to expose.

Finally, it seems the purpose of the core requirement should be to generate alternative perspectives in education that ideally result in mainstream courses that reflect and include these perspectives. Courses that are already mainstreamed are not to be lost to the core requirement. Why should they be, unless we assume that there is some remarkably limited storehouse of visions and voices reflective of the experiences of women, blacks and others?

The core requirement might challenge the way issues and experiences concerning race, women and ethnicity are being engaged in mainstream courses. A salutary outcome of the requirement may be to show how these issues and experiences confront and reconstruct prevailing conceptions of history, philosophy, religion, and so on — perhaps the very conceptions that figure in mainstream courses.

For instance, a work like Genevieve Lloyd's Man of Reason could raise questions about how philosophy is done and about the perspectives of the women we read who do philosophy. Jean Elshtain's writings on "public man, private woman" could do the same in political science, as would the writings of Elizabeth Schussler-Fiorenza or Mary Rose D'Angelo in biblical studies.

I appreciate Professor Sheehan's efforts to generate a wider discussion about these matters. There is further work that needs to be done. The aforementioned Campaign for Community might help to provide a congenial public forum to pursue these themes further. Let me congratulate the Advisory Committee for making its recommendations regarding multicultural studies at Villanova.

© Philip Morris Management Corp. 1990

Teaching adults to read is a different task than teaching youngsters. Learning conjures up painful memories of feeling inferior. And no one wants to be reminded of how much he or she doesn't know.

That's precisely why the Gateway program was developed. It gives adults the confidence they need to tackle adult reading programs—an important first step.

With positive reinforcement as its main objective, Gateway focuses on how much students know, so they can develop the confidence many of them never had before.

That's where you come in. We need volunteers to donate their time to help adults better their lives through reading. And you don't have to be a teacher to help.

After a short training session, you and a student will set up your own flexible twenty-hour schedule designed to prepare him or her for a regular reading program. And afterwards, you will feel better knowing that you have helped someone to overcome a huge barrier in his or her life.

To enroll as a Gateway volunteer, call 875-6600. It's a short-term commitment from you that can do long-term good for someone else.

Langran addresses concerns

By GRETCHEN FISHER and PEGGY AGOLINO
Staff Reporters

How many times have Villanova students thrown their hands up in disgust over the issues of parking, housing and other conflicts with the local community? Finally, students will have the opportunity to make a real difference through compromise and cooperation with their off-campus neighbors. This opportunity is offered by Dr. Robert Langran of the political science department who is running for a position on the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners.

Although many campus organizations support Langran in his campaign, only residents living on South Campus, in Radnor House or in the area between, fall into the seventh ward and are eligible to vote. Those pledging their support for Langran include the Villanova College Democrats, Mark Thomas, president of the Villanova College Republicans, Mark O'Rourke, Student Government president, the Student Government cabinet and the fraternity Pi Kappa Alpha, of whom Langran is the faculty advisor.

> Langran hopes to find common ground between these two neighboring communities.

Chris Lee, a representative of the local Democratic Party and member of the Villanova College Democrats, said he is supporting Langran because "we finally have the opportunity to change some problems with housing and to improve our relations with the community, and Professor Langran is a way in which this can be accomplished."

Langran has been a professor at Villanova and a resident of the local community for over 30 years. During this time he has played an active role in the Villanova community. Langran draws on his experience of being a part of both groups to bridge the differences and better the relationship between them.

"My main reason for running is my worry over the deteriorating relationship and lack of cooperation between the school and community," Langran said. He sympathizes with the feelings of both sides. He recognizes the validity of the students' complaints about parking, off-campus housing ordinances (one of which restricts more than two unrelated people living in one house in Radnor Township), the necessity of building new residence halls and expansion of sports facilities. At the same time, Langran understands the area residents' concerns over their own parking and housing situation, their qualms about the level of noise and the possible lack of respect for surrounding property. Langran hopes to find common ground between these neighboring communities.

Villanova's counseling services provide invaluable aid for personal problems and career choices.

Counseling directs Villanova students

By MEREDITH ARMSTRONG
Staff Reporter

What thoughts go through your head when you look at Corr Hall? Most imagine the miniature dorm rooms which house three floors of freshman males. Perhaps you might think of the chapel. But did you know that beneath those stone walls lie Villanova University's own Counseling and Career Planning and Placement centers?

The Counseling Center, located on the first floor of Corr Hall, deals mainly with personal issues and problems. The services offered are strictly confidential and never show on a student's record. Students enter the center with problems from homesickness to relationship issues, such as jealousy, commitment and loneliness. Family concerns and problems, alcoholism, death and illness are also addressed in the Counseling Center.

In addition to these services, the center offers the assistance of a full-time reading and study skills specialist. Joan Greenhouse Whitney, Ph.D., a member of the counseling center for 15 years and its current director, said the reasons most students come to the center are "for things that are difficult to discuss with someone who is involved and those who need someone who can be unbiased." The staff of the Counseling Center consists of one part-time and four full-time licensed psychologists.

When calling or coming in for an appointment, students can request a male or female psychologist. "The staff consists of extremely concerned and interested people who are approachable and easy to talk to," said Whitney. "It is very beneficial for students to utilize these facilities or at least know that there are these opportunities if the circumstances should arise," said freshman Karen Pilney. "I like it a lot."

A few steps down toward the basement of Corr Hall, students will find the Career Planning and Placement Center. Its personnel, directed by Nancy Dudak, includes Villanova students. "Our staff is work-study integrated, but also consists of [non-work study] students," said staff member Jay Silva. The career center offers individual and group counseling for exploring career ideas, drafting a resume and even finding a summer job or internship.

The Center sponsors a variety of programs to suit any student in any major. Some of these exciting events are Career Day, and an ongoing on-campus recruiting workshop will be held Oct. 14 to April 10.

"In a time of recession in our country, it is good to know there are people right here on campus to help us when it is time to go out into the real world," said Kristin Vespe.

There are many programs offered by Villanova that are not known of or utilized by students. Neither the counseling center nor the Career Planning and Placement Center should be such programs. Take advantage of the services that the Corr Counseling and Career Planning and Placement centers offer to Villanova students.

Professors further education

By STEPHANIE ORANGE and LIBBY ROBERGE
Special to the Villanovan

How many of us believe graduation from college marks the end of our educational careers? How many of us, upon receiving that coveted sheepskin, vow to step out into the real world, promising never to set foot into a classroom again? How many of us, keeping this promise, will become intellectually stagnant and ignorant of the changing world around us and its effects on our lives? For many university faculty and administrators, education does not end with the playing of "Pomp and Circumstance" as they strive to study world events in the hopes of bringing new information and experience back to their universities.

University faculty and administrators are becoming students of the world as they participate in the International Faculty Development Seminars held in countries and regions that are currently shaping the course of world events. These seminars are short-term, intensive experiences that introduce faculty and administrators to overseas scholarly communities and enable them to view their own disciplines from a broader, international context.

The seminars, administered by the Council on International Educational Exchange, focus on such themes as "The African-American Experience in the United States," "Chile After Pinochet," "Understanding Vietnam" and "Northern Ireland: Images of a Divided Society."

Through their own learning experiences in the seminars, faculty members are able to influence their students by increasing the students' global awareness as a result of the participants' overseas exposure to the multiple perspectives of peoples, cultures and history.

"The information acquired and exchanged, and the personal observations and insights I bring back will be reflected in my teaching, my research and writing, and in presentations and conversations over the next many months," said a history professor who attended the "United Germany" Faculty Development Seminar.

Past participants have had the unique opportunity to personally experience changes in world history such as crossing through Check Point Charlie the day before its removal, witnessing the fall of the Thatcher reign in London and being among the first U.S. educators allowed back into Vietnam. The 1991-1992 schedule includes seminars in Hong Kong, Northern Ireland, Chile, Vietnam, Poland, the Netherlands/Belgium, Soviet Union, United States and Germany.

Participation is open to full-time teaching faculty and administrators at two- and four-year institutions of higher education worldwide.

The Council on International Educational Exchange, a pioneer in educational exchange since its founding in 1947, develops and administers study, work and travel programs for professionals and secondary, undergraduate and graduate students, and maintains offices in the United States, Europe and Asia.

Villanova volunteers forfeit Fall Break to serve

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Assistant Features Editor

What are your plans for Fall Break? Will you awake at 6 a.m., crawling from a snug sleeping bag to greet the frosty dawn? Will you strain, sweat and serve all day, enduring hammered thumbs, blisters, sore feet and exhaustion? And then will you smile complacently and consider this week to be the best of your college career? If you are one of the 46 students who have been chosen for Fall Break service trips sponsored by the Villanova Volunteers, you will do this and much more.

In 1976, Villanova Volunteers consisted of 20 students who volunteered to work with the [illegible]ural poor of Lexington, Ky. [illegible]irteen years later, this organ[illegible]on has grown to include nine [illegible] serving both rural and urban sites in the United States and other nations. The three trips slated for Fall Break 1991 will take students to the Homeworkers Organized for More Employment (H.O.M.E.) site in Orland, Maine, the St. Francis Inn in Philadelphia, Pa, and the Dungannon Development Commission in Dungannon, Va.

Rev. Frank Chambers, O.S.A., assistant to the dean of students, continues in his coordination of the trip to Maine this year. Nineteen students were selected to serve the hungry, homeless and poor of the Appalachian H.O.M.E. site. Though specific service projects have yet to be determined, the volunteers plan to do construction and renovation work on community buildings and shelters for the homeless, abused women, the elderly and the handicapped. Additional service areas concern the well-being of the community. A brochure describes the site as an alternative to welfare. "H.O.M.E. provides direct charity, educational opportunities and self-esteem through community involvement," stated the brochure.

While the trip to Maine takes volunteers to the northern tip of Appalachia, Dungannon volunteers will travel almost an equal distance to the South. The coordinators of this project are Villanova alumni Steve Johnson and Anne Grasso Johnson, members of the graduating class of 1985. They have chosen to draw upon their past work as Villanova Volunteers to help them lead a group of 20 students into a brand-new service location. Literacy and home rehabilitation projects have been established for the volunteers, but the students are willing to offer their services wherever needed.

In Philadelphia, the St. Francis Inn offers students a chance to make a difference in urban poverty closer to home. The Inn is home to a soup kitchen and thrift shop in which seven students will volunteer their time and services, lead by Kathy Byrnes, assistant to the dean of students. Though the St. Francis Inn does not present volunteers with the same view of poverty seen in the trips to Appalachia, the needs fulfilled by all the volunteers are the same. Hunger is the same in every state and all people need shelter.

Each of the trips require applicants to be motivated by an unselfish desire to give of themselves. Initial meetings reveal a gathering of generous people armed with dedication and enthusiasm. But, invariably, the volunteers outnumber the allotted spaces for each trip. Coordinators designate a selection process that will choose a privileged few, such as a lottery or interviews. Others resign themselves to awaiting future service opportunities.

Those students who are chosen manage to discern the benefits of their work beneath the prospect of long hours and arduous projects. "There are so many things I'm looking forward to doing on this trip, like making 19 new friends, working outside all week in the beautiful fall weather and having the opportunity to help the people of Orland," said sophomore H.O.M.E. volunteer Cindy Eggert. "I'm also really excited about traveling through New England since I never have before."

Past volunteers have admitted their weeks as Villanova Volunteers were the best in their lives.

Meet Dean Clay

By STACEY GIBERTI
Staff Reporter

For Dean Alvin Clay of the College of Commerce and Finance, Villanova's family atmosphere is a reality. A graduate of Villanova, Clay has watched all of his children as well as one of his 18 grandchildren attend the University. A faculty member since 1955, Clay has played many roles at Villanova and continues to be an integral part of the business school.

After graduating from Villanova, Clay entered the business world for a short time. He went on to obtain a master's degree in business administration (MBA) from Drexel University. Still he could not stay away from Villanova for long. In 1955, Clay returned to teach for several years. During this time, he also served as chairman for the accounting department. In 1976, Clay was appointed to his current position as the dean of the College of Commerce and Finance.

Clay has great pride in the business school and said the quality of Villanova's program is evident in its accreditation by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB). "Less than 10 percent of the business schools in the country are accredited by the AACSB," said Clay. He added that the quality of the student body, the curriculum and the faculty combine to make Villanova's program quite strong.

In his years as dean, Clay watched the faculty in the business school grow from 28 to 90 members. Of these, 86 hold doctoral degrees. Clay believes the strength of the business school also enhances the quality of the University as a whole as well as providing the opportunity for top accreditations.

In addition to serving as dean, Clay has also held the position of chairman for accreditation teams for the AACSB. This position has helped him to realize the importance of Villanova's academic caliber compared to other colleges and universities. "You realize how good you are university-wide when you look elsewhere," explained Clay.

In the future, Clay hopes to see Villanova's MBA program expanded to a full-time program. Clay has already set plans in motion for this change.

Although Clay is a dedicated administrator at Villanova, he still finds some leisure time to spend with his family. He also enjoys watching athletic events, traveling and eating.

Nicaragua offers a lesson in cultural understanding

By DOROTHY BINNS
Special to the Villanovan

Few of us realize that the sincere spirit of Villanova reaches beyond our campus. For Dorothy Binns, a quest for a Spanish tutor in the International Student Office proved to be much more than that. The friendship she found in a student here led her to visit Nicaragua and compelled her to recount her valuable experience.

Little did Binns think that two years ago when she called Steve McWilliams, Villanova University's International Student Advisor, her life was about to be irreversibly changed. Upon learning of Binns' interest in Central America and her need for a Spanish tutor, Steve introduced her to Ricardo Alvarado. Alvarado is a Nicaraguan graduate student and a Fulbright scholar working toward a doctorate in chemistry at Villanova. As a result of the friendship that developed between Alvarado and Binns' family, this summer she and her husband decided to visit Nicaragua.

Knowing the desperate conditions there, they embarked on a campaign to collect medical supplies for the Children's Hospital in Managua. Thanks to the generosity of many in their community, including Villanovans, they delivered almost 300 pounds of medicines and health care items. This simple act served as the Binns' introduction to Nicaragua and the beautiful people there who opened their hearts and their homes to them.

For two weeks the Binns visited various towns and met many people. Despite almost a decade of civil war and destabilization, the people were warm and friendly. All welcomed the opportunity to talk to them. Regardless of their economic class or political persuasion, the Nicaraguans were quick to reveal their enormous love for their country and pride in their culture. Furthermore, they never hesitated to voice their opinions or ask difficult questions and all seemed to admire North Americans. Many disapproved of the policies of U.S. government, but this did not diminish their feelings for the Binns.

Typical of their loving ways was a little girl, a stranger who sat next to Dorothy Binns on a street curb one Sunday morning and earnestly invited her to her home. There was an old campesino who crossed the street solely because he wanted to welcome an American visitor to his country. Perhaps the most moving of all was the Sandinista fighter who had not worked for more than a year but gave Binns the belt he was wearing because it was his most prized possession.

Equally etched in Binns' memory are the moments of pain such as seeing the older generation. Their eyes betray their emotions of lost hope and confidence in Nicaragua's future. Likewise, the college students and young adults were asking whether there will be a tomorrow for them in Nicaragua. Yet their country cannot afford to lose another generation. Already too many have been killed or fled to greener pastures.

According to Binns, one can never forget the children with their smiling faces and eyes brimming with curiosity and intelligence. One has to believe the past can be overcome and the future secured for the Nicaraguan children.

The Nicaraguan people will forever have a special place in Binns' heart and she hopes for an opportunity to continue working with these wonderful people.

But according to Barbara Haenn, associate director of Campus Ministry and coordinator of the entire program, some students are intimidated by the lack of conventional nightlife. Those who have participated in the close community of volunteers know that their intense feeling of accomplishment cannot be found anywhere else.

Granted, the service trips do challenge volunteers with difficult tasks and primitive accommodations. Anne Johnson remembers both the hardships and rewards of her trip to Appalachia as a Villanova student. According to Johnson, the volunteers had to use outhouses and were allowed only one shower during their one-week stay. The facilities have improved since then, but the living conditions in Appalachia still merit service efforts from Villanovans.

So if sleeping until noon and watching "The Brady Bunch" reruns during Fall Break becomes tiresome, why not consider Villanova Volunteers as a service option? Meetings are currently being held in preparation for winter and spring break trips, both of which will offer international volunteer opportunities. Relaxation may seem to be the ultimate goal of vacation, but any Villanova Volunteer will tell you the rewards of service are incomparable.

Hunger is the same in every state and all people need shelter.

Langran

nity," said John Sullivan, Langran's campaign manager. "It is an opportunity for local residents and the University to come together on equal ground to find areas of agreement. Change can be hard, but this is a sound investment for their future. Villanova is here to stay and adds a lot to the area. The election of Professor Langran to the board should be seen, not as a threat, but as a positive opportunity."

Langran is running against the incumbent Jim Marks. Marks, while always listening to the University's point of view, seems to never have directly initiated a reform of the township's rules. Langran needs the support of the students if he is to win the election and have the opportunity to make these changes. He said that if elected, he would "be receptive to suggestions from both groups and work very hard to cement the relationship between the two."

Election day is Tuesday, Nov. 5. Voting will be held at Radnor House Condominiums from 7 a.m. to 8 p.m. Buses will be available to take students to and from the voting area.

All seventh ward Villanova residents have the power to bring about change, but they must get out and take the time to vote.

Rod Stewart reigns in Philadelphia

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

"We had a wonderful night last night ... but I have a feeling tonight could be bet-ta," cried superstar Rod Stewart as he charmed Philadelphia Oct. 1 and 2 at the Spectrum.

After a bag pipe band circled the floor numerous times, the gargantuan, heavenly-white stage was revealed as Stewart launched into his classic hit "Maggie May." During his entrance, Stewart kicked a soccer ball into the audience as he usually does signifying his love for the sport.

"The Rhythm of My Heart" and ancient archival hit "Sweet Little Rock-n-Roller" excited the audience who needed no help making noise. The mere sight of Stewart sent it into an uproar.

For the most part, Stewart's show was a well-contrived mix of his old rock-n-roll tunes, his pop hits from the last decade and Motown R&B covers. Pop songs "Some Guys Have All the Luck," "Down Town Train," "Forever Young" and "Lost in You" dominated the majority of the first half of the concert with Stewart changing six times into brightly colored suits.

Stewart's show was a well contrived mix of old rock tunes, pop hits and Motown R&B covers.

Stewart staples such as "Hot Legs," acoustic versions of "You Wear It Well" and "Your in My Heart," along with a lengthy version of "The First Cut is the Deepest" echoed throughout the arena as the crowd grew louder.

A Motown tribute included "Do You Like Good Music," "In the Midnight Hour" and "Night Train." Stewart, despite his increasing age, danced and wiggled harder than most. In fact, his renditions of "This Old Heart of Mine," "The Motown Song" (accompanied by cartoon images of Stewart and his peers from the video) and his blunt anthem "Do Ya Think I'm Sexy?" were the best he has sounded in years.

Encores "Twistin' the Night Away" and the overwhelming "People Get Ready" capped the evening to a perfect pinnacle. Many people have criticized Stewart for one thing or another. Whether his disco days, his pin-up boy self-exploitation or nasty rumors of homosexuality, Stewart seems to be an easy target. With his recent hit album, Vagabond Heart and marriage to popular 21-year-old model Rachel Hunter, no one is laughing.

Stewart was in prime form during his Philadelphia appearance. His showmanship and magnetic personality, as well as his intuitive musical abilities stood above all.

Chili Peppers mix funk and hardcore rock

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

Blood, Sugar, Sex, Magik
Red Hot Chili Peppers
Warner Brothers Records
 1/2

The Red Hot Chili Peppers take it to the limit again on Blood, Sugar, Sex, Magik. With a Parental Advisory — Explicit Lyrics sticker plastered on their album's front cover, the Chili Peppers use their "freedom" to say anything and everything. Their unique mix of funk and hardcore rock make them a difficult group to place in any one specific category but they like it that way.

Where some of the lyrics are graphically explicit, there are verses symbolic enough to almost be considered poetry? Yes, poetry. "Holy mother earth, crying into space, tears on her pretty face, for she has been raped/Killing your future blood, fill her with disease, global abortion please, that is what she needs." (The Righteous and The Wicked).

When comparing those lyrics to "Do you want me girl, to be your thief, awe baby just for you, I'd steal anything you want me to." ("Suck My Kiss"), they hardly seem as though they could come from the same band. Yet, they do and that is part of the Chili Peppers' charm.

"If You Have To Ask" is a pulsating rap set in motion by groovy guitar sounds. "Breaking The Girl," could almost be termed as a rock ballad. Songs like these highlight the clear and smooth tones of the Chili Peppers' sound. Likewise, "I Could Have Lied" is a mellow, laidback tune that concentrates on the spoken word more than the guitar riffs that are at times overwhelming.

Blood, Sugar, Sex, Magik mixes the basics with unconventional sounds and rhythms to create a most unique and undefinable genre. The Red Hot Chili Peppers is one of the few bands on the market that have not sold out to the establishment nor does it seem as though they have any intention of doing so. Following in the footsteps of the MTV hit, "Punk Rock Girl," the Red Hot Chili Peppers have found their niche in funk rock and continue to explore new aspects of traditional rock and roll.

Fish and Freaks swarm Chestnut Cabaret

HOUSE OF FREAKS

By PAUL J. BARBEN
Staff Reporter

School of Fish appeared at the Chestnut Cabaret Oct. 2 in support of their self-entitled album and the fairly small crowd for some real music. Lead singer Jash Clayton-Felt started the show with an interesting invitation for those gathered when he announced, "There's going to be some psychological experiments going on tonight, and you can be a part of them. School of Fish delivered a diverse set that made their talent evident.

The band's youthful outlook shined through as it did the 20 second "Eat My Shorts" followed by the trippy ballad "Euphoria." It was a fun night for all, including drummer M.P., who after the second song ran around the club yelling at random victims.

As a result of the small club atmosphere, the audience received a wacky cover of George Michael's "Father Figure" with some freshly added lines like, "You can stage-dive I don't care/I will be your father figure." School of Fish's unique harmony was present whether in jamming tunes like "Backwards" or slow songs such as "Speechless."

School of Fish delivered a diverse set to the small crowd.

After being badgered by a couple of teenie-hoppers to play their most popular song all night, School of Fish finally did the powerful "3 Strange Days." They closed with the jokingly cool "Turtle," and did an unexpected encore that consisted of every band member switching instruments and playing a blues song out of the air.

House of Freaks opened the show in their own special way with some comical theatrics in support of their new album Cakewalk. Their drummer, John D'Hot, grabbed the crowd's approval with his 'jump&thump' percussion style. "Honor Among People," with its social awareness verses, was the most impressive tune of their set.

Catchy baselines were laid down by Bob Roog during the House of Freaks set, but none more noticeable than on "40 years." Steven McCarthy, formerly of The Longriders, strutted his stuff on guitar and took the spotlight during "Crack in the Sidewalk."

House of Freaks gave the crowd a pleasant surprise when they closed with the classic John Lennon anthem, "We All Shine On." Both bands managed to put on a decent show despite a small crowd.

FROM THE REELS

"Little Man Tate"
Directed by Jodie Foster
Orion Pictures
* 1/2

Every parent believes that their child possesses talent. However, there are some children who are truly gifted and labled "genius." "Little Man Tate" tells the story of one extraordinary seven-year-old and his attempt to relate to the world.

Making her debut as a director, Jodie Foster stars as Dede Tate, an overworked waitress who tries to raise her prodigy son as best she can. Her son Fred (Adam Hann-Byrd) writes poetry, paints, plays classical piano and solves complex mathematical problems. His sensitivity and intellect leaves him alone among his peers. His mother provides his only source of friendship and love.

Fred is discovered by Jane (played by Diane Wiest), a child psychologist and principal of a school for the gifted. She is able to relate to Fred, being a child prodigy herself. The film focuses on the conflict between these influences on his young life. His struggle to find his true artistic self lies somewhere between his mind and his heart, personified by these two women.

Harry Connick Jr. makes a guest appearance as Eddie, a laid-back college boy who befriends Fred. As an actor, Connick's small roles in various movies have not propelled his career. As usual, it is his music that adds character and charm to the film. One scene has Fred gently playing classical music while Connick bangs out a quick blues tune, both on the same piano.

"Little Man Tate" portrays Fred's life with warmth and spirit. The viewer becomes enthralled with the precocious little boy and quickly identifies with him. Foster provides a touching look at a working-class woman who will do anything for her child. Among its themes the film establishes that determination as integral to success as talent. The combiation of these styles and themes allows Fred's story to come alive. Likewise, "Little Man Tate" proves to be a pleasant surprise.

'Ricochet' based on thrills

By AARON NICODEMUS
Editorial Assistant

"Ricochet"
Directed by Russell Mulcahy
Warner Brothers

Have you ever had the feeling your life was under the magnifying glass of some sinister eye? What if your every action and decision carefully watched, judged and secretly scorned. "Ricochet" suspensefully portrays the above scene with harrowing conviction.

Denzel Washington plays a young assistant district attorney on the rise. He has a wonderful family, a strong career and the admiration of his community. Despite his relative fame, he remains humble and honest, choosing to use his spotlight to help others.

His career begins when he is videotaped making a dramatic arrest of a known assassin. The killer is sent to jail, where he seethes with hatred and becomes obsessed with Washington's career. John Lithgow plays the calculating psychopath who coldly plots his rival's demise.

> Despite its worth, the carnage in this film might turn some viewers away.

After a dramatic escape from prison, Lithgow sets the trap for his adversary. He wants to humiliate Washington in order to ruin his reputation, his career and his life. Knowing the power of the media and its lust for scandal, he plays Washington as the politician/family man gone sour.

At points, "Ricochet" skillfully combines solid drama with an attack on media sensationalism. Washington is convincing as the humble public defender, while Lithgow is brutal and cunning as a lunatic bent on revenge.

Despite its worth, the carnage in this film might turn some viewers away. In one scene, over 30 prison guards, prisoners and parole officers are viciously and graphically murdered. The climax has the two enemies battling hand to hand in a scene that is clearly overdone.

The sheer action and suspense of "Ricochet" make it admirable, as does its cynical view of the press. The violence is common for a movie in its genre, yet a truly exceptional film might have handled it more subtly. For excitement and suspense, "Ricochet" delivers.

Crowded House packs in the Tower Theater

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

Progressive-pop band Crowded House has been judged too quickly and therefore overlooked the performance with Richard Thompson at the Tower Theater Oct. 3 contained quality musical content.

> Crowded House will probably never be a big band.

The three-album-old band consisting of Finn brothers Tim and Neil, along with bassist Nick Seymour and drummer Paul Hester celebrates the release of Woodface its latest album and finest to date. Opening track, "It's Only Natural," heated up the stage instantaneously, before quickly cutting into, "Tall Trees."

"I hear some skin, it's a good thing," cried singer/acoustic guitarist Neil Finn, referring to the loud clapping coming from the dedicated audience.

Older tunes "World Where You Live," "When You Come," "Mean to Me" and "Hole in the River" spotlighted high melodies and lofty acoustic guitar work. Meanwhile, breakthrough hit "Don't Dream It's Over," was performed with grace.

Closing tune and recent single "Chocolate Cake" showed Tim Finn on vocals. Although the song was performed with power, Finn's stage presence was slim to none. He jiggled around stage looking like a corrupt Don Henley in the Joker's outfit.

The encores redeemed Finn's silliness as he played his solo hit "Leaky Boat." The band, on the other hand, ran through "Sister Madly" and "Something So Strong," sounding better as the evening progressed. "Italian Plastic," sung by Hester, amused the audience as Neil Finn sweetly closed the show with "Into Temptation" from the band's much criticized second LP, Temple of Low Men.

The House will probably never be an extremely popular band. However, if it maintains its small but strong following and keeps performing like it did at the Tower, it will continue to draw crowds.

Acoustic guitarist/solo singer Richard Thompson opened the show with a small but enriched performance. Thompson performed numerous tunes from his critically-acclaimed album, I Think I'm Gonna Break Someone's Heart Tonight. He lived up to his reputation. With a warm witty stage presence, he not only dazzled the audience with his guitar but made them laugh, also performing soon-to-be classics "Read About Love," "Fees So Good" and "Valerie." Thompson was a treat.

Hamm throbs in Philly

By AARON NICODEMUS
Editorial Assistant

A powerful performer, Stuart Hamm lights up any stage. Known for his incredible range and stamina on the bass guitar, Hamm recently released a solo album, The Urge, singing and playing his famous bass lines. Also featured on the album were guitarist Eric Johnson and Motley Crue's Tommy Lee.

Well-known throughout the music scene, Hamm recently scored an unprecedented double win for Rock Bass and Jazz Bass in Guitar Player's 1990 Reader's Poll. These awards mark the pinnacle of Hamm's instrumental career.

Hamm's new style leans more towards a mainstream rock sound, although elements of jazz and blues may be heard in all of his work. It is the raw energy and flawless performing that allow Hamm to rise above the "back-up" label of the bass guitar. His live performance leave many in awe at his ease in cranking out seemingly impossible riffs. Definitely worth the view, Stuart Hamm can be seen live at the Chestnut Cabaret on Oct. 15. Doors open at 8 p.m.

CABARET FLASH: Jamaican singer Judy Mowatt, hailed as the "new queen of reggae," combines hard-core reggae with a main-steam pop sound. The result is a pleasingly honest style that gets its message across.

Mowatt's message is that reggae belongs on the international scene as an acceptable form of music and that a woman can be convincing as a reggae star. Mowatt works hard to prove both.

Once a member of Bob Marley's I-Threes, Mowatt acts as a true trailblazer for women and for reggae, without being overbearing. Playing much in the same unassuming manner as Tracy Chapman, she allows her music to do the talking. Her deep, rich voice fills her lyrics, dealing with subjects ranging from racism to unwed mothers. Mowatt's musical career has slowly gained national attention, so catch her at the Chestnut Cabaret on Oct. 16.

Reeves breaks his mold

By CHRISTINA FRANGOS
Assistant Entertainment Editor

SPOTLIGHT: Keanu Reeves is not a major acting influence. While his performances in the "Bill and Ted" adventures were "most excellent," they were not exactly award winning. Fun is a better way to describe the time traveler, but in order to describe the actor, versatile would have to be the word.

Reeves is 26 years old. While that seems young, in Hollywood the "twentysomething" group of male stars has a restricted but important market. Once past that age group, an actor has to know his genre. Reeves seems to be biding his time, however, using these years to try different styles until he settles on one.

In last year's "Point Break," Reeves identified himself. Though the movie was not a success, many found his performance superior to that of the lead actor and crowd pleaser Patrick Swayze. Before this year, Reeves was an actor many could place, but not remember his name. Even though "Point Break" did not give him instant stardom, it put him on the map.

So audiences have him pegged. He is a fly-by-night actor destined to be in grade-B movies for the rest of his career. But Reeves proved this false. His appearance in Paula Abdul's video "Rush Rush" gave him a new side.

Elusive, intriguing and original, Reeves has all the qualities setting him apart from his crowd. Young actors such as Christian Slater, Emilio Estevez, Charlie Sheen and Kiefer Sutherland pose a small threat to Keanu Reeves, but he has one up on many of his competitors. He is independent and constantly working.

Reeves's success does not depend on his cohorts, his family or his relationships. He is his own man, not looking to cause a tidal wave, but out to make a splash. One thing is for sure, he will not allow himself to be forgotten.

This season he will appear in "My Private Idaho" with River Phoenix as a male hustler on the road. Reeves, who has yet to be stereotyped by Hollywood, will play in the gay-themed film in this decade of controversy. This could be risky. That makes the movie perfect for Reeves.

Reeves is wonderfully low key. He has style and charisma. He is not the poster boy of the '90s or a trend follower. Reeves merely sets his own pace and calls his own shots. In an industry so tainted, this has to be respected.

FLASH: "The Commitments" struck heart chords across the country as a movie of substance about a group of poor North Dubliners who form a band to play American soul music. The light-hearted movie made it the talk of this fall with infectious music.

Though the film's moment in the spotlight has passed, the soundtrack to "The Commitments" is No. 8 on Billboard's top 25 chart and has sold more than a half-million copies. The driving sounds of soul in tunes such as "In The Midnight Hour" and "Chain of Fools" have many wondering if the band is restricted to the silver screen.

This is not a strange concept. Spinal Tap was a band created from a movie in the early '80s. When bands formed to make a movie attempt to play without the movie, however, they often lack the integrity and experience musicians need in order to survive.

Do not expect The Commitments to be touring your local arena. Though individual members of the movie band have expressed the desire to pursue musical careers, it will not be done collectively. This is fortunate. While a movie can preserve a spirit, the band would only monopolize an "isolated" good thing.

SPARKS: "L.A. Law" kicked off a new season this week. Last season's cliffhanger had us wondering what would happen with Arnie (Corbin Bersen) and Roxanne (Susan Ruttan) once they fell out of the ceiling into the office where top notch drama seems to reside. While the show has always been on top of the ratings, with new and pressing competition from "Law and Order" and "Equal Justice," "L.A. Law" will have to keep up on its legal twists in order to stay afloat ...

Jodie Foster has been speaking to many interviewers to promote her new film, "Little Man Tate." She declined an interview with NBC's "Today" show, however, because producers informed her they would mention John Hinckley's obsession with the actress and the consequent shooting of President Reagan in 1981.

Prince back with funk-pop

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

ROCK QUARRY

Prince, the king of pop, purple and most of all perversity, seems to have the urge to come out of his hippie-dippie trip and perform some pure Minneapolis grooves. Diamonds and Pearls aims to satisfy both of Prince's fortes — pop and funk.

New band, the New Power Generation, is much like the mirror that reflects Prince's wild colors. Their timing is flawless and their quick snap-like chords bring Prince's talent to a full tilt. "Daddy Pop" is a perfect example of this style. Its sugar-sweet rhythm mixed with Prince's creamy vocals prove his power.

Singles "Gett Off" and "Cream" are funk-filled along the lines of material from Dirty Mind. However, straight ahead pop tunes such as "Walk Don't Walk" and the title track would have been better choices.

Slow soul tune, "Strollin' " puts a new light on Prince as he drops the pace but sounds comfortable. On the other hand, rap tune "Jughead" is a bit over done, reminiscent of something used to pump up the crowd on the Arsenio Hall Show.

Prince does slip here and there. Opening tune, "Thunder" fails to live up to its title but instead draws far too much from Prince's lackluster single, "Thieves in the Temple" off of the infamous Graffiti Bridge.

The production, as always, is impeccable. Prince dazzles his audience with a whirlwind of beats, guitar chords, shakes and lyrics from beyond. He personally welcomes the listener, "It's THUNDER when I'm on the mike. DADDY POP is in the house and u're sho 2 like his DIAMONDS, sho 2 like his PEARLS cuz I'm good. CREAM every boy and girl, I'm STROLLIN' steadyhippoprockin' rollin,' a WILLING AND ABLE. GETT OFF and I'm pumping 'em from Pakistan 2 Poland, straight into yo town snatchin' up kiddies like a circus clown."
when the bands that premiered when you were in high school start putting out greatest hits packages. None the less, the first born of the pop-metal bands, Motley Crue, looks back at its 10-year existence with Decade of Decadence.

The Crue's five studio efforts were all successful, however their image as the new lewd, rude, bad boys of rock who live a lifestyle of babes, booze and tattoos sells them. The haircuts mixed with the make-up and outrageous outfits were the Crue, the music was the backdrop.

Now in 1991 the Crue simply portrays a group of sober married bikers who live to rock and occasionally roll. Good time tunes "Smokin' in the Boys Room," "Wild Side" and "Girls, Girls, Girls" are featured along with a remix version of their runaway hit, "Home Sweet Home." The remix contains additions of background vocals and strong bass lines. "Home" is the harbinger of the "metal ballads" that flood the airwaves and the charts today.

The heavier side of the Crue is well represented with, "Live Wire (Kick Ass '91 Remix)," "Piece of Your Action (Screamin' '91 Remix)," "Shout at the Devil" and "Looks That Kill." Their more brash demonic qualities are highlighted with the skulls and melted wax candles.

The most intriguing part of this compilation are the three new tunes tagged on the end. Single, "Primal Scream" shows what the Crue does best ... in the words of lead singer Vince Neil, "crash and burn." "Angela," featuring the Crue's future sound, runs along the lines of Dr. Feelgood hit, "Don't Go Away Mad (Just Go Away)," which is desperately missing. Its outback bluesy-rock sway makes it bound to be their next hit.

Sex Pistols' cover "Anarchy in the U.K." brings out the punk in the Motley dudes. Although some of the lyrics are altered, the sleeze remains.

Hits "Too Young to Fall in Love," "Without You," "S.O.S.," and "Public Enemy #1" are missing but tracks "Teaser" and "Rock-n-Roll Junkie" (from "Ford Fairlane") fill the holes as well as the explosive live version of "Kickstart My Heart." Motley Crue will never change and always get off scott free.

SINGLE SPOTLIGHT: Public Enemy's "Can't Truss It" from their new album, Apocalypse '91 ... The Enemy Strikes Black is tearing up the airwaves and charts. Chuck D's heavy coice, Terminator X's mixes and Flavor Flav's screechy wine make for the perfect rap combo.

PEBBLES: Dueling Stones Mick Jagger and Keith Richards are currently back to their solo careers (minus the press bashing). Jagger is in production on his third solo LP which he is writing with Lenny Kravitz. Kravitz is rumored to also be producing. Richards, on the other hand, is releasing a live album, Live Winos Bootleg, from his 1988 show at the Hollywood Palladium ... Aerosmith will return this February with a new studio album.

Popular artists cover Walt Disney classics

By MAURA RURAK

Simply Mad About The Mouse
Various Artists
Columbia Records

"Simply Mad About The Mouse — A Musical Celebration of Imagination" is a musical compilation of Disney favorites redone by some of today's most popular artists. Singers such as Billy Joel, Harry Connick, Jr., L.L. Cool J, Michael Bolton and Ric Ocasek perform the classics with child-like energy. The LP reminds listeners of old ballads like "When You Wish Upon A Star" and "Someday My Prince Will Come," songs many children base their dreams.

> Harry Connick, Jr. turns "The Jungle Book's" "The Bare Necessities" into a jazz extravaganza.

The Gipsy Kings do an amazing version of "I've Got No Strings" from "Pinnochio." The first verse of the song is sung in Spanish, recognizing Disney's worldwide influence and the great number of Spanish-speaking people in this nation.

Harry Connick, Jr. turns "The Jungle Book's" "The Bare Necessities" into a jazz extravaganza. In addition, "Kiss The Girl," performed by Soul II Soul, is transformer into a reggae/calypso classic.

Some of the most interesting tunes are the least expected. Bobby McFerrin turns "The Siamese Cat Song" from "Lady and the Tramp" into a haunting musical harmony of sounds. "Who's Afraid of the Big Bad Wolf" from "The Three Little Pigs" is transformed from an innocent rhyme into a powerful street smart rap by L.L. Cool J. Consequently, Ric Ocasek creates a progressive mix from the staple of "Song of the South," "Zip-A-Dee-Doo-Dah."

"Simply Mad About The Mouse" is truly a musical celebration. Not exclusively for children, the Disney tunes may be more attractive to adults. The songs remind the listener of the innocence, curiosity and dreams that are essential in a young child's imagination. Disney takes his fans on a trip down memory lane with "Simply Mad About The Mouse."

Conti helps 'Nova to victory

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Staff Reporter

With a challenging schedule ahead, the women's soccer team continued to make significant strides, enjoying a solid 1-0-1 week. In a home matchup against Bucknell University Oct. 2, the Cats dismantled the Bison 5-1 before playing SUNY-Stony Brook to a tough 1-1 tie Oct. 5.

In their first night game of the season, the Cats treated visiting Bucknell unkindly en route to scoring five first period goals. The offense kicked into high gear immediately as Marcy Micek scored 9:37 into the contest off a crossing shot by Gail Kegolis. Less than a minute later, Rachel Moreau and Eileen McCarthy assisted on Sharon Hewitt's third score of the season at 10:24.

With an early 2-0 lead, the Cats hounded the Bucknell defense throughout the opening half. Senior Tina Conti beat the Bison keeper midway through the period with her fifth goal of the season, to push the lead to 3-0. At 35:30 of the match, Tanya Shuman notched an insurance goal off a Kim Mullany corner kick. Moments later, Beth Parrish finished Bucknell with her first score of the season on another Mullany assist.

As the Cats hammered the Bisons defense, goalie Karen Del Sarto and company preserved the shutout throughout the first half. 'Nova outshot its opponent 27-8, while keepers Del Sarto and Danielle Fagan turned away five shots on goal. The Bison managed to rally for a score late in the second half before folding to the potent Cats 5-1.

'Nova next traveled to SUNY—Stony Brook in search of its eighth victory of the season. Three days after exploding for five goals in one period against Bucknell, the Cats dueled to a stalemate 1-1 with Stony Brook. In a contest in which 'Nova amassed 25 shots on goal, the Stony Brook keeper, who produced 15 saves, stifled the Cats.

Although the Cats supplied the firepower, the Stony Brook offense jumped to an early 1-0 lead at 6:50 into the match. Still in the first half, the Clancy-to-Conti connection provided the equalizer. At 12:07, Conti guided in Dawn Clancy's direct kick to knot the score after the Stony Brook keeper mishandled the shot. Over the span of regulation and the two overtime periods, the Cats were denied every scoring opportunity and settled for another tie.

With the ECAC Tournament looming down the road, the Cats look to improve on their current 7-3-2 record. After their final home game against Rutgers University, the Cats will confront the University of Central Florida tomorrow and American University Sunday.

Men cruise

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

The men's soccer team continues to enjoy success under first-year head coach Larry Sullivan. After winning two games last week, the Cats raised their record to 7-2, earning a tie for first place in the Philadelphia Soccer 7.

'Nova first went to work against local opponent Swarthmore College at Villanova Stadium Oct. 2. After a defensive battle, the Cats managed to come away with a 1-0 victory over the Garnet. Sophomore Tim Gannon scored the only goal of the game on an assist from Scott Aimetti. Once again, junior goalkeeper Mike Guarino played well, recording one save on the way to his fourth shutout.

Villanova traveled to Soccer 7 rival St. Joseph's for an afternoon match Oct. 5. Aimetti began the scoring effort in the first half when he scored off a pass from sophomore Joe Roy. 'Nova led 1-0 until the Hawks tied the score with 33:25 remaining in regulation. Less than two minutes later, Villanova answered. Once again, Aimetti scored on an assist from Roy for a 2-1 Wildcat lead. The Cats added to their lead at the 29:23 mark when junior Eric Hinds scored after receiving a pass from Pat O'Malley. Shortly thereafter, St. Joe's cut the Wildcat lead to 3-2, but the Cats held on for the victory. 'Nova jumped into a first-place tie in the Soccer 7 with a 2-1 record.

After visiting LaSalle in a Soccer 7 matchup, the Cats will host the University of Pittsburgh Sunday afternoon at Villanova Stadium at 3:30 p.m. Villanova will then face Muhlenberg College Oct. 5 at 3:30 p.m.

NOTES: The Cats have several players among the scoring leaders in the Philadelphia Soccer 7. Roy (5 goals, 3 assists; 13 points) ranks fourth in the league in scoring with 1.63 points per game. Aimetti (3 goals, 5 assists; 11 points) ranks in the top 10 with a 1.22 scoring average and Rich Maue (4 goals, 2 assists; 10 points) is also among the league leaders, averaging 1.11 points per game . . .

Villanova has shut out its opposition four times in nine games, but has not been shut out ... Goalie Guarino has played every minute (840) of every game this year, recording four shutouts to go along with a .786 save percentage and a 1.71 goals-against average.

Women's volleyball improves to 17-2 with the help of sets like this one by Vicky Dispenza.

Volleyball continues to roll

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Staff Reporter

The volleyball team continued to roll last week, capturing the LaSalle Invitational Tournament. In the process, the Cats posted their first Big Five win of the season.

Becky Kulbago and Vicky Dispenza each earned first team all-tournament honors. In addition, Dispenza, a junior setter, was selected as the tournament's Most Valuable Player.

Kulbago, a sophomore middle hitter, is one of the reasons for the team's high level of success thus far. An offensive force, she currently leads the team in attacks, kills and kill average. She has played in every one of the Cats' games this season.

Coach David Barkley was pleased with the strong overall team effort that 'Nova put forth in the tournament. He said the effort "was good because once again we were able to give a lot of people playing time. Molly Gorman went in and had a real good match. Amy Steigerwalt had a good match when she went in and played well."

The Cats received another boost recently with the return of a healthy Amy Burke. A freshman middle hitter, Burke suffered an injury Sept. 7 in a match against George Mason.

"We have a real nice dilemma in that we now have two people who are pretty equal vying for that position, Amy Lam and Amy Burke," said Barkley. He added that the two would probably platoon "based on their strengths versus the strengths of the opponent."

In the opening round of the tournament, 'Nova cruised past Navy in three games (15-6,15-7,15-9). They then proceeded to crush Fairleigh Dickinson (15-0,15-8, 15-2) and St. Peter's (15-0,15-2,15-6), registering a shutout in each match. The St. Peter's contest represented the fewest points Villanova has allowed this year (eight).

> When they beat us in our first game, we had to go four with them. They played the best game I've ever seen a LaSalle team play.
> Head Coach David Barkley

The Wildcats concluded their tournament sweep by beating LaSalle (13-15,15-3,15-4,15-7).

"When they beat us in our first game, we had to go four with them," Barkley said. "They played the best game I've ever seen a LaSalle team play."

Barkley liked how the team responded after dropping the initial game. "That's a positive sign about this team. They adjusted. They didn't freak out. They didn't panic. If anything, it inspired them to play better."

With an overall record of 17-2 (1-0 Big East), the Wildcats have shown they are deserving of some national recognition. In the meantime, their focus lies on the Big East race.

'Nova will play host to Providence College in a Big East battle at the Nevin Field House tonight at 7:30 p.m. Barkley sees the Providence contest as an even match. "Providence is always, always a strong team," he said. Every year, Dick Bagge is one of the best coaches in the Big East." He characterized the Friars as a tough, scrappy team.

Barkley admitted that if the Cats were to have an advantage over the Friars,it would come in the form of the home crowd. he explained how the fans pump up the players and distract the visiting teams. "It (the crowd) affects the team 100 percent," he said.

Villanova will host Boston College tomorrow night in another conference match. "That should be a win for us," said Barkley. "But they are good enough that if we're off they'll take us." The match will begin at 7 p.m.

Golf scores 11th at PSU

By PETER MORRICE
Staff Reporter

The Wildcat golf team journeyed to University Park, Pa., Oct. 5-6 and placed 11th at the annual Penn State Invitational.

The challenging Penn State University Blue Course hosted the 54-hole event. The field played 27 holes each day under seasonal fall conditions.

Freshman Jon Kelly paced the Cats, carding rounds of 77, 74 and 76 on the demanding par-72 layout. Kelly finished in a sixth-place tie in the individual competition. He also finished sixth at the West Point Invitational earlier this fall, posting rounds of 75 and 69. With these Top 10 finishes, Kelly has emerged as the most reliable player on the Villanova roster this season.

Other notable performances for Villanova included rounds of 77 (Rob Booth), 78 (Chris Cox and Chad Wasserman) and 79 (Jason Cordes). Booth, Cordes, Cox and Wasserman totaled 240, 240, 242 and 244 respectively.

"We're starting to shoot some better scores, but we need more balance and consistency. We need four solid rounds everyday, instead of just one or two," said junior Chris Cox.

Overall, the team combined rounds of 312, 321 and 310 for a 943 total, enough for 11th place in the field. Tournament host Penn State won the event, shooting 295, 300 and 300 for an impressive three-round aggregate of 895.

The golf team is off this weekend before competing in the St. John's Invitational at Bethpage State Park's Black Course in New York Oct. 19-20.

No. 6 Villanova versus No. 16 Delaware

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

In a game anticipated since the beginning of the football season, Villanova locks horns with the University of Delaware Oct. 19 at Delaware Stadium before an anticipated sellout crowd of 23,000. The matchup, considered one of the more intriguing games in all of college football, will be the first true test for the Wildcats, who have overwhelmed their first five opponents. The Cats have outscored their opponents 214-29, an average of 37 points per game.

But the Blue Hens provide a much greater challenge, especially when considering the home field advantage. Boosted by a strong defense and a well-balanced offense, Delaware may prove to be the Cats' biggest hurdle in their quest for the Yankee Conference title.

Here is a unit-by-unit look at the matchups:

'Nova Running Game vs. Delaware Run Defense

This matchup will determine 'Nova's fate offensively. Both units are strengths for their squads and have the ability to dominate the action. The 'Nova line, anchored by center Tim Tarpey and tackle Mike Possenti, has provided strong and consistent play while opening gaping holes for running backs Pat Kennedy and Jeff Johnson and protecting quarterback Tom Colombo. The rushing game averages 217.8 yards per game while the pass offense racks up 276.8 yards. Clearly, the line has lived up to expectations despite starting only one senior.

The Blue Hen defensive line is solid, but does not have the dominant force capable of taking over the game. Last week against New Hampshire, the line surrendered 173 yards rushing to tailback Barry Bourassa. If either Kennedy or Johnson gain over 100 yards, it could be a long day for the Hen defense.

Kennedy and Johnson form one of the conference's best backfield tandems. Kennedy is having a banner senior season, gaining 447 yards on 79 carries (5.7 average) and catching 18 balls out of the backfield. Prior to the Boston game, Kennedy ranked as the nation's second-leading scorer and has 11 touchdowns on the year.

Johnson, also a quality runner, specializes in blocking and has helped open holes for Kennedy throughout the year. But the junior fullback will have a difficult task against the Blue Hens. He must square off against middle linebacker Bob Wolford.

Wolford, a 6-foot-2-inch, 232-pound senior co-captain, anchors the Hen defense. He registered 96 tackles last season and is receiving all-conference recognition this season.

While Wolford solidifies the inside, outside backers Tim Irvine and Pat Mulhern provide consistent if not outstanding play. It will be their job to contain against 'Nova's outside running game. If Irving and Mulhern can force 'Nova to run between the tackles, Wolford could register 15 tackles and contain the 'Nova running game.

Edge: Villanova

'Nova Passing Corps vs. Delaware Secondary

In a word, the Wildcat passing game has been unstoppable. Led by the fiery Colombo, the Wildcats have scorched their opponents with a balanced and explosive air game. Colombo, who has completed almost 69 percent of his passes, spreads the ball equally between his receivers, tight ends and backs. In fact, the wide receivers have caught 43 passes, tight ends 20 grabs and running backs have 35 catches.

Of the corps, Colombo, flanker Scott Thompson (17 catches for 342) and tight end Scott Donald (20 for 220) are All-American candidates.

Fortunately for the Blue Hens, the deepest and most talented position on the squad is the defensive backfield, where seven quality players reside.

The Hens match-up well against Thompson and Harold Hart with a bevy of talented corners. All-Yankee selection Robin Callender, Tim Jacobs and Marc Sydnor present a terrific defensive triumvirate. Sophomore sensation Scott Acker provides even more depth. If anyone can shut down the Cats' explosive receivers, the Blue Hens stand the best chance.

The safety position also adds quality play to the Delaware secondary. Three-year starter Jay Mirabelli and co-starters Warren McIntire and Brian Quigg form an excellent backline.

Edge: Even

Delaware Running Game vs. 'Nova Run Defense

The Blue Hen running game provides the ferocious Cat defense with its sternest test yet. The running ability of quarterback Bill Verganito allows Delaware to mix up its run selection. The Blue Hens run the option, play power football and utilize counters and traps in a well-rounded ground attack. Verganito bacame the first quarterback in team history to lead the team in rushing last year when he scampered for 691 yards.

The Delaware running backs are in their first year as starters, but both halfback Jim Lazarski, who rushed for 300 yards last year, and Marcus Lewis are experienced and talented.

While the Blue Hen running attack causes fear for most defensive squads, the Wildcats are looking forward to the challenge. Defensive tackle Willie Oshodin and linebacker Curtis Eller set the tone for what has blossomed into the nation's finest defense. The Cats have allowed only 84.8 yards per game. But more importantly, opponents gain only 2.4 yards per rush.

Against the Blue Hens, something has to give. But if the first five games are any indication, it will not be the Cat defense. 'Nova is too quick, too strong and too intense to give up major yardage on the ground.

Edge: Villanova

Delaware Passing Game vs. 'Nova Passing Game

While Verganito is one of the country's top running quarterbacks, he can also put the ball in the air. Last year, he threw for 1,528 yards and eight touchdowns. The receiving corps is solid, but unspectacular. Sophomores Keita Malloy and Dan Cooper possess tons of talent, but are still learning in their first year of starting duty.

While the Blue Hen receiving corps is young, the Cat secondary is loaded with quality talent. Free safety Chuck Murray, a starter last year, is now second team because of Barry Alvis' outstanding play. Orin Soloman and Tim Davis are excellent corners, with Solomon a candidate for postseason honors.

But the true standout for 'Nova is senior strong safety. Big, strong and fast, Long requires special mention whenever talk of 'Nova's defensive unit arises.

Edge: Villanova

Outlook: If the game lives up to its hype, it will be the Division I-AA game of the year. But Delaware's 45-28 loss to New Hampshire exposed its lack of a dominant defense, mandatory when facing a 'Nova squad that rarely allows points. Coaches say that teams win big games on the road with a great defense. The 'Nova defense is tremendous and it alone could carry the Cats to the Yankee crown. But defense aside, if the game comes down to kicking, Delaware holds a major advantage. While the game is on the road, the Cats experience should offset any crowd advantage. And with Colombo and Eller leading their respective units, 'Nova is focused and ready to prove itself a Top 5 team.

Prediction: Villanova 24, Delaware 13

Villanova started off on the right foot with a 6-3 victory against West Chester Oct. 1. at home. The Wildcats won all six singles matches in straight sets. Freshman Kelly Barnes, the No. 2 singles player, won 6-0 and 6-0.

The Cats beat La Salle 8-1 at the St. Mary's Courts Oct. 2. Senior Krista Chamberlain, who won 6-0 amd 6-0 at No. 4 singles, and sophomore Julie Homicz, who won 6-0 and 6-0 at No. 6 singles, led Villanova to victory.

Villanova continued its hot play with the Oct. 3 downing of Lehigh 7-2. Chamberlain once again led the Wildcats, winning at the No. 4 singles slot and with Sophomore Carolyn Daley at the No. 1 doubles slot. Villanova also won five of the six singles matches.

In their only Big East match of the week, the Cats turned away St. John's 6-3 during Parents' Weekend. Daley took the No. 1 singles match 6-1 and 6-2, while senior Michelle Bush captured the No. 5 singles match, 6-1 and 6-1.

Their only away match of the week, Oct. 6 at Fordham, was canceled due to rain.

Villanova closed out the week beating Drexel 7-1 Oct. 7. It was Dr. Robert Langran's 599th career coaching victory with the combined men's and women's programs. Senior Kerry Amen won 6-0 and 6-0 in her No. 3 singles match and Homicz won 6-1 and 6-1 at No. 6 singles to help secure the victory.

Dr. Langran will go for the 600th win of his career as the season comes to a close this weekend. The Wildcats will go to Seton Hall for the four-day Big East Conference Tournament.

Yankee Conference Week In Review

By BOB TRAVISANO AND TOM COLLINS
*Staff Reporter and
Sports Editor*

The race for the Yankee Conference Crown became much clearer after last weekend's slate of games. Delware, a favorite for the title, lost to New Hampshire 45-28. UNH placed itself as co-favorite with Villanova with the win. Now a roundup of last week's games:

New Hampshire 45, Delaware 28

The Wildcats high-powered offense, which returned all its starters from last year, manhandled a much-vaunted Delaware defense in a game not as close as the score indicated. UNH tailback Barry Bourassa, second in the Yankee Conference in scoring, singlehandedly destroyed the Blue Hens, rushing for 175 yards and two touchdowns while adding a 95-yard kickoff return. The win vaulted the Wildcats six places to No. 14 in the latest Top 20 poll. The Blue Hens dropped from fifth to 16th after the loss.

Maine 19, Richmond 14

Maine avenged last season's loss to the Spiders with a solid defensive effort. The Black Bears went into the locker room at halftime with a 19-0 lead. But the Spiders rallied to make the game a contest but fell short, unable to generate any offense in the game's closing minutes.

Connecticut 34, Yale 20

QB Cornelius Benton exploded for 305 yards passing and three touchdowns in the first half alone as the Huskies crushed their Ivy League opponent in a non-conference game. The UConn passing attack leads the Yankee, averaging almost 300 yards per game.

Rhode Island 38, Brown 36

In another Yankee versus Ivy battle, Rhode Island sustained a late Brown rally to win this thriller. Tailback Dario Highsmith dominated the action with 127 yards rushing, including a 60-yard touchdown which put the Rams up 38-21 with less than nine minutes remaining.

James Madison 24, Massachusetts 7

JMU's solid ground attack proved to be too much for the visiting Minutemen. Tailback Kenny Smith rushed for 166 yards and scampered for an 80 yard touchdown first play of the game to set the tone for the rest of the game.

Cats crush Boston 56-6, move to No. 6

by ANDY FITZPATRICK
Assistant Sports Editor

On a beautiful, sunny 80-degree Saturday, the sixth-ranked Cats made it even nicer with a 56-6 slaughter of Boston University in front of a sellout crowd of 12,000 at Villanova Stadium.

Not since a 56-21 victory over Holy Cross in 1976 has a Villanova football team scored 56 points. The game was so lopsided that many of the fans left in the third quarter when the Cats led 49-0. All the fourth-stringers and walk-ons saw action.

"The general attitude of the team is not to let down and we showed that we have the killer instinct," said Head Coach Andy Talley.

And what a killer instinct it was. The Cat defense held BU to just 102 yards on the ground, blocked both a punt and an extra-point, forced two fumbles and five interceptions and held the Terrier offense to just 11 first downs.

Offensively, the Cats showed true balance with 241 yards on the ground and 241 in the air. Quarterback Tommy Colombo completed 16 of 20 for 215 yards for two touchdowns in just one half of action while running back Pat Kennedy had his sixth career 100-yard game with 112 yards on 20 carries.

"I felt bad for both Kennedy and Colombo since they only played a half," said Talley. "They are among the nation's leaders in many offensive categories and coming out hurt their stats, but fortunately Pat got his 100 yards. He is the best tailback in the Yankee Conference. There is no question in my mind."

The game actually started off on a bad note with a 'Nova turnover. Running back Jeff Johnson coughed up the ball on BU's 38-yard line but the Cats defense got it right back with an interception by Chuck Murray. From then on it was all Villanova. Colombo found Harold Hart for a 48-yard TD as the fans were still filing in to put 'Nova up 7-0.

After another Terrier turnover, the Cats capitalized as Kennedy plunged in from 1-yard out for the first of his two TD's. Kennedy is averaging 13.50 points per game which places him second in the nation in scoring. Johnson closed out the scoring in the first half with an 8-yard touchdown run on a draw play to make the score 28-0, Cats at halftime.

If there was still any doubt as BU received the second half kick-off, it was soon settled. Linebacker Curtis Eller intercepted a Terrier pass that bounced off the receiver's pads and returned it seven yards for the defense's first touchdown of the year. That made it 35-0 with still almost two quarters left.

Going into the game, 'Nova was expecting a much tougher test against a Boston squad that lost to fifth-ranked Holy Cross by just four, 27-23. However, it never materialized. The Terrier offense was out of sync the entire day and could never sustain any kind of drive. The Cats attacked right from the start and had such a big lead that BU knew there was no coming back on the 'Nova defense.

Meanwhile, the Cat offense did not miss a beat when Brad Barpan replaced Colombo at QB in the second half. With such a big lead, the play calling became very conservative. In fact, the offense attempted only two passes in the entire second half sticking to a ground attack that ran down the clock. Backs Kevin Mosley and Anthony Carangi both added rushing touchdowns to put'Nova up 56-0.

The only negative occurred in the fourth quarter when Boston broke the shutout but the Cats blocked the extra-point to typify Boston's woes. Those were the first points given up by the Cats defense this year in the fourth quarter but they were able to remain first in Division 1-AA in scoring defense, allowing only 5.8 points per game.

Mike Anastasia lunges forward after catching his first pass of the year.

The Cats have tomorrow off and are preparing for their toughest game so far, an Oct. 19 clash at Delaware. The Blue Hens are currently 16th and will play tomorrow at BU.

"We are looking forward to Delaware," said Talley. "We need the off week and will shorten practice because we have to go in there with all our guns."

As a group, Talley is relly impressed with the work ethic of the 1991 Wildcats. “”This group thoroughly enjoys playing football. They have a zest for the game and play it fast and aggressively."

NOTES: There was definitely a football fever in the air at Villanova Stadium last Saturday on Parents Weekend. The game was a sellout and there were fans standing around the entire stadium. Who says 'Nova football isn't big time? There were even ticket scalpers seen milling around outside in the parking lots . . . The Cats will host William and Mary Oct. 26 in a non-conference game that will be played on the last weekend of break . . . Is there a more impressive 5-0 team in the country? The Cats have outscored their five opponents by a score of 214-29.

Paolantonio stars in victories

Stickwomen vault to 5-4-1

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

Anchored by a stingy defense and the brilliant play of co-captain Missy Paolantonio, the Wildcats came storming out of their slump. They have won their last four games, vaulting their record over the .500 mark (5-4-1). Since the streak begin, the Cats have reversed the bad luck which plagued them at the beginning of the season and now find themselves on the winning side in close games.

After its first Big East win of the season, Villanova took its act to St. Joseph's Oct. 1. The match went into overtime with no score, but Barbara King's goal put this one in the books for 'Nova.

Two days later, the Wildcats played host to La Salle University. Though Villanova looked like the dominant team throughout the contest, this was not reflected by the scoreboard until halfway through the second half. Midfielder Staci Verzera, who played an outstanding game both offensively and defensively, drove home her first goal of the season. 'Nova's defense insured this would be the only goal needed, completely shutting down La Salle's offensive attack and winning its third in a row.

Yet another 1-0 win was in store for the Cats as they ventured into Philadelphia to face Temple University. The game, originally slated for Oct. 5 was moved to the following day, but the day off was not enough to cool down the relentless play of the stickwomen. The 'Nova defense proved once again to be unyielding, as the Owls were unable to put anything in the net. Paolantonio was quick to drill in a rebound off the net, scoring the lone goal of this game.

"[Goalie Chrissy Thomas] has been having good games. She's been clearing the ball really well."
Head Coach Jackie Gerzabek

Paolantonio, playing the midfield position, has been a vital part of the newly-found success of the Wildcats. In two of the recent 1-0 Villanova victories, she has been the one to come through with the much-needed goal. The goal against Temple was her fourth of the season, and her play earned high accolades from coach Jackie Gerzabek.

"She comes through for us when we need her," said Gerzabek. "We moved her to the midfield line so she could control the game offensively and defensively."

The four consecutive shutouts were not attained without strong goaltending, and freshman goalie Chrissy Thomas has improved tremendously as the season has progressed. Gerzabek said Thomas "has been having good games. She's been clearing the ball really well and having great saves."

The winning streak has included only one Big East victim, but Villanova will get a chance to improve on its 1-2 conference record when the Syracuse Orangewomen square off against the Wildcats Oct. 14.

University boosts community economy and recognition

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
Assistant News Editor

The University's relationship with the surrounding Radnor Township, economically and noneconomically, benefits the community's business, employment, education and entertainment, according to a study by the College of Commerce and Finance.

The 1989 study of the impact of the University on Radnor Township was co-authored by James J. Clarke, finance; Edward Mathis, economics; and Charles Zech, economics. The study concluded that the University's "regional prominence and its national recognition is a positive factor in Radnor's total-makeup."

The study found that the "total spending impact within the township was $21,466,697" in the fiscal year 1988-89.

University student spending in the township totaled $7,097,971 in 1988-89, reported the Commerce and Finance study. Also, the University itself purchased "$879,147 in goods and services from businesses within the borders of Radnor Township.

"The numbers show that Villanova makes incredible monetary contributions to the area ... We had to make some assumptions and we always went conservative. If anything, these numbers are underestimated," said Zech.

Some area businesses do not rely on Villanova students for revenue but instead for employment. Gullifty's restaurant in Rosemont makes only about 5 percent of their revenue from students, said owner Gene Johnson, but students do have a "tremendous impact" on employment at Gullifty's and in the area, he added.

Student employment also benefits the township economically by the multiplier effect, Zech said.

Hostile residents grill Langran

By KRISTIN JULASON
News Editor

Dr. Robert Langran, a political science professor and the Democratic candidate for the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners, met Republican incumbent James J. Marks for a debate Oct. 23 in the St. Thomas of Villanova Church hall.

The Radnor Township chapter of the League of Women Voters sponsored the event in anticipation of the Nov. 5 general elections.

Langran was questioned during the sometimes heated debate by audience members who wondered whether he was the "Villanova candidate or the Democratic candidate." Langran said that he would try to balance both. "When I make a decision I try to keep the interests of the community in balance with the interests of the University. I would not always give a pro-Villanova decision. Just because I work there doesn't mean I agree with everything Villanova University does," he added.

"I do feel something has to be done to accommodate Villanova University students who are forced to move off campus in their junior and senior years," Langran said. "I think it should be something that is done jointly with the neighboring townships ... In Merion and Haverford townships they can have three students [living in one house] while Radnor only has two. It seems to me that something like four [students per house] is not an unreasonable number if you have a two bedroom house," he added.

"The ideal, of course, would be for Villanova University to build the dormitories on the West Campus and they have presently received permission to do. And in that case the purpose is not to increase the incoming freshman class, the purpose is to keep junior and seniors on campus," Langran said.

> "I'm a little displeased with the hostility here . . . I'm trying to win an election the right way."
> Dr. Robert Langran, political science

Marks, who has served on the Board of Commissioners since 1985, said his "personal feeling is Villanova creates the problem, Villanova should solve the probelm. We gave Villanova University permission to build on West Campus; they claim they have no money ... I made the suggestion that Villanova owns the property between the P&W parking lot and Keating offices on Lancaster Pike. [They should] knock those buildings down and build three nice dorms. I'm sure the planning committee might let them [build as high] as four stories and there would be plenty of parking ... they [students] wouldn't bother any residents. But Villanova didn't even consider that issue."

Marks also said that if elected to township commissioner, the housing ordiance requiring no more than two persons living together would remain the same.

'Nova professors to discuss AIDS

By JOHN MULLIGAN
Staff Reporter

Dr. Sheryl Bowen and Dr. Paula Michal-Johnson, both of the Communication Arts department, will discuss AIDS (acquired immune deficiency syndrome) on college campuses in a Women's Series Lecture sponsored by the Panhellenic Council Nov. 6 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center.

Bowen and Michal-Johnson have collected data on student attitudes and behavior from five universities and colleges in the Philadelphia area. They report that Villanova students do not differ from their peers at other institutions in terms of attiude and sexual behavior.

"Today's students have grown up with AIDS; they are aware of the facts," Michal-Johnson said.

Although "most statistics show that people have AIDS awareness ... we do not know what people are doing with the information," Bowen added.

"We need to clarify the ways that college students put themselves at risk, and we need to teach them how to take responsibility for their actions," Michal-Johnson said.

Villanova's Catholic tradition does not prohibit the University from participating in the AIDS discussion. "Villanova had in the past a very active AIDS Task

Dean answers questions on proposed core curriculum

By TINA McGARRIGLE
Staff Reporter

The University Senate held its second meeting of the 1991-92 academic year on Oct. 11 in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall.

In response to the Executive Committee power of interpellation, the Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, addressed questions posed by Mark O'Rourke, Student Government president, regarding proposed changes to the Arts and Sciences' core curriculum.

The committee's first question concerned why the existing subcommittee of the Academic Policy Committee was bypassed in favor of a separate Ad-Hoc Committee.

"The Senate Constitution provides for the Academic Policy Committee to formulate policy in academic matters which affect more than one college in the University," said Ellis. "The proposed core for the college of Arts and Sciences is intended for that college only. Therefore, the Academic Policy Committee would not be involved in the formulation of a core curriculum for the College of Arts and Sciences," he added.

The primary reason for undertaking the process of altering the core was also questioned. Ellis then provided a brief history of dialogue concerning core curriculum in higher education and more specifically at the University. The core curriculum of the College of Arts and Sciences was last evaluated in 1972.

The Rev. Kail Ellis, O.S.A., dean of the College of Arts and Sciences.

In response to discussions on the core's role and concerns over its quality, the core is presently being evaluated to "see how it confirms to the mission statement of the college and to the values which are expressed in the University's Mission Statement," said Ellis.

Ellis went on to say that "this process worked for the College of Arts and Sciences and was not a radical departure from the current core curriculum." The current core has 22 courses with 68 credit hours required. The proposed core has 21 courses with 65 credit hours required.

At present, the College Curriculum Committee is reviewing the final report of the Ad-Hoc committee and will draw its final conclusions by Nov. 11.

The Senate also heard a report from the Budget Committee and discussed the status of the forthcoming Priorities Report by the Planning and Priorities Committee.

MADRID

President George Bush and Mikhail S. Gorbachev discussed world affairs Oct. 29 in Madrid just like old times. But this time only Bush brought superpower status to the table.

The Soviet leader, whose international stature has shrunk due to his disintegrating empire, came to Madrid looking for a reassertion of his importance to the West.

Bush praised Gorbachev and vowed to continue doing business with him and the political center he represents. But he did not give Gorbachev the food aid and credits he and his nation need.

With Bush at his side, Gorbachev did get a chance to tell a worldwide television audience that he is still running Moscow.

KINSHASA, ZAIRE

As foreign nationals fled the spreading anarchy that gripped Zaire, President Mobutu Sese Seko and opposition leaders continued negotiations yesterday to try to end the chaos.

About 50,000 Zairians took to the streets, dancing and singing, when a rumor spread that Mobutu had reappointed his chief rival as prime minister. But the report was false.

Men in khaki with automatic weapons patrolled the streets of the Zaire capital. Most shops were closed or gutted, and wire stretched around the prime minister's Congo River compound.

Mobutu, for 26 years the dictator of Zaire, was closeted with opposition leaders for the third straight day by Oct. 29.

JERUSALEM

Three Israeli soldiers were killed and five were wounded Oct. 29 in two separate attacks in southern Lebanon as Arab fighters stepped up their campaign to disrupt the Middle East peace conference in Madrid.

Two Arab fighters were killed and one was wounded in the exchange of fire, the Israel Defense Forces announced.

In retaliation for the attacks, Israeli helicopter gunships strafed fields at the edge of the Rashidiyeh refugee camp near Tyre in southern Lebanon, local police said, killling one refugee and wounding three others. Israeli artillery also bombarded other areas in southern Lebanon.

Gen. Ehud Barak, the chief of staff, warned that more attacks could be expected as tension in the region builds over the Madrid peace talks.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

The U.S. intellilgence community has recently concluded that Iran is aggressively seeking to develop a nuclear weapon with the help of equipment purchased from China, according to Bush administration officials.

The Iranian purchase from China that recently caught U.S. attention, the officials say, involved equipment similar to the calutron devices discovered in Iraq last summer during international inspections there.

These devices are considered capable of producing highly enriched uranium — a vital component of nuclear weapons — through a process of electromagnetic isotope separation.

Administration officials said their new concern about Iran's intentions was heightened last week when a senior Iranian official expressed interest in building a nuclear arsenol to match that believed held by Israel.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

The U. S. economy started growing this summer for the first time in a year, springing forward at a 2.4 percent rate from July through September.

But the burst of growth appears to have faded almost as quickly as it appeared.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the country's output of goods and services, climbed at the fastest pace in two-and-a-half years in the third quarter after three consecutive quarterly declines as the country struggled through the recession.

Programs benefit seniors

By MICHAEL RANCOURT
Staff Reporter

With economists predicting a slow recovery from the current recession, students interning may have a better edge on the job market in the spring.

The Internship program allows juniors and seniors in certain departments of the College of Arts and Sciences to work in their academic field in the Delaware Valley or the region from New York to Washington, D.C.

"An internship has great value since the job market may not be that good for the class of 1992. Recruiters pay more attention to a student who has had an internship," said Dr. Albert Dorley Jr., director of the Internship Program. "Internships allow a student to do actual entry-level work. As a result, you gain self-confidence, provide direction or redirection in career planning, and make contacts."

For qualified students, it is a valuable opportunity to show that you have "tested the waters" in the business world, and help make a more interesting resume, said Dorley.

Students must have a cumulative grade point average of at least 3.0 and must be able to receive departmental academic credit for the experience, ranging from 3 to 15 credits.

It is not too late for seniors to set up an internship for the spring semester, according to Dorley. "I would really encourage seniors to look into the internship program, as it is their last chance to do so at Villanova.

Options exist, however, for seniors who cannot fit an internship into their last semester. Many non-profit organizations offer internships for graduates, said Nancy Dudak,director of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

In the tough job market, seniors who cannot find a paying job might find an internship after graduation "an excellent way to acquire business skills and a credible way to spend their time," Dudak said.

"A post-graduate internship may be a realistic plan, but students should be very selective in choosing one. One should choose a program that allows the intern an opportunity to learn. Also the student should go about finding one like a regular job search," Dudak said.

Winter break is a good time to network yourself among family and friends to find an organization that offers a legitimate internship program, she added.

Dr. Eli Goldblatt, English, read and discussed books by Dr. Seuss on Oct. 11 in a memorial service for the late children's fiction writer.

Prof remembers work of Dr. Seuss

By MARY JANE MAHAN
Staff Reporter

A memorial service was held for Dr. Seuss, the late children's fiction writer, in the Old Falvey Library on Oct. 11 at 1:30 p.m. Dr. Eli Goldblatt of the English Department initiated the idea for the service. Its purpose was to read out loud some of Seuss' books and discuss what he meant to the lives of children and adults, he said.

About 45 people attended the service where Goldblatt and Villanova students Adrian Ready and Mike Scoble read "Yertle the Turtle, Green Eggs and Ham," and "The Butter Battle Book," respectively. A "friends' meeting" was conducted afterwards in which everyone was quiet until someone had something to say. Six to eight people spoke on their experiences with Seuss.

> It's important that we recognize that children's literature is a vital part of our literature. It shapes us in ways that Hemingway and Faulkner don't.
> Dr. Eli Goldblatt, professor of English

Outside the service Goldblatt said he read "Yertle the Turtle" because it is a great political parable about exploitation. He further explained that Seuss was in many ways a strong political and moral writer who spun fictions about true tales of life. "It's important that we recognize that children's literature is a vital part of our literature. It shapes us in ways that Hemingway and Faulkner don't," he said.

Goldblatt compared Dr. Seuss to Dr. Spock, who was blamed in part for the counterculture of the 1960s because he encouraged children to challenge authority. Goldblatt's theory was that Dr. Seuss raised similar issues through the use of imagination.

Seuss tried to get children to support unpopular projects like the character Horton from Seuss' "Horton Hears A Who," said Goldblatt.

Scoble said he chose "The Butter Battle Book" because it really is a story for adults that addresses issues such as discrimination. By confronting adult problems in a childlike manner, Seuss shows how these problems are often founded on very silly reasons and irrational fear, said Scoble.

Radnor Police Dept. appoints police superintendent

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

Radnor Police Department appointed the new Superintendent of Police Henry Jansen on Aug. 19. He replaced former Commissioner Maurice L. Hennessey who retired after serving 40 years on the Radnor police force. "I hope to follow in his footsteps," said Jansen.

As superintendent, Jansen acts as overseer of the police department. He works with the deputy superintendent and two lieutenants to assist in the management of the department.

Jansen said he believes in a "team concept" although he has the "last word." He has worked on the Radnor police force for 38 years as of April.

"We are trying to improve the morale of the men, get involved with the community through community policing and get all the training we can to keep up with the times," Jansen said.

Radnor police officers involve themselves in community events by walking around and letting people know there are police officers around, said Jansen.

In the Villanova community, University students are treated just as other students, but if they violate the law they must pay the consequences.

"I have children who went through high school and then on to college, and I hope they were treated fairly at their respective colleges," Jansen said.

Villanova students give the Radnor police respect, said Jansen. "For a University of that size, not a lot of them cause trouble. Ninety-nine percent are great kids," he added.

> It would be nice if Villanova had more campus space to accommodate the resident students. It would be good for them and the University.
> Henry Jansen, superintendent of Radnor Police Department

For some minor infractions, the Radnor police look the other way, according to Jansen. The 1991 academic year has been quiet, he said.

The Radnor Township housing law states that no more than two unrelated people may live together. Jansen said the law is probably violated by some students. The community development looks into the infractions when neighbors issue complaints.

"It would be nice if Villanova had more campus space" to accommodate the resident students, Jansen said. "It would be good for them and the University."

Habitat for Humanity builds houses for needy

By BECKY UMLAND
Staff Reporter

Villanova student volunteers involved in the campus Habitat for Humanity program work for the Norristown Habitat chapter are in the process of building their second house.

Student, faculty, administrators and staff have volunteered their time and energy to raise money for Habitat, to increase the level of awareness on campus.

Campus Ministry started a Habitat for Humanity campus chapter three years ago. Habitat's motto is to build "a decent house in a decent community for God's people."

Every Saturday approximately 12 volunteers from campus go to the Norristown site to work. Student Chairpeople Tom Brinker, Maura O'Hare and Brian Moroney, along with Beth Hessel of Campus Ministry coordinate volunteers and organize work at the site. Tony Coccia, a part-time philosophy professor, teaches the volunteers house building skills as their construction supervisor.

> Habitat for Humanity constitution

Millard Fuller founded Habitat for Humanity International in 1976, now in 300 cities in 30 countries, based on the belief that housing is a basic human right.

Thousands of people volunteer their time, resources and labor to help those who lack adequate housing. These volunteers "do theology," said Fuller, who compares Habitat for Humanity to planting a seed and watching it bear fruit.

> It is part of Habitat for Humanity Collegiate Challenge where different sites are chosen by the national chapter and offered to the college chapters.
> Maura O'Hare, student chairperson of Habitat for Humanity

The University's Peace and Justice Award was presented to Millard Fuller for his creation of and dedication to Habitat for Humanity International on Oct. 8.

Habitat for Humanity is an ecumenical, international, nonprofit organization striving to eliminate poverty housing and make decent shelter for people worldwide, according to its constitution.

Presently 15 houses are built every day around the world through Habitat's efforts. By 1995, Habitat's goal is to build 24 houses a day, world-wide, equalling a house an hour.

During the summer of 1988, Habitat held a 1,200-mile House-Raising Walk from Maine to Georgia where the volunteers built 120 homes in 83 days.

Noreen Cameron of Campus Ministry and the Habitat coordinators are planning the Habitat volunteer trips for Spring Break. This year two trips will be offered to Almost Heaven, W. Va. and Salisbury, Md. "It is part of Habitat for Humanity Collegiate Challenge where different sites are chosen by the national chapter and offered to the college chapters," said O'Hare.

Assistant professor receives award

University Press Release

Villanova University nursing Associate Professor Mary Ziemer, received the Pennsylvania Nurses Association's Research Award for 1991.

The award is presented to a registered nurse who has made a significant contribution to the body of clinical nursing practice and education through the research process.

Ziemer, whose research focuses on maternal-child nursing, is a member of the American Nurses' Association Council of Nurse Researchers, the National League for Nursing, the Nurses Association of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, Sigma Theta Tau and the American Association of University Professors.

A Villanova faculty member since 1971, Ziemer helped to plan and implement the College of Nursing's graduate program.

She serves as a member of the Institutional Review Board of the Philadelphia Association for Clinical Trials and is on the editorial board of review for the Journal of Holistic Nursing, Advances in Nursing Science, and Topics in Clinical Nursing.

A graduate of Temple University and the University of Pennsylvania, Ziemer was recognized as the Ethicon Scholar by the American Nurses Foundation and also received the Pennsylvania League of Nursing Research Award.

Pablo Neruda Poetry Award

University Press Release

Villanova University Spanish instructor Carlos Trujillo, was selected to receive the Pablo Neruda Award, the highest honor given to a young poet in Chile in recognition of his work as a poet.

The award, to be granted for the fifth time, was named for Pablo Neruda, who won the 1971 Nobel Prize in Literature. It recognizes a "noted Chilean poet under 40 years of age, as recognition of all of his work with the purpose of gratifying and encouraging new poetry, giving compliment to the desires of the poet."

Trujillo, who teaches Spanish conversation and composition in the University's modern languages and literatures department, accepted the award Oct. 29 at the University of Chile, in conjunction with a ceremony commemorating the 20th anniversary of Neruda winning the Nobel Prize.

Trujillo is a native of Castro, a 500-year-old city on the island of Chiloe off Chile's southwest coast. After graduating from the University of Chile with a teaching degree, the poet worked at two high schools in Castro. Although he had been offered positions at the University, he said. "I felt it was important to work in Castro, as a friend of students."

While teaching in Castro, he created a literary workshop, an institution that spread to numerous towns in southern Chile. In his more than 15 years of directing literary workshops, he has taught approximately 400 students, 15 to 20 of which have published books of poetry, he estimated.

Cutbacks affect libraries

College Press Service

College and university libraries are the latest victims of the budget-cutting guillotine, and administrators are frantically looking for ways to trim expenses without losing their heads.

A shortage of money has resulted in cutbacks in hours, cancellations in journal subscriptions, delays in expensive book purchases and in some cases, fee increases.

"It's a big problem," said Sarah Pritchard, associate executive director of the Association of Research Libraries. "It's a grave concern for the future of education and for the building up of scholarly research."

Even though money is tight, most schools do not want to reduce the money they give their libraries, so they are allocating the same amount of money as last year.

But the cost of library materials has tripled since last year because of inflation, Pritchard said. Administrators are facing de facto reductions in their budgets and are now scrambling to find alternative sources of funding and innovative ways to avoid cutting off access to materials.

Unlike other student services, however, most administrators firmly reject the idea of initiating a fee-for-service method of generating more revenue.

"Fees are very controversial because libraries are based on the philosophy of providing unlimited access to information," Pritchard said. "User fees for basic services and for primary users is so fundamentally against the concept we are based on."

Some have contemplated and acted on fee proposals. At the University of Texas at Dallas, the student newspaper The Mercury reported that the Student Service Fee Committee made an unprecedented decision to use fee money to keep the library open longer than the hours funded by the state.

"We do get a lot of donations of books, but unfortunately they're not always the books that we need," said John Flemming, interim co-director of library services at Edinboro University of Pennsylvania.

AIDS

Force," said the Rev. John P. Stack, O.S.A., dean of Students. "Although its activity has fallen through the cracks in the past few years, there is a renewed effort emerging on campus to address the issue," he added.

The HIV (human immunodeficiency) virus which causes AIDS can lie dormant for over five years. Although many students believe they are not at risk, that assumption is false, Michal-Johnson said, because students come from many geographical locations and can engage in various forms of sexual behavior.

"Think about where you want to be in 10 years and realize that AIDS can severely interrupt your plans," she added.

"It is scary," Bowen said, "but we can learn to have healthy sexual attitudes."

Students alone are responsible for their own AIDS education, Michal-Johnson said. "People have to have a reason for changing their behavior ... [students] who set goals for themselves will want to address the AIDS issue," she added.

The Women's Series discussion strikes at the root of high risk behavior. The program is similar to a model offered by Dr. Richard Keeling of the University of Virginia in an article to The Chronicle of Higher Education (Oct. 9).

In the article, Keeling challenges students to build skills on "how to say no." He said that they need to nurture self-esteem and foster community support.

Langran campaign

Audience members were reminded by League of Women Voters officials to keep questions to a strictly political nature when a member accused Langran of trying to "disenfranchise" community residents out of their voting power.

"I'm a little displeased with the hostility here. I don't know what brought this on. I'm not intending to disenfranchise anybody. I'm trying to win an election the right way," Langran commented.

Marks said every effort should be made to have Villanova students "vote in their own hometowns by absentee ballots."

In addition to University and student-related issues, the candidates were also questioned about general political and township topics.

The Radnor Township Democratic and the Villanova College Democrats will provide vans to shuttle students from South Campus to the voting center at Radnor House Condominiums, said John Sullivan, president of the Villanova College Democrats. The vans will arrive in Good Counsel parking lot every 20 minutes, he added.

Radnor Township

Students who are employed in the community in turn spend money and that generates more revenue for Radnor Township, he said.

Campus Corner reports that 80-85 percent of their revenue is generated by University students. "Campus Corner closes at 3 p.m. in the summer because basically students aren't here," said the manager of the restaurant.

The University is also a major employer of township residents. Currently, 65 staff members and 178 full-time faculty positions are held by residents of Radnor Township, said Kay Lawless, Academic Affairs. In 1988-89, 17 percent of full-time employees and 21.7 percent of all faculty positions were held by Radnor Township residents, according to the study.

The analysis stated that in 1988-89, 1,427 township residents registered at Villanova as undergraduate, graduate, Law School and University College students.

The University also offers social projects, athletics and entertainment that are open to the public.

Project Sunshine volunteers visit Rosemont Manor weekly in an informal "adopt a grandparent" program, said Therese Wenzel of the office for Social Action. This gives students a chance to meet and get to know elderly residents in the community, Wenzel added.

Area residents can also obtain a Falvey library card for a fee of $20 per year.

Nursing students attend Nursing Career Day in duPont Pavilion Oct. 29 where brochures were provided about internship and career opportunities.

Nursing Career Day informs future RNs

By JEN BORDA
Staff Reporter

The Career Planning and Placement Center and the Undergraduate Nursing Senate co-sponsored the Nursing Career Day in duPont Pavilion from 10:15 a.m. to 4 p.m. Oct. 29 as a "recruitment fair for graduates," said Rose O'Driscoll, assistant to the dean of Nursing and advisor to the Undergraduate Nursing Senate.

Over 100 health-care institutions provided brochures and information about summer internships for undergraduates and career opportunities for seniors. Career Day was "very well attended by both students and agencies," said O'Driscoll.

Three nursing alumni returned for Career Day to speak about their accomplishments. Mary Donar Reale, director of Nursing at A.I. duPont; Gloria McNeil, assistant professor of Nursing at Thomas Jefferson University and Celso Ramon Garcia, a critical care registered nurse (CCRN) at Temple University Hospital.

Career Day was organized by Chairwoman Kim Starace and David Leibeg, assistant director of the Career Center.

Campuses feel impact of Hill-Thomas spectacle

By College Press Service

Clarence Thomas may have battled for and won a seat on the Supreme Court, but the bitter issue of sexual harassment is far from settled.

Many college campuses, reeling from the public spectacle of the Anita Hill-Clarence Thomas hearings, are re-examining policies and taking aggressive steps to eliminate the problem.

A beleaguered Anita Hill, upon returning to her duties as a law professor at the University of Oklahoma, had these words for those who are victims of harassment: "I am hopeful that others who may have suffered sexual harassment will not become discouraged by my experience, but instead, will find the strength to speak up about this serious problem."

In academic circles around the world, the effects of the Hill-Thomas hearings can be felt. In the past few weeks, Oxford University, one of Britain's most prestigious institutions, has toughened its sexual harassment policy to include expulsion for the harasser.

Cambridge University also is discussing a code of conduct to cover harassment, two years after a survey by students disclosed that one in 10 female undergraduates suffered unwanted sexual attention from their faculty tutors.

> I feel on every campus, every president can make a statement and take action right now to make sure the climate on his campus is a feeling of power as opposed to powerless among women and minorities.
> Anne L. Bryant, executive director of the American Association of University Women

On American campuses, college officials say that approximately one in four female students are victims of sexual harassment, and while it may occur in the student/professor context, more often, they are harassed by other students.

A brochure published by the University of Minnesota-St. Louis Office of Equal Opportunity says both men and women can be sexually harassed; however, studies indicate that more than 95 percent of the victims in college are female.

"I think it is terribly important that we take advantage of the public awakening of this serious issue," said Anne L. Bryant, executive director of the American Association of University Women.

"I feel on every campus, every president can make a statement and take action right now to make sure the climate on his campus is a feeling of power as opposed to powerless among women and minorities. The leadership has got to come from the top," she said.

"When we go through a period of change, the nation is about torn apart," says Georgia Swanson, a professor of speech communication at Baldwin-Wallace College in Cleveland, Ohio. She says there is a basic misunderstanding between the sexes that will take an educational process to correct.

Support Bob Langran

The race for Radnor Township Board of Commissioners provides Villanova a chance to elect one of its own professors, Bob Langran of the political science department. As commissioner, Langran's No. 1 priority is to improve the "deteriorating relationship" between the University and the township. To insure success, Villanova students must throw their full support behind Langran by remembering to vote this Tuesday, Nov. 5.

Langran's opponent, Jim Marks, could be a contributing factor toward continuing hostilities between Radnor and the University. In reference to the University's current housing crisis, Marks said, "Villanova creates the problem, Villanova should solve the problem." In the past Marks proposed that Villanova use land adjacent to West Campus for dormitory construction when West Campus has already been approved for development.

Marks will juice Villanova for all its worth; in fact, he thinks that the University should make an annual contribution to the township. Don't you think we patronize Radnor's stores enough? Besides, those thousands of dollars would be better spent providing financial aid and scholarships to Villanovans.

Marks also initiated the infamous Radnor Township Housing Ordinance that states that no more than two unrelated people shall be allowed to live together. The board of commissioners refers to this ordinance as the "Marks Ordinance." Villanova students refer to it as the "Costly Ordinance." Marks, the poet, has called for increased plumbing and fire code inspections in order to "count heads and count beds." Freshmen and sophomores must beware that if lotteried off campus, they may face this invasion-of-privacy tactic as future residents of Radnor Township. Marks has also stated that if he is elected, the ordinance will remain the same, continuing to cause hard-working students head-and-wallet aches.

Marks has stated that Villanova is part of his constituency and will be treated as such. However, he contradicted himself by later saying that in his opinion Villanova students should not be allowed to vote in Radnor Township elections. In essence, Marks does not consider the students a valid part of the community nor his constituents.

Villanova students should show Jim Marks that they constitute a valid part of the community by defeating him at the polls Tuesday, Nov. 5. Only by voting as a unified community will Bob Langran triumph. Vans will provide transportation to students from South Campus to the Radnor House polling place from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Let's finally have our say in Radnor.

'Nova Special Olympics

Villanova will host the Pennsylvania State Fall Festival for Special Olympics beginning tonight with the Opening Ceremonies at 8:30 p.m. in the stadium. Special athletes from all over the state prepare themselves at various levels to compete in the prestigious sporting events. Not only have Villanovans been honored in hosting the only Special Olympics festival completely organized by students, but we have a chance to make a difference in the life of a Special Olympian.

Events held on campus include soccer and volleyball. Rollerskating, road races and equestrian are held locally off campus. Lunch is provided for the athletes and volunteers through the donations of many local companies and sponsors.

Students can volunteer their time throughout the weekend festivals by working as escorts. Each escort adopts an athlete for the weekend and takes them to each of their sporting competitions, as well as to lunch.

The events run throughout the weekend and closing ceremonies will be held Sunday at noon. The Villanova community should take time out to contribute and experience the thrill of victory and the agony of defeat with a Special Olympian.

Campus organizations addressed

To the Editor:

Imagine yourself sitting in a crowded cafe, reading the morning paper. You come across an editorial that leaves you incensed. You leap to your feet, crumble the paper, throw it across the room and shout, "Our government is so twisted." Suddenly, two undercover policemen sitting near you eating doughnuts get up, stalk to your side and slap handcuffs on you, proclaiming, "You're under arrest for defaming the United States government." The next thing you know you're locked in a cold, barren cell. No charges are brought against you, but you are unable to contact your family or a lawyer. You are alone, confused and uncertain of your fate.

True, this did not happen to you the last time you made a derogatory remark about our country. But elsewhere in the world people live in constant fear of such oppression.

For instance, 11 members of the South African human rights group Black Sash were recently arrested during a peaceful protest. These people were attempting to express their opposition to the denial of freedom of association and expression in their homeland. Now they are imprisoned, and all of their rights have been stripped away.

Human rights are basic. We are all dependent on and bound to a deep respect and observance of the rights of others, regardless of distance or nationality. When the rights of one person are violated, the foundation of our own rights is threatened. As Americans, we enjoy a system rooted in the value of free expression. Therefore, we have a responsibility to assist those who are denied this privilege. But how can a Villanova student make a difference when the situation seems so removed?

Amnesty International is a non-profit apolitical organization which protests human rights violations around the world. The primary tool used by Amnesty is the written word. Members correspond with foreign nations via letter, expressing concern and indignation at questionable government actions. Such pressure has significant impact. Approximately 1000 prisoners of conscience are released each year through the non-violent efforts of Amnesty International.

The Villanova chapter of Amnesty is dedicated to such efforts. Each week members write letters to various governments protesting the violation of human rights. The group also attempts to increase awareness through petitions, guerilla theater, occasional guest speakers and other activities. New ideas and new voices are always welcome. Amnesty International meets Wednesdays at 5 p.m. in the Center for Peace and Justice Education in Sullivan Hall. We encourage students to attend meetings and exercise their freedom of expression.

To the Editor:

The Villanova Singers hosted the Virginia Belles from the University of Virginia in a delightful evening concert at St. Marys' Chapel Saturday, Oct. 12. Most of the music was modern and light. Villanova Singers performed a classy rendition of "God Bless America" and "Amazing Grace."

A relatively small but very appreciative audience gave loud applause to both groups. The Virginia Belles, a small group numbering a few more than a baker's dozen, thrilled the audience with several upbeat songs. They presented almost as many soloists as their total number.

The Barbershop Quartette of the Singers sang the traditional songs expected of its group. The Villanova Spires, despite a shaky beginning, upheld the excellent tradition of this group, although their repetoire and sound proved quite different from past groups. Once again, the soloists in this group were very good.

Keep up the good work, Singers. I look forward to your Christmas concert, scheduled for Dec. 7. Hopefully it will be better advertised than the fall concert, undoubtedly it will draw a larger audience.

To the Editor:

I recently shared an enjoyable lunch with the Student Life staff. This "Brown Bag Social" was an informal lunch hosted by the Student Life development office. The goal of the program is to provide Student Life insight into the typical challenges faced by other divisions and offices in the University. The program also assists in building bridges between individuals from various departments. It was a great asset in breaking down the walls of old prejudices that should never have existed in the first place.

I would like to thank Randy Farmer, the Staff Development committee and the Student Life staff for affording me this wonderful opportunity. I also strongly encourage any administrator who is contacted to accept the invitation. One small step can take everyone a very long way.

What is America?

By YANA CARTER

What is America, baseball and apple pie? Blonde hair and blue eyes? Chinatown? The Puerto Rican day parade. Americanism cannot be defined as some limited constant standard by which one can identify Americans and non-Americans.

However, Mat Toeniessen, in his Sept. 20 commentary, seems to reflect this outdated notion of the assimilative melting pot that is "America," when he condemns blacks, Hispanics and Asians for their self-identification as African-Americans, Hispanic-Americans, etc. He terms this a "slap in the face to the idea of a united and cohesive country . . . We are all one thing . . . Americans."

My question to Toenniessen, as I posed at the beginning of this commentary, what does it mean to be American? Certainly, one cannot deny that if asked to identify the all-American woman, one would not say Connie Chung.

Rather the blond tresses of Christie Brinkley come to mind. (Paulina Porizkova and her dark Czechoslovakian looks barely qualify for this distinction as well.) For an Asian, in our Western mindset, despite her birth in the United States is simply not given the possibility of embodying all that America represents.

Toeniessen appears to deny the undeniably Western Eurocentric slant of this country. He assumes that America is some new species produced from the amalgamation of a diversity of cultures with no ethnicity retaining any of its distinctive characteristics. Indeed, various ethnicities have influenced the shaping of America, yet why does it still remain that a Christie Brinkley or a Kevin Costner can bear the title of the "all-American," while a Denzel Washington and a Rita Moreno must forever live in their shadows, never truly perceived, nor held up, as America idealized.

Hence, I question Toeniessen's contention that a black American or Asian-American, etc. becomes in essence a traitor by referring to him/herself as anything but a mere "American," when historically peoples such as these have been excluded from our own self-proclaimed notion of American.

Although America is indeed a mix, a tossed salad in its ideal sense it is not recognized as such. Thus, I understand titles such as Haitian-American, African-American, Asian-American to in no way deny their American heritage, as Toeniessen would want to imply. They are not barriers to being American, but rather they truly embrace the melange that is America. They reflect the plurality that is America, a plurality that simply cannot be captured in our presently narrow definition of what it is to be "American."

I must also take Toeniessen to task for his assertion, in this same commentary, that "to have blacks voluntarily segregate themselves in sororities and fraternities" merely serves to undermine the integrationist attempts of certain government programs. Must I remind him that these fraternal organizations were created at a time when blacks were not permitted to join their white counterpart groups. Hence, the only outlet remaining was for blacks to take the initiative and establish their own organizations amidst the institutionalized racism of the day. Can anyone in good faith condemn a group of peoples who take it upon themselves, when denied other viable expressions of fraternity, to produce their own support structures? In past history, this has usually been termed, and esteemed, as self-reliance (ironically) the all-American trait, yet a trait which becomes un-American when employed by those who are illegitimized from the "true" American experience.

Support task force

To the Editor:

I am writing to applaud the announcement in the Oct. 4 edition regarding the revitalization of the task force on AIDS. An AIDS Task Force on campus can help to deepen students' understanding of the virus and hopefully change their attitudes.

In his recently published memoirs, former Surgeon General C. Everett Koop, states that the emphasis in an AIDS education program should be on educating students "to carry out a conscious form of personal behavior before they expose themselves to the HIV" disease. National statistics reveal that one in 500 college students is HIV infected. AIDS is now more than ever a heterosexual disease.

The AIDS Task Force can educate students so that they are better able to educate each other. Education may foster increased knowledge and sensitivity rather than fear and denial (about people with AIDS). I am glad that Villanova recognizes the need for a task force for the future of its students.

Take a closer look: Where did history begin?

By TUNISA ANDERSON

Popular talk of Christopher Columbus discovering the New World, African Americans rewriting history, Eurocentrism being cited as superior and Matt Toeniessen prophesying his belief in the "we are all one thing" notion, manifest the hypocrisy inherent in some pathetic idea of a "united and cohesive country." Continued acceptance of the above argument, even when there is abundant evidence that proves otherwise, discloses an intention to neglect the truth.

After years of denial, consensus has developed around new evidence that proves the origins of human civilization were formed in the heart of Africa. The initial creators were black. Dr. L.S.B. Leakey, an archaeologist, worked a great number of years in what today is called Tanzania. He unearthed 1,000 skulls in a layer of earth dated 1,750,000 years. In other layers, Leakey found what he called homohabilis, man who was able to make fires and build stones. Still more evidence comes from the testimony of bones. "The more we learn of Nubia and the Sudan," Dr. Randall-Mac Iver said, "the more evident does it appear that what was most characteristic in the pre-dynastic culture of Egypt, is due to intercourse with the interior of Africa and the immediate influence of that permanent Negro element, which has been present in the population of southern Egypt from the remotest times to our own day." Great scholars such as W.E.B. Dubois, Carter G. Woodson and William Hansberry have insisted that the ancient Egyptians from Menes to Cleopatra were a mixed group of people that represented the same color types as American blacks. This point and other related points have been noted and advanced by scholars.

"The necessity for 19th century "Aryan" scholars to falsify Western civilization's black ancestry is part of the process of scientific colonialism" said African Psychologist Wade Nobles, Ph.D, a psychologist at Stanford University.

It should be common knowledge that European growth only took shape after it began to venture into other parts of the world.

Scientific colonialism is a process wherein political control of knowledge is carried out by a sophisticated process of falsifying the production of information and ideas (Nobles, 1979). This process has three distinct features. The first feature is called "unsophisticated falsification." Facts, information and ideas are simply destroyed and/or falsified. The second feature called "integrated modificationism," is where the original facts, information and ideas are distorted, suppressed and/or modified in order to manufacture new facts and ideas. The final feature is "conceptual incarceration." Under this condition, the knower is given a set of predetermined concepts and definitions to utilize in the process of knowing. Obviously, the incorrect concepts themselves inhibit the process of actual knowledge, and the knower becomes a prisoner of these alien ideas. Basically, knowledge is controlled by the very mechanisms of destruction, distortion, fabrication and confusion. As Toeniessen said, history can be distorted in our minds to fit our perceptions.

African-Americans do not have to rewrite history to gain a foothole in American society, as if American society has the best in the world to offer. America is a "baby" compared to the rest of the world in terms of true human development. Besides, technically speaking, we would not have to lift a toe to gain a foot in American society. African-Americans had a helluva footing long before Christopher Columbus came to the New World. America is an African invention as well as a European invention. The fact is, American culture is nothing but a culmination of multi-cultures. This mixture is what makes America what it is.

To quote Martin Luther King as saying "we are Americans, we know nothing of Africa" is to assume that King spoke for Black America. King did not speak for Black America; he addressed the evils of American society as they affected blacks. King too, was a victim of Eurocentrism and maybe that is why he is not alive today.

Stop choosing leaders for Black America. This is the problem now. We are more than capable of defining our leaders and resent outsiders telling us how we should think. Yes, we are different, this points out our diversity. For a white person, it is near impossible to understand what it means to be black in America. To attempt to define our reality by white standards is not only unfair, but ludicrous. It is this very misapplication of Western philosophy, about the nature of African People (Blacks), which has caused the need for the reemergence of African/Black psychology.

For the writer to suppose that Clarence Thomas and Colin Powell as being rejected as role models, and then ask the question "are crack dealers in our inner cities?" shows again the attempt to define our leaders and also a disrespect for the African-American community and its struggle in America.

The history of Europe is a well-known, shameful one. No one needs to lie about Europeans. What Afrocentrism is saying, is that it's time they accepted their responsibilities in the mistakes they have made, such as the destruction of the American Indfians, the Institution of slavery and the promotion of racism. Should it be such a shock to anyone that Jeffries believes that people of European descent, are ice people, cold, individualistic, materialistic and aggressive? History validates the notion that Europeans have been a waring and destructive people. It was not the Africans who fought the 100 years war. It was not the Africans who colonized the world nor was it the Africans who invented, or were the massive producers of weapons artillery and nuclear devices. Any intellectual thinker would perceive these as the 3D's.

African-Americans can and will continue to define themselves however they choose. Accept it. Whites have defined themselves, not to mention the fact that they have also defined everyone else.

Eurocentric thinking has dominated the world for far too many years. Eurocentric standards have been placed on every other group of people. It should be common knowledge that European growth only took shape after it began to venture into other parts of the world. We all know that many of the places Europe ventured into were far superior than Africa, the Middle East and the Far East. Someone is having a hard time accepting his history and only wants his history to be judged by present accomplishments.

Afrocentrism clearly represents the first time Eurocentrism has ever been challenged. It calls for the very dismemberment of conventional wisdom. "Out with the old and in with the new." In addition, it calls upon the conscience. Those of us who have a sense of justice, accept it and can appreciate it. Others of us who are in denial, reject and denounce it. The bottom line is man need only fight but so much for the truth. The truth needs no defense. With or without Afrocentrism, Eurocentrism will self-destruct, its very basis rests on dishonesty. Why continue to live the lie. In the end, the truth will prevail, hasn't it always?

Condoms do not cause date rape

To the Editor:

I recently spoke with Anthony Pallidino, whose commentary, "Is 'Nova less diligent in promoting conservativism?" I critiqued in the Oct. 4 issue of the the Villanovan. Mr. Pallidino wished to make it known that he did not mean to imply that rape was not an issue of concern for those who choose to label themselves conservatives. Rather, he wanted to point out what he perceived as an irony, namely, that a University so worried abut campus rape should sponsor a publication containing an advertisement for condoms.

If so, this point gets lost in the awkward construction of his commentary. In short, he could have said less about the Trojan ad and more about what condoms could possibly have to do with rape.

If he meant to say that condoms, by facilitating premarital sex, encourage rape on campus, I must confess my doubts about the validity of this conclusion. Condoms do not contribute to acquaintance rape, but miscommunication and misunderstanding between the sexes do. To say otherwise smacks suspiciously of the trite "the victim asked for it" rationalization of rape.

This leads to an important question: If we live in a society that cannot understand what is meant by the answer "no" in response to a sexual proposition, how can we possibly comprehend what it means to say "yes" to the same? How can we consider ourselves wise enough to weigh the positive and negative aspects of involvement in a sexual relationship and take steps to prevent potentially harmful consequences? Taking such precautions may very well involve the use of prophylactic devices like the ones described in the advertisement Mr. Pallidino found so controversial.

I would not toss out that Trojan ad just yet. Maybe the ability to frankly discuss sexual matters is not a sign of the degeneration of the entire human race after all.

Multiculturalism defended as new core curriculum theme

By LYNNE CURRY

I am writing in response to Coleen Sheehan's commentary "Is 'Multicultural' Appropriate?" appearing in the Oct. 4 issue of the Villanovan. Although I respect Sheehan's right as a member of the faculty to express her opinion about the proposed diversity requirement, I feel the need to point out some of the weaknesses in her argument and also state the advantages of the new multicultural proposal.

Sheehan argues that encouraging classes on specific ethnic, religious or cultural groups calls into question the wisdom of studying minority groups and writers in more 'mainstream' classes. For example, she states, "Should I remove Stowe from my American politics reading list so I can assign it in the other class [Women and American Politics]?"

Why can't she assign the reading for both classes? Is there no flexibility? I believe that the students of the American Politics course should realize that white males were not the only political activists during the course of American government. Likewise, the Women and Politics course should not just read isolated women writers, but work these writers and their causes into the proper framework of American history.

Sheehan does not seem to acknowledge that the diversity requirement encompasses a large number of courses from many departments. Thus, it offers the student opportunity to choose a course in his or her area of interest. Sheehan also questions whether this requirement will lead to some "out of the mainstream" courses. However, she does not realize that essentially the diversity requirement is trying to accomplish two objectives, no matter if one chooses a course on black history or Native American art.

First, the requirement enables one to gain appreciation for a different culture with alternate traditions and beliefs. It promotes the idea that this is a diverse world and a spirit of acceptance and community can be extended to all, not only to those who are exactly like us.

Second, in the past, difference has been feared and out of this fear can come persecution. Slavery, the Jewish Holocaust and the burning of women as witches are examples of instances where fear of difference led to hatred and intolerance. Hopefully the diversity requirement will give students an opportunity to critically examine alternate modes of living, and such hatreds rooted in mistrust and misunderstanding of these differences will dissolve in the light of mature understanding, if not acceptance.

I personally would ask no more of the diversity requirement than to show that hate is a crippling emotion and that differences between our way of life and alternate cultures and ideologies should provide sources of enrichment, not open opportunities for derision and oppression.

Dr. Sheehan states that, "If we offer no justification to the program ... we cannot expect our students to understand why what they study is important, or even that it is." This statement is insulting to the intelligence of the Villanova student body because it implies its members are not capable of drawing their own informed conclusions about complex issues dealing with race, gender, creed and other aspects of diversity.

College ought to provide a forum to help one learn to think for oneself, and Sheehan should realize that the students will soon be in positions of leadership in the government as well as in the public sphere. Perhaps the foremost aim of the diversity requirement is to present the students with the ideas of diversity, community and the problem of discrimination and to entrust the challenge of finding solutions to students' minds.

Pursuits of Student Government addressed by O'Rourke

By MARK O'ROURKE

The purpose of this letter is to let the undergraduate student body of Villanova University know that their student government is working diligently on their behalf to voice important student concerns to the University.

Last year, the University's president, the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., was criticized for his lack of visibility among the students on campus. In retrospect, perhaps this was unwarranted and unfair. I am recalling this incident is because during my campaign for student government president last spring, I promised to establish a concrete dialogue between student government and the administration in response to this criticism. Since the spring election, Dobbin's door has been open and I have had the opportunity to meet with him on a regular basis. In fact, I have been able to rekindle an old tradition of having the student government president and the University president meet once a month for lunch. This has given us the opportunity to discuss candidly many aspects of concern of the students and the University. Dobbin is very interested in the morale and welfare of the student body.

In this renewed spirit, I am hopeful that a new chemistry between the administration, faculty and students is being fostered and developed. Student Government will endeavor to be the eyes and ears of the student body in all areas of interest and concern. Our main goal is to improve the quality of life for students on and off campus. This includes financial aid, better parking conditions, a more vital social life on campus, improved facilities for the career planning and placement center, the relocation of athletic and recreational facilities lost due to the construction of the Liberal Arts building, improved recycling on campus, change machines on South Campus, more student seating capacity in the duPont Pavilion for basketball games, more student representation for off-campus housing problems and better communication between all student organizations. Student Government will make recommendations to the University Senate, University president and Board of Trustees on these important issues.

Student Government's hope is that a clear focus will be directly placed on improving every facet of student life at Villanova. This focus should impel all parts of the University to readdress financial, academic, social, athletic and extracurricular that have a bearing upon student life.

Thus, Student Government will seek to be the catalyst that challenges all components of the University to reassess its approach to student issues. This challenge demands that all administrators, faculty and staff place themselves in the shoes of the average undergraduate and question whether or not the existing services, facilities and resources at Villanova are "up to par."

The University's Mission Statement buttresses this challenge. "The University is a community of persons of diverse professional, academic and personal interests who in a spirit of collegiality cooperate to achieve their common goals and objectives in the transmission, the pursuit and the discovery of knowledge. Given its character and resources, Villanova is committed to offering such undergraduate and graduate programs as will best serve the needs of its constituencies." Appropriately, the message of this year's "Campaign for Community" seems to parallel this excerpt from the University's Mission Statement.

The celebration of Villanova's Sesquicentennial next year should not overshadow these concerns but should recognize this as an opportunity to enhance and improve student life. The first part of solving a problem is recognizing that one exists. It is Student Government's responsibility to articulate and communicate the reality of problems when they arise. Based upon this responsibility, it is Student Government's resolve that these problems and concerns will be addressed and dealt with swiftly and decisively and to end the lethargic bureaucracy that sometimes plagues the University.

It is Student Government's assessment that the current "State of the Campus" is a favorable one with the New Liberal Arts building, renovation of the Villanova Chapel, campus beautification, new Admission s office, improvement in the recycling program, renovation of Falvey Library and increased financial aid are but a few of these improvements. We hope that the same amount of significant change can occur in relationship to the services, facilities and resources that directly affect students. If there are any suggestions or criticisms please stop by the Student Government office in Dougherty Hall, Room 204 or call 645-7203.

Where should the line be drawn for harassment?

By ELLEN GOODMAN

The man leans across the table and asks the question again, as if I had not heard him the first time. "Where is the line?"

It is mid-morning and we are sitting over coffee — the West Coast's drug of choice — talking ostensibly about national politics. But the subject gravitates naturally toward sexual politics. He wants to know: "Where is the line?"

Ever since Anita Hill's story exploded all over his office, spewing its uneasy debris, he has been searching for an E-Z marker to separate flirtation from harassment, a threshold between attention that is welcome and unwelcome. At times, he says, the line is as hard to find as Waldo in one of those elaborate drawings.

My coffee companion is young, single and sincere. He is not whining about being victimized or misunderstood. He recognizes that the map of the male-female domain is changing and the line he is searching for is a safe path.

You see, the office, he says to me earnestly, is his workaholic generation's version of dating bar and matchmaker. The hours are long, work life and social life intermingle. It has become the primary meeting ground for men and women.

In this world, men are expected to pursue women, he says. Men are supposed to initiate relationships, take the first step, make the opening gambit, risk the first call. But when does the attention a woman may want from one man may become harassment from another less welcome "suitor." He wants something to follow as a Triptik through the landmines.

As we talk, I find something refreshing and familiar in his uncertainty. If men are suddenly walking a fine line and searching for a solid one, isn't that what women have always done?

We are insisting that they learn the clues, the body language, the verbal signs that differ with every human interaction.

Women who were not born yesterday have had to learn to negotiate tricky territory. How do you turn a boss off without losing your job? How do you end the behavior of the men you work with — the sex jokes, the too-friendly hand on the shoulder — without ending the camaraderie. Where is the line between encouraging him and offending him?

If men were expected — boys will be boys — to be aggressive, women were expected to be the gatekeepers of male sexuality, even at work. Indeed, women share this expectation of each other, even of Anita Hill.

When the overnight polls, those indications of knee-jerk responses, found that a majority of women were not on her side, I was not all that surprised. The very universality of her experience seemed to work against her as well as for her.

At some level, many women looking at the poised law professor thought that she should have been able to "handle it." After all, they had, every woman had.

Now, however, in this shift, men are being told to "handle it." They are being given a mirror image task. To express interest without being seen as a "lech." To ask for a date, once, twice, thrice, without being labeled or even sued. When does one man's claim that he is "socially awkward" at this task become a woman's belief that he is sexually harassing her. As my table companion asks: "Where is the line?"

Of course they are many ways to change this unsettled topography. Some women can become more assertive both about asking men and refusing them.

But it seems to me that at last we have raised the expectation that men will read something more important than maps. They will read women.

We are insisting that they learn the clues, the body language, the verbal signs that differ with every human interaction. They will have to receive as well as deliver messages. To know what she heard, not just what he meant. That's not such a bad thing. Not such a bad set of skills to have in the world.

When women first got into the man's world, they were expected to abide by its rules. They were supposed to deal with the world on its own rough-and-tumble terms, to swap stories with the boys and not blush, to handle it rather than fight it. Now women are trying to balance the lopsidedness of this change. They are saying, wait a minute. How about trying it my way?

I tell all this to my young companion as we finish both the coffee and conversation. No, sorry, I have no set of instructions in my pocket to hand him. There is no crib sheet for changing relationships at work, no shortcut for negotiating the delicate landscape of male and female relationships.

Even if I had a magic marker, I would draw a very different line than the one he wants. It would be a time line.

This is going to take a while.

Bryn Mawr clean up project creates community

By MEGAN O'DONNELL
Senior Reporter

Where do you find yourself at 10 a.m. on Saturday mornings? Are you shuffling down Lancaster trying to remember where you live? Are you squeezing your eyes tightly shut in the hopes of forgetting that drink your so-called friend ordered you at the end of the evening? Villanovans find themselves in various situations, in various positions that early on a Saturday morning. Contrary to conventional wisdom — or shall I say Main Line presupposition — Villanova students are not all waste products.

I live with four other women, juniors at Villanova. This weekend, two of us will participate in a clean up of Thomas Avenue in Bryn Mawr and then meet up with two other housemates already working at the Special Olympics on campus. Villanova students give back to their community in numerous ways and one such way is the Bryn Mawr Beautification Project.

The Bryn Mawr Beautification Project is the idea of Phillip Giancoma, proprietor of Fiesta, on Lancaster Avenue. Giancoma ran an advertisement asking for students, residents and merchants to join in cleaning up the Main Line. The efforts were brought to the attention of Ron Suarez, a graduate philosophy student and member of Villanova Environmental Group (VEG). Ron brought the request up at the VEG meeting and it was decided the group would answer Giancoma's ad.

> In our efforts to clean up the area we try to bridge the gap between the community and the University.

That first Saturday, Villanova had 13 students lining Lancaster at 10 a.m. We weeded, we swept, we picked up garbage. Residents waved and honked, others got out to question us and ask if they could donate their own gardening tools. Their reactions were classic when they learned we were from Villanova. They were absolutely incredulous.

Since that first Saturday, our numbers have fluctuated. We have inspired businesspeople to sweep their own walks and we have had two residents join us. We have made presentations to two of the townships and each have thanked us and awarded us with $100 for tools and flowers. We have been mentioned in three editorials and done a bit to improve the aesthetic image of the townships along Lancaster.

In our efforts to clean up the area and give the University some visibility, we wear our Villanova caps and sweatshirts in the hopes of bridging the gap between the community and the University. And from this process we have learned a great deal. Margaret Meade, Cultural anthropologist, warned us to never believe that a small group of concerned citizens could not affect change. We have come to realize what she already knew. We do not feel we owe the residents of Bryn Mawr, Ardmore, Rosemont, etc. anything. We hate the way they have prejudged us. We resent that they give no credit to our individual selves and we despise their righteous attitudes.

What I have come to understand is that by putting a little back we can begin to build bridges that will lead to a mutual respect that is desperately needed and blatantly absent on both sides.

Alternatives to driving save money and environment

By SINEAD QUINN
Senior Reporter

No one ever said being a commuter at Villanova was easy. First you have to pay $50 for a nonexistent parking space, oh, and do not forget the three parking tickets you got before you made the effort to get your parking sticker. And those police officers do not even flinch when they hand students those $80 tickets. Oh, and then there are those days when you wake up 10 minutes before your first class, throw on your sweats, comb your hair (maybe) and realize that you have been driving on empty for two days. There goes your lunch money — and beer money for that matter. Yup, commuting sure can put a dent in a student's pocket. But it is worth it, right? It depends on how you look at it.

> Automobile exhaust is the largest source of air pollution in the United States.

The Washington-based Worldwatch Institute writes that "the problems created by overreliance on the car are outweighing its benefits." Worldwatch probably did not have the problems of Villanova's commuters in mind when it made that statement. Worldwatch was referring to air pollution and oil dependence. What do these problems mean to the average Villanova student? How can students stop the ever-increasing emission of carbon dioxide pollution?

Cars and Air Pollution

Automobile exhaust is the largest source of air pollution in the United States. About half of the urban smog consists of ozone created by carbon dioxide (CO_2) emitted from cars. The problem of urban smog has become so great that nearly 100 U.S. cities failed the Environmental Protection Agency's ozone standard and 41 failed its carbon monoxide standard.

Right now, humans are adding 7 billion metric tons of CO_2 into the atmosphere, 5 billion tons are produced by burning fossil fuels and 2 billion tons are the result of deforestation. The immediate effect of this pollution can be seen in the increase in respiratory diseases that cost the United States up to $50 billion a year. The increased CO_2 emissions also result in what has been termed the Greenhouse Effect. The CO_2 builds up in the atmosphere and results in the ability of the atmosphere to store heat. At the rate this is happening, the average temperature of the earth could increase by up to 4 degrees by the year 2050.

What can you do?

The problems of the environment often seem too overwhelming to tackle but a close look will reveal that in today's society cars are becoming more like the master than servant. People have come to look at having their own car as a right not a privilege. Not that people do not have the right to cars, it is simply that today people rarely look at their other options for transportation. For many people cars are a necessity but some students are abusing their privilege.

Walk or bike

Many students live within one to two miles of the campus and it is not ridiculous to suggest that these students could walk or ride bicycles to school. Some do, as can

Tap water contains harmful toxins

By KRISTIN ROMANO
Senior Reporter

If the world's water supply was representative of one gallon of water, only one drop would be suitable for consumption, according to the folks at the "Farmers Almanac." That one drop would be considered "drinking water," and for the most part the water delivered to our tap meets the existing drinking water standards. But there are instances when excessive levels of dangerous substances are found in tap water, or added routinely for our supposed benefit (chemicals such as fluoride and chlorine.)

Ralph Nader's Center for Study of Responsive Law cites that drinking water in the United States contains more than 2,100 toxic chemicals. Most municipalities and water companies do test for chemicals, but for only 30 of them. Only 50 of our country's 60,000 public water systems have and use the modern treatment technologies to remove these chemicals. Some contaminants are known to cause cancer, or to inflict damage to vital organs, including the kidneys, liver, the brain and the cardiovascular system. Most municipal water treatment plants were built in the early 1900s for the purpose of disinfecting water, not purifying it.

The federal government estimated that it would take billions of dollars and 10 to 15 years to upgrade the existing facilities.

According to Debra Lynn Dadd, a consumer advocate and author of "Nontoxic, Natural and Earthwise," there are regulations set up to test samples of water for harmful substances. The government's General Accounting Office surveyed that over half of community water systems fail to comply with the federal testing requirements.

> Drinking water in the United States contains more than 2,100 toxic chemicals.

Dadd brings to light major global water pollution contributors: animal wastes, toxic chemicals from agriculture, energy production, industrial waste and sewage treatment plants. About 40 trillion pounds of waste worldwide go into the ocean yearly. An estimated 90 percent remain in coastal waters, introducing themselves to beaches and the ecosystems of marine life. Toxins such as PCBs and DDTs have worked their way into the food chain. About 80 percent of ocean pollution comes from sewage, industrial waste and agricultural runoff. The other 20 percent comes from coastal mining, energy production and ocean-going vessels.

Groundwater pollution, unlike surface water that gets recycled through evaporation and transpiration, is non-renewable. Every year 100 billion gallons of liquid hazardous wastes are absorbed here.

Thirsty? Remember to get your eight to 10 glasses of water a day. How, might you ask? Can you say bottled and/or purified water?

Take a close look at pressure to be social

By ANNIE BLOCK
Staff Reporter

"I'm heading up to the library tonight."

"I really want to read that book tonight."

"I'm going up to Vasey to see the play."

How often do we hear Villanova students making these plans? Walk around campus any Wednesday, Thursday or weekend night and you are more likely to hear, "When does the drink special end at Smoke's?" or "I have to go out tonight because no one is staying in."

Does the Villanova student have to contend with the social pressure to "go out?" A common student response was "yes." There is pressure, but it's the student's call whether or not to respond to it. "When I'm in the library studying during the week ... I feel like I'm going to miss something. The next day I'll have to deal with everyone's stories and them asking me why I wasn't out," said one sophomore.

Maybe this pressure is only felt by underclassmen, but maybe not. A group of senior women talking on a Friday night expressed their frustration with social pressure. "I can't wait until Sunday. Then I won't have to drink, I won't have to go out. I can sleep all day," one said.

Why did these students stay out when they would rather not? They, too, were afraid they might "miss something." What is this "something" that people are afraid of missing? Why do some students feel that it is not right to "stay in" one night if they want?

Some students complain about the lack of night-time campus social life. But there are many opportunities for getting together. The Cultural Film series has been offering lectures and films all semester. Academic departments continually produce reams of flyers announcing guest lecturers

Meet the dean of Law

Steven P. Frankino serves as dean of Villanova's Law School.

By ELIZABETH HARTNETT
Staff Reporter

Though most undergraduate life centers around the buildings on main campus, another world lies beyond the railroad station — a realm where students probe the justice system in the hopes of securing a career in the legal field. No, these are not "Judge Wapner-wanna-be's," but serious students preparing for an important and necessary way of life. Garey Hall is the home of Villanova's Law School, and Steven P. Frankino serves as its dean. A man with varied interests, Frankino has had many great experiences throughout his career which has taken him to many parts of the United States.

Originally from Butte, Mont. Frankino attended Christian Boys Central School and pursued further education at Catholic University. There he received a degree in philosophy and remained to study law. The only member of his family to relocate. Frankino also worked with his father on Capitol Hill as an aide to Sen. Mansfield. Frankino describes himself as the "typical Italian," he loves opera and cooking. Frankino shares his love of music with his wife, also a lawyer, who once performed with the Philadelphia Orchestra.

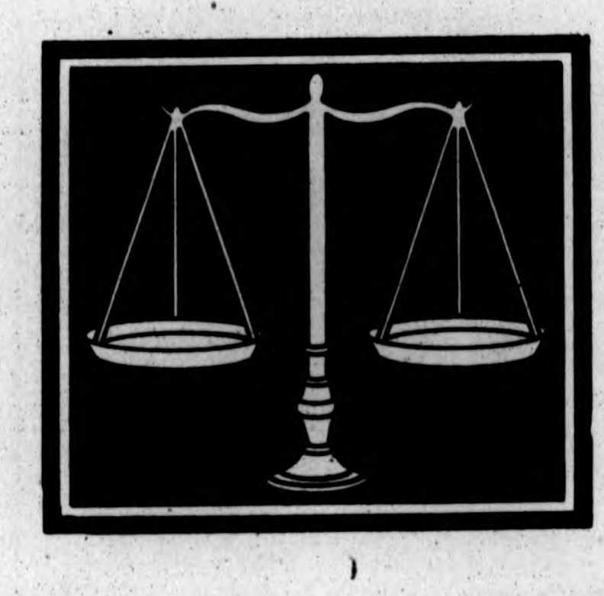
Frankino strives to ensure that the progress and success of the Law School continues.

Frankino began his career by teaching legal research and writing at Northwestern University. Before returning as an assistant professor at his alma mater, Catholic University, Frankino taught for a while at Villanova. Catholic University remained his home until 1971, when he transferred to Creighton University and served as professor, general counsel and dean of the law school. Frankino balanced these duties for seven years until he was invited back to Villanova to fulfill the position of dean for the Law School. In January, Frankino will celebrate his fifth year as dean.

Frankino believes that Villanova offers a special legal eduation because of its small size, the cultural diversity and the sense of teamwork among faculty and students. The Law School remains the premiere regional law school, its freshman class, made up of 234 students, has an average G.P.A. of 3.43 and an average LSAT score of 40. Rutgers University, Penn State, the University of Pennsylvania, Bucknell, Georgetown and Villanova itself send many of their graduates to Villanova's Law School.

Frankino strives to ensure that the progress and success of the law school continues. He urges constant improvement at every level. For any undergraduate considering a career in law, Frankino stresses that a major in prelaw is not necessary for one's success in law school. He believes that most law professors see each new law student as a "tabula rasa" or "blank slate" on which to lay down the foundations of the legal system.

Although many of us would probably like to spend the rest of our natural lives in the haven of college life, the real world is a place that we all must enter soon. Dean Frankino is just one example of the many avenues that a choice for a career in law may take.



Students earn living with part-time jobs

By VALERIE JONES

When the infamous phone bill appeared in everyone's mail box Monday, the topic of conversation around campus seemed to center on money — everybody needs it, but nobody ever has enough. Besides phone bills, there are car payments and insurance, spending money and tuition. The list of expenses never ends. Some Villanova students have solved this negative cash flow problem by finding part-time jobs off campus.

Waiting tables, unlike some easier tasks, takes a while to get used to.

With every job, besides the paycheck comes a variety of hassles and problems. For those who live on campus, getting to work poses a dilemma. Waiting for the train not only takes time and costs money, but it can be a scary experience.

"Once there was this old, scary man on the train who was built like a stick wearing shiny, silver spandex pants, a tank top and lipstick. I had to sit right across from him because it was the only seat left," said freshman Megan Smith, who works at the Gap in Ardmore.

Junior Tina Giorgio also found the two dollar train ride to her job at the Gap in Wayne to be an inconvenience, but it is easy to get there now that she lives off campus. Her biggest problem with going to work after classes is that she cannot relax and is constantly on her toes.

"When you have a stressful day at school, the last thing you want to do is deal with something that doesn't mean anything more than a part-time job to you," she said.

All agree that working definitely cuts into free time and studying. "It wouldn't be so bad except that we have to refold everything that the customers mess up so we are there way past closing every night," said freshman Jonas Marusa, who also works at a Gap store.

Another popular job for students is waiting tables, and with it comes irritable customers, sore feet and the ever present problem of spilling food. Freshman Tina

Special Olympics Festival at Villanova earns kudos

By GRETCHEN FISHER and PEGGY AGOLINO
Staff Reporters

What do 2500 Villanova students and local residents, 730 athletes and a rewarding experience have in common? They comprise one of the biggest events of the Villanova year, the Special Olympics Fall Festival. The festival, beginning tonight at 8:30 p.m. with the opening ceremonies, will continue throughout the weekend and conclude Sunday afternoon at 12:30 p.m. with the closing ceremonies.

The festival gives special athletes from all over Pennsylvania the opportunity to display their abilities and compete in various events. The events held on the Villanova campus are soccer and volleyball. Roller skating, long distance racing and equestrian events will be held off campus. This year, nine athletes will be chosen to move on to the international level of the roller skating competition.

Special Olympics had its beginning in the early 1960s as a day camp hosted by Eunice Kennedy Shriver. Positive results prompted the spread of day camps throughout the United States. In 1968, the first international competition was held at Soldier Field in Chicago. Canada and the United States were the only two countries in attendance at the time, with their representatives participating in athletics and aquatics. The world saw the success of this event and since then Special Olympics has grown to include 100 countries worldwide.

On a smaller scale, Pennsylvania 22,000 athletes, ranging in age fromeight to over 70 years old. The Villanova festival is one of the three major tri-annual competitions held in Pennsylvania. The Pennsylvania Special Olympics can also be proud in that it is one of the top five programs in the country.

Villanova itself can boast about its program. The students in charge of the event have been working since last January, when this year's festival director, Ron Baglio, was chosen. In February, the management team was chosen, including Brian Herrick, support services; Meg Warren, competition; Erin Wynne, human resources; Sandy Sujansky, special events and Paul Vitrano, administration. The management team then selects 20 student chairpersons to head the various other committees involved in the event.

This year's weekend-long fall festival will be the third annual event held at Villanova. Special Olympics at the Villanova campus began 11 years ago, although at that time it consisted only of a soccer competition in which 15 athletes participated.

Villanova's program is the only completely student-run Special Olympics event in Pennsylvania. In addition to the on-campus events, food and housing are also provided for the athletes, coaches and chairpersons.

"The chairpersons are very exemplary people who dedicate nine months of time with Special Olympics as their first priority," said Sujansky. But the hard work definitely pays off. "You don't mind putting in nine months of work when you see the results in the athletes' faces," said Wynne and Warren.

The students' dedication and involvement, which makes Villanova Special Olympics what it is, and discussion forums. Comedy Cat's Den and Cafe Innuendo do a great job of providing a "night club atmosphere" without the benefit of a speakeasy. Many student organizations, such as the Student Programming Council, the Resident Student Association and the Association of Commuting Students invest time and effort in creating a lively campus atmosphere. However, they are often faced with groups of people waiting at Bartley Circle for the 6 p.m. exodus.

People will probably continue to complain about campus social life. But what's really missing? The search for that ambiguous "something" is different for each person. There is no single activity that will please everyone. What can be done? In short, each of us must be honest with ourselves and confident with our choices of "fun things to do." Whether it's Philly, the bar scene, the library, a dorm room or the local movies, the only person we truly have to impress is ourselves.

does not go unrecognized. Claire Walsh of the Pennsylvania Special Olympics state office, compliments the Villanova program. "It is one of the most unique competitions because of the coordination and cooperation brought together by the students. It is extremely well-organized and therefore a very pleasant event with which to be involved." Rick Kohler, a team manager from Delaware County, agrees with Walsh. "I am very impressed with how far the Special Olympics program and the competition at Villanova has come, and I'm very proud to have it in the county."

The program improves upon itself year after year. "The Villanova students have done an excellent job. This will be the best-organized and most enjoyable competition for the athletes we'll have had yet," said Lucy Gorsky, faculty advisor to Villanova Special Olympics.

The Villanova staff of Special Olympics is quick to praise the volunteers who make the weekend possible. An impressive 2500 volunteers from both the Villanova and local communities take time out to lend their support and give of themselves to the athletes. Karen VonderSchmalz, media and publicity chairperson, stated that this amount of support "says a lot about the students. It is one of the things people admire who visit during Special Olympics. Villanova Special Olympics is brought up at national conventions because of the student involvement."

"We can attribute the success to the people involved. People who are here want to be here. We all get swept up into the emotions of this program, which, being student-run, makes it special like a family," said festival director Ron Baglio.

> The students' dedication and involvement, which makes Villanova Special Olympics what it is, does not go unrecognized.

The outreach of Special Olympics goes far beyond this weekend and the Villanova campus. Not only is it beneficial to the athletes, but also to the Villanova students and local residents. "Special Olympics gives the local community a chance to see the Villanova community at its best, when sometimes they only see the negatives. It is an example of people showing how much they really care about their fellow human beings. Until you see Special Olympics in action, you can't appreciate the true spirit of the Villanova students," says Baglio.

In explaining how the university community is benefitted, he says "by sharing the experience of helping those not as fortunate, we come to appreciate each other as well. We are brought closer together while working for a common cause that we can all believe in."

The volunteers who participate are rewarded with the knowledge that they have helped brighten others' lives. Eleven-year-old athlete Nick Rothenberger of Paoli told us how much he liked Villanova's campus and how he enjoys camping at the YMCA, an opportunity provided through Special Olympics. Don't miss the opportunity to be a part of this uncomparable experience.

What some Villanovans will do for extra money

McGarrigle once "spilled a whole plate of spaghetti on an old lady and she screamed." McGarrigle works in a retirement home some weekends and breaks. "I live on campus, but I'm from the area so they are very flexible about letting me work when I can get home," she said.

Junior Holly Luther, who just began waitressing at Chilis, has also had her fair share of flying food. "I was carrying a bunch of dishes and one fell out so I almost lost the whole stack, but I was able to hold onto them. When I got back to the kitchen someone pointed out that I had barbecue sauce all over me and someone else came back and said I had also spilled it all over a customer."

Waiting tables, unlike some easier tasks, takes a while to get used to. "My first week I was so bad that the customers talked to the manager about me. I took their beer mugs away before they were done, brought them the wrong nachos and forgot about their chili," said Luther.

Working at stores like the Gap or waiting tables seem to be the most popular jobs, but senior Marc Diana found a unique and more flexible job. He takes care of the pool and yard of a house near campus.

"It's a great job because I work for a great guy and make good money. It doesn't take much thinking and there's not really a boss on the job, just me," he said.

He finds his only scheduling problem to be the weather. "I can't work when it's raining, so when everyone else is enjoying the sunny days, I have to go to work." Basically, he is able to schedule his work around his life. "I cut class to cut grass!"

So whether it is waiting tables or selling paisley socks, Villanovans will do almost anything for some extra cash. After all, food, shelter and a decent social life are bare necessities. The only problem is that classes sometimes get in the way.

be seen by the marked increase in the number of bikes on campus, but those students with cars often assume that driving is the preferred, quicker choice. In fact, walking and riding does not add that much time to a short trip. Driving is faster but traffic lights and finding a parking space add quite a bit of time to the trip. Though walking and riding are slower, the pace is more steady and traffic is not likely to be a problem.

Carpool

And as the weather gets colder and walking and riding are not the most practicle ways to get to school, consider carpooling. Approximately 3000 parking stickers were sold to students. A glance at the students looking for parking spaces reveal that most students drive alone. How many students live in the Regency? Bryn Mawr Courts? Radnor House?

The idea of carpooling is repugnant to some because it means time constraints and lack of freedom. But consider the money and energy that can be saved by joining with friends in driving to school. Decreasing the number of daily trips to campus would also save a significant amount of time, energy and money.

Magic Bus

There is always the option of the trains or bus. Many students take advantage of this option but many find it too expensive or inconvenient. Then consider whether or not a Villanova-sponsored bus along Lancaster Avenue would be of use. The Rev. Francis Farsaci, O.S.A., off-campus housing advisor, said that just such a bus ran about five years ago but it stopped because of lack of student support. If enough students expressed interest, the project could be given another chance.

All of these alternatives to driving should not be considered sacrifices but rather duties. Driving is a wonderful convenience but it is becoming increasingly important to realize that with the privilege of driving should come the responsibility to recognize the impact of driving on the environment.

Van Halen blasts Philadelphia

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

Sammy Hagar is a rip. His high ranging vocals matched with his regular-guy attitude seem both appropriate and out of place at the same time. Van Halen, once predonned "the mighty," has gone from a gang of talented rock-n-roll clowns to a nice little family unit. They presented their buddy-rock two nights at the Philadelphia Spectrum Oct. 15 and 16.

The question remains should we be happy for them because they are supposedly this tight bonded clan, or should we pity them because they lost their once vicious attack? Now already six years, three tours and three albums down the road, the revamped Van Halen stands at the top of the Billboard charts for their latest album, For Unlawful Carnal Knowledge.

The live show VH put on in the past has been respectable while their musical performances were eccentric. With the three power-punch of "Poundcake," "Judgement Day" and "Runaround," all from Knowledge, the show was off to a kick-in-the-ass.

It was not until, "When It's Love," their hit single off their 1988 LP, OU812, did the disappointment set in. Eddie Van Halen played guitar on the whole song while (gag) pre-taped keyboards played over the PA. This was astonishing due to all the hype and criticisms many performers such as Paula Abdul, Janet Jackson and the infamous Milli Vanilli, received for using pre-recorded tapes. Bad move Ed.

Van Halen stands at the top of the Billboard charts.

Just as things seemed to get darker, bassist Michael Anthony headed to perform his solo and surprised the entire audience. Instead of using past tricks such a stomping on his bass and drinking ice tea from a Jack Daniel's bottle, Anthony became productive. He and drummer Alex Van Halen performed an instrumental, "Sunday Afternoon in the Park," from their 1981 album Fair Warning. The sinister piece was the night's biggest treat along with Edward's famous 25-minute guitar solo. King Edward played a collage of his past solos, beginning with his latest "316," which originated from the 1986 "5150" tour. Favorites such as "Cathedral," "Eruption" and the intro to "Mean Streets" appeared.

One of the night's biggest crimes was the performance of more Sammy Hagar solo material (three songs: "There's Only One Way to Rock," "I Can't Drive 55" and "Eagles Fly") then old Halen material. It's hard to decipher who is at fault for this. However, Hagar has been in the band for six years, part of three number one albums and numerous hit singles. In other words, he has proved himself. Playing old VH should not be a qualm, rather, a must. There were people in the audience who grew up on those songs and they wanted to hear them.

The band's past albums such as 5150 and OU812 were represented by only two or three songs each: "Best of Both Worlds," "Why Can't This Be Love," "A.F.U. (naturally Wired)," "Finish What Ya Started."

The encore featured a perfect pairing of "Jump," again with pre-taped keyboards and new single, "Top of the World" while a giant VH ring ignited behind the stage. The strength and talent is still there, they simply have to take the fire from the pyro-techniques and put it into themselves.

'Letters' reveals unusual experiences

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

"Dallas' " own Linda Gray and Larry Hagman brought the Shubert Theatre to life Tuesday, Oct. 15 for the first eight performances of the award-winning play, "Love Letters." Attending this play is not like spending a typical evening at the theatre. There is no action, no scenery and no real dialogue. What does occur, however, is a deep and personal relationship that is revealed to the audience through the reading of old letters. It is not quite a comedy and certainly anot a serious drama. The letters simply outline the course two best friends travel throughout their lives.

"Love Letters" tells the story of Andrew Makepease Ladd II and Melissa Gardner, two friends who first began writing letters in the second grade. The letters bring the audience through prep school, adolescence, college and outside relationships. The letters narrate Andrew's tour in the Navy, his first divorce and the acceptance of his stale, but comfortable marriage. They follow Melissa through her casual love affairs, her attempt to justify art as a serious profession and her fall into her pit of alcohol and depression from which only Andrew can save her.

The words themselves make a powerful statement. Consequently, it is the trained reading of the letters that creates such an interest and desire to see how their relationship works out. The actors are in control of the play. They set the pace and mood for the evening. Although the actors never look at each other during the reading, the audience can tell how intense their feelings are towards one another simply through the inflections in their voices.

Gray and Hagman did a wonderful job in making the audience believe in their friendship. Since there is virtually no action, it is essential that the audience care about Andrew and Melissa. The "Dallas" couple offered exquisite performances that showcased

LOVE LETTERS

Squeeze combines styles

By COLEEN KENIREY
Staff Reporter

When Squeeze took the stage Oct. 12, seats at the Tower Theater, which had been almost empty for the two opening acts, were quickly filled by anxious fans. The crowd combined an unusual blend of different ages and styles, making it impossible to describe a typical Squeeze listener.

The band combined old favorites and a few selections from its album Play, pleasing all its fans.

Squeeze started the concert with the upbeat song "The Prisoner," from its 1987 release Babylon And On. Singer Glenn Tilbrook followed this with one of the group's most popular hits "Is That Love" preceding another favorite. "If I Didn't Love You." The band introduced a new single, a slow ballad called "Satisfy." Squeeze continued to satisfy the audience with spirited and tuneful songs which included "Pulling Mussels From A Shell," "Take Me I'm Yours," "Hourglass" and "Tempted." The second and final encore which ended the show was "Annie Get Your Gun."

The crowd combined an unusual blend of different ages and styles.

One aspect of the concert which stood out was the band's constant attempt to include the audience in the performance. Frequently the lights were turned toward the fans, encouraging them to sing along with the familiar lyrics. Most of its songs examine ordinary life, often focusing on love. Refreshingly, Squeeze does not present itself as an inaccessible and imageconscious band.

Although few people arrived until just before Squeeze began, the two opening acts were also very impressive. First to perform was the British band The Candyskins, whose music is worth discovering. Their music features uncomplicated powerful beats on songs like "Down Your Street" and their ballad "She Blew Me Away." A tight band who plays well together, the Candyskins' short set also featured a cover of Buffalo Springfield's "For What It's Worth."

The second and equally great opening act was The Ocean blue, a young progressive band from Hershey, Pa. who recently released their second LP, Cerulean. It began its brief performance with "The Planetarium Scene," followed by two other cuts spawned from Cerulean, the title song and "Ballerina Out Of Control." The Ocean Blue also played four tunes from its debut album which included "Between Something And Nothing" and "Vanity Fair." It was thoroughly a night of outstanding music provided not only by Squeeze, but the opening bands as well.

DeVito defines greed for '80s Wall Street

Wall Street's greedy brokers marred the '80s by hungrily devouring the stock market. Men like this did not allow "the rules" to keep them from growing richer and more powerful. In "Other People's Money," a humorous tribute is made to a time defined by material wealth and costly scandal.

Danny DeVito plays "Larry the Liquidator," a ruthless corporate raider who has made his fortune buying out companies and then selling off their valuable assets. To him, the world revolves around money and how to get more. The people he hurts and the businesses he ruins are not real; it's all part of a game, "and the one who dies with the most money — wins!"

This is all before he meets Kate, a beautiful lawyer who represents New England Wire and Cable, Larry's current target. She firmly holds her position amidst his underhanded trickery and is amused by his constant yet charming attempts to get her into bed.

DeVito is hysterical as a shrewd and ruthless businessman.

DeVito is hysterical as a shrewd and ruthless businessman whose goal in life is to make money. He dances around the screen, with a doughnut in one hand and a devilish laugh that makes him irrestible. Even as the villain, DeVito has the audience rooting for him at almost every point throughout the movie. He plays the comic role for which he was born, and he does it with style.

Penelope Ann Miller, who plays Kate, does all she can to match DeVito, but falls short. His character constantly outshines her own, and she seems to be working very hard while his performance is effortless.

Gregory Peck portrays the company's aging president, one who sticks to the "old rules" and refuses to bend under the pressure of the buy-out. His grandfatherly image of a protector and provider reminds one of simpler times, when honest hard work was rewarded with success.

"Other People's Money" proves to be one of DeVito's funniest films and is worthwhile merely for his on-screen antics. The other characters are adequate, but the film really revolves around DeVito and his quest to capture the gorgeous lawyer and make a killing. This is a DeVito comedy at its best.

Al Pacino and Michelle Pfeiffer star in "Frankie and Johnny."

Pacino escapes loneliness

"Frankie & Johnny"
Directed by Garry Marshall
Paramount Pictures

Love's most potent aspect is its unpredictability. It can strike any heart at any time. Many films smother romance in sugary sweetness, but in the everyday world it results from communication and affection, not magic. "Frankie & Johnny" is the realistic story of two weary individuals searching for something special in their otherwise stale lives.

Al Pacino stars as Johnny, an ex-con who lands a job as a short-order cook in a New York City diner. Life has been hard on Johnny and his loneliness aches for appeasement. Immediately upon his release, he hires a prostitute, but only lies fully clothed in her embrace.

This is all before he meets Frankie (Michelle Pfeiffer), a waitress at the diner. Johnny immediately decides she will make his life complete. She has other ideas, however, because she's been hurt too many times. Johnny spends all his time convincing Frankie she is worthy of respect and capable of love. Despite all the emotional baggage they carry, each eventually opens to the other.

Frankie and Johnny's relationship deals exclusively in realism, addressing issues like love, loneliness, sex and self-esteem. Pacino and Pfeiffer connect as worn-out laborers with painful pasts and dim futures. Pfeiffer is especially convincing as Frankie, for her performance possesses none of the sultriness of her previous characters.

"Frankie & Johnny" as a whole, however, does not shine as brightly as its individual parts. The emotional climax (if one can be found) has Frankie and Johnny brushing their teeth by an open window. Although it builds the theme of realism, it sends the viewer away unsatisfied. The film takes a serious look at the modern relationship, but it does not seem to have any real insight. While Pacino and Pfeiffer are excellent, "Frankie & Johnny" is only decent.

'Idaho' creates dark world

By COLEEN KENIREY

"My Private Idaho"
Directed by Gus Van Sant

My Own Private Idaho is a film which transports the audience far away from the mainstream into the dark world of a male prostitute. Mike, played realistically by River Phoenix, is a narcoleptic searching for the mother who abandoned him. The film opens with Mike standing on a road, a symbol of the personal journey he must undertake in the film. His search carries him from the streets of Portland, Oreg. to Idaho, Las Vegas and Rome. Throughout the movie, Mike has dreamlike flashbacks of his childhood.

Phoenix's character has narcolepsy, an unusual disease which causes seizure-like periods of deep sleep. His friend Scott, the rebellious son of the mayor of Portland, cares for Mike during his narcoleptic attacks. Keanu Reeves' performance as Scott has some good moments, but at times the dialogue seems forced, such as his monologue about his relationship with his father.

Idaho is a very artistic film, making the plot difficult to understand at times. Directed by Gus Van Sant, who also created Drugstore Cowboy, the film contains sexual scenes which are a series of still photographs instead of live action images. It deals with controversial material including Mike's declaration of his homosexual love for Scott.

Van Sant employs many offbeat images including a comical scene where characters speak to each other from pornographic magazine covers. Scott's spontaneous use of Shakespearean dialogue and Mike's view of the road through the cracks between his fingers. It features some good acting, especially from Phoenix. Reeves' role allows him to break out of his teen idol mold. The movie's success lies in its ability to stir viewer sympathy for Mike. Although the audience may disagree with his way of life, it is human emotion drawing it to Mike. Due to its controversial subject matter, this film is not easily accessible in this conservative neck of the woods, but it is worth seeing for its complete divergence from the norm.

John Wesley Harding will appear at 23 East Cabaret Nov. 6.

By AARON NICODEMUS
Editorial Assistant

After critics raved over his first album, Here Comes the Groom, John Wesley Harding began his career being labeled "a commanding new talent of the 90s." His latest release, The Name Above the Title, proves that the first was not a fluke and Harding is for real.

Harding's style, if it can be pinpointed, ranges from a driving rock beat to blues, folk and even country. Many songs highlight a particular plague of society, some subtly and some with caustic clarity. The music often matches the mood of the song and is led by its message. As much as Harding attempts to make a statement, much of his work simply traces relationships or tells a story.

John Wesley Harding spent six months touring in the summer of 1990 in front of delighted audiences coast to coast. He will be performing at the 23 East Cabaret Nov. 6. Doors open at 8 p.m.

CABARET FLASH: The Stray Cats are back after a four-year hiatus from the music scene. Their 1982 album Built For Speed generated two hit singles, "Rock This Town" and "Stray Cat Strut." Later efforts also proved successful. The Cats' style is self-proclaimed "rockability," mixing today's rock sound with one more familiar to the Elvis era. Their latest album, Blast Off, is a result of an eight-week tour last fall that visited 45 cities. The Stray Cats bring their act to the Chestnut Cabaret Nov. 4.

Vinnie Moore's guitar prowess has been chronicled in Guitar Player and Guitar World, and his album Meltdown has merited similar praise. On his third album, Moore reestablishes himself as one of rock n' roll's premier talents. Moore tours as Alice Cooper's lead guitarist when he's not pursuing a succesful solo career. He will be performing at 23 East Cabaret Nov. 5.

Huston leads 'Family'

By CHRISTINA FRANGOS
Assistant Entertainment Editor

SPOTLIGHT: this is the season for movie makers and television to use holiday gimmicks to draw in the crowds. In "The Addams Family," morbid curiosity will be aroused once again with the remake of the 1964 black comedy which lit up television screens across the country.

But movie screens will not glitter after the $30 million Paramount spent to insure the set is as gloomy as possible. Complete with dead flowers, headless dolls and cavernous quarters, "The Addams Family" follows the genre of "Beetlejuice" with an equally star-studded cast.

Anjelica Huston stars as Morticia, complete with blood red fingernails, whiter than white skin and long black hair to fit the profile of the amorous yet cadaverous wife and mom; Raul Julia costars as her loving husband, Gomez, who keeps the strong traditional values and eerie home life intact. Christopher Lloyd plays the infamous Uncle Fester.

"The Addams Family" highlights a new trend in family movies. While the Addams are not the average neighbors, they are genuinely warm-hearted and caring. Many conversions from television to the big screen never capture the essence of the original. But that seems to be the main concentration here. The chemistry between television's Gomez and Morticia (John Astin and Carolyn Jones) was undeniable. Julia and Huston appear to be heading in the same direction.

Though this is Barry Sonnenfeld's directing debut, his cinematography has been seen in movies "Misery," "Raising Arizona" and "Miller's Crossing." Producer Scott Rudin faced many conflicts during production with a change in writers and the style of the film. Geared more toward family, special effects are used minimally.

It cannot be easy to create a movie in the '90s based on a cartoon strip of a postwar era which became a television show of the '60s. Though times have changed, tradition will always overpower fads and during the holiday season a little tradition can go a long way.

FLASH: Hollywood has rustled up some big attractions for November, including war flicks, psychological and seductive thrillers and military drama. "Shining Through" stars Melanie Griffith and Michael Douglas as a love-struck employee and boss separated by the calling of World War II. When Griffith follows Douglas to Europe and becomes a spy living in the home of Nazi Liam Neeson, conflict arises amid questions of love and the senselessness of war.

"For The Boys" is a lively exhibit of patriotism and honor with Bette Midler and James Caan starring as troop-pleasers during World War II. With the Gulf War sentiment still alive and Thanksgiving right around the corner, their singing and dancing are sure to please the audience.

Martin Scorsese's well anticipated remake of 1962 "Cape Fear" stars Robert DeNiro as an ex-convict who terrorizes the lawyer who could not keep him out of jail (Nick Nolte) and his wife (Jessica Lange).

Scandal has been associated with each film that Sean Young made. In "Love Crimes" it is on the screen rather than behind it when Young plays a district attorney sacrificing herself to catch a seductive criminal played by Patrick Bergin. Bergin's present role is similar to his past appearance in "Sleeping with the Enemy."

Currently in filming is "A Few Good Men," starring Tom Cruise and Demi Moore as military attorneys. Directed by Rob Reiner (Misery), shooting will take place in Washington, Georgetown and Los Angeles.

SPARKS: "Married With Children" aired this season with Peg Bundy (Katey Sagal) pregnant. After Sagal suffered a miscarriage Oct. 14, producers decided to turn the television sequence into a dream. Sagal will return to the set next week . . .

Marriage will finally be discussed in a two-part episode of "Who's The Boss" in mid-November. While stars Tony Danza and Judith Light have kept the series going with their platonic yet affectionate living arrangements, the show's end is approaching and all involved want to end with a bang . . .

Yet another emotional Barbara Walters special will air next week. Featured guests this time are Bette Midler, Richard Gere and Anjelica Huston.

Cougar ages with grace

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

The ever name changing John Mellencamp, formally John Cougar Mellencamp, previously John Cougar and once Johnny Cougar, has thrown all previous conceptions out the window and goes for the throat on Whenever We Wanted.

Whenever represents Mellencamp's return to the old Cougar we use to know. His last album, Big Daddy, found our hero saying bluntly, "Never wanted to be no 'Pop Singer.' Never wanted to write no pop song." However, here he is in 1991 at the age of forty singing the sexually stimulated, "Get a Leg Up" while a girl half his age straps herself around his torso on the cover while Mellencamp smokes a cancer stick. Speaking of hypocritical . . .

Anger was what Mellencamp once thrived on. His defiance was inpenetratable. He recently broke up with his second wife Vicky as well as becoming a grandfather, therefore the theme of heartache seems to have refueled his once dwindling inner fire.

"Last Chance," "Now More Than Ever" and the title track finds Mellencamp crying, "If I was to buy you a diamond ring, make you my princess, would it mean anything? Would you take me for granted. ("Ever")/If there was love, I'd let it take me away. But, I just stay here alone. ("Chance")/I know she's out there some where . . . she was my biggest enemy. ("Whenever")."

The lyrics drip with self-pity, although the music is intriguing due to its edginess. The riffs along with outstanding drummer Kenny Aronoff's perfectly timed shots rebound a quick instep beat that Mellencamp seem to drop somewhere along one of his head trips.

Famous Cougar topics from the socially conscious ("Melting Pot," "Love and Happiness") to the good time tunes ("Again Tonight"). But, the one that sums up the overall aura would be "I Ain't Ever Satisfied." The title alone says it all. Whether it be about his name, his female relations or his music it seems little John Mellencamp will always remain feisty and lets hope he does.

24 Nights documents Eric Clapton's 24-night stint at the Royal Albert Hall in London, England. The severe attraction this package is not merely live versions of classics such as "White Room" and "Sunshine of Your Love," but rather the four diverse bands Mr. Clapton put together to record them.

The straight ahead four-piece band features bassist Nathan East, drummer Steve Ferrone and keyboardist Gregg Phillinganes. This set-up presents a tight sound on "Badge" and "Running on Faith" and surpasses his previous set ups.

A nine-piece-band, basically a refurbished version of the four piece with the addition of a team of background vocals, more keyboards from Chuck Leavell and infamous percussionist Ray Cooper. This expanded band is used to embellish more complicated cuts like "Wonderful Tonight" and the rare performance of "Bell Bottom Blues."

An added twist was used by the aid of the National Philharmonic Orchestra on a cover of Ray Charles' "Hard Times" leading into "Edge of Darkness." Clapton vocals are vibrant however, the Orchestra is too much and tends to dry up the vitality of the initial sound.

A dreamy blues band consisting of guitarists Robert Cray and Buddy Guy, pianist Johnnie Johnson, bassist Richard Cousins and drummer Jamie Oldaker make the double album worth owning. Chestnuts "Have You Ever Loved a Woman" and "Worried Life Blues" pop up. Even guitarist Jimmie Vaughan appears on a rip-roaring version of "Hoodoo Man."

Clapton's guitar, as always, is striking due to the natural fluidity from note to note. Although he is dubbed, 'God' Clapton still has much to learn specificallly in choosing his own songs. The missing link being "Layla" and the misses such as an over abundance of material from his last studio effort, Journeyman (five of the LP's 15). Even God makes mistakes . . .

SPECIAL REPORT*: Guns N' Roses rhythm guitarist Izzy Stradlin has parted ways with his long time band members for at least the rest of the two-year Use Your Illusion touring trek. Stradlin, a shy quiet introvert, could not put up with the craziness and mishaps surrounding the band. He even went to such an extreme as having his own separate tour bus apart from the others.

Stradlin has been said to already been replaced by former Jane's Addiction guitarist David Nararro for the remaining dates of the tour. No confirmation has been made about Stradlin's leaving the band permanently. Whether or not Navarro would be a permanent replacement, should Stradlin leave, is also a question that remains unanswered.

'Future' star Wilson performs for benefit

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

Comedian Tom Wilson spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive interview for the Villanovan.

"What are you lookin' at ... BUTTHEAD!" Perhaps you have been approached in this manner recently, well you can blame it all on comedian/actor Tom Wilson who famed himself as Biff, the bully you love to hate, in Steven Spielberg's famous Hollywood trilogy, "Back to the Future" parts I, II and III. Wilson will be featured, along with other comedians Jim Daly and Paul Lyons, for a stand-up comedy benefit for the Brian Morgan Scholarship Fund at Connelly Center, Tuesday night Nov. 5 at 8 p.m.

Wilson explains the project and Brian Morgan's identity, "Brian Morgan was a teacher of acting, as well as an excellent actor in his own rank. He was a mentor of many. I, myself, was a student of his in the '70s at Radnor High School, so his legacy lives on in hundreds of people. It was a great loss when he died tragically at 43. In fact, I was going to call him while I was on the set of 'Future II' when I learned of his death.

"The Brian Morgan Scholarship is given through the Villanova Theatre Department to a theater student who wishes to study acting professionally. It's been around since just after he died and was put together by a group of his former lion-hearted students."

Oddly enough, Wilson has been a stand up comic for as long as 13 years. Wilson speaks of the trade, "Stand-up comedy, in my mind, is theater. I initially intended to do it once so I could tell my grandchildren that I did (jokes) ... But in all seriousness the type of comedy I present is more character oriented. Simply a goofy persona, somewhere between Steve Martin and Jerry Lewis. My material is clean. I really don't believe in the foul comedy of today. I think its the easy way out. It's a shock reaction that the audience has that creates it. They laugh out of embarrassment. I try to do something else."

You will not find Wilson on any of the Improv shows because he does not want to get 'pigeon-holed' as just a comedian. "I do drama, I recently finished a Taylor Hackford film for Hollywood Pictures. I am also working on a one-man show which has a mix of comedic elements as well as serious pieces," stated Wilson.

Wilson is best known for his 'Future' movies, "When I initially tried out for the first film, I just hoped that they might cast me as 'the soda shop guy.' In fact my reading went bad, it was like, 'Aw gee thanks, Tom. Yeah well we'll call you.' Validate your parking ticket kind of deal. That night I went to a Bruce Springsteen concert and while everybody sang 'Born to Run' there was a young man in section triple Q with his head in his hands. But, then my agent called me the next morning with the good news.

"The character of Biff is broad. Much of his comic prowess was due to his seriousness. Biff is really hot air. He never really did anything mean to anyone. He's strictly verbal and that is what gets him in trouble. Those movies were the hardest thing I've ever done. You know, you always hear about people who are hospitalized from exhaustion. Believe me, I've been there."

Tickets for the benefit are $5 for students, $10 for the public and will be available at the Connelly Center box-office. Only a limited amount of tickets will be available on the night of the performance. A reception will follow the show where viewers can meet Wilson. Tickets for the reception are $10. All the money collected for the tickets will go directly into the Brian Morgan Scholarship Fund.

"I eventually want to return to the theater," explains Wilson, "as long as I keep working. But, you have to be careful with your choices or you could get trapped. Like with a TV sitcom, where they mold the whole show by the one comedian who fires out one liners. But, as long as I'm steadily working and not found at a car show in Iowa, Canada ... Not to disparage the people in car shows or those specific people from Iowa, Canada, but, that climate does not match well with my asthma."

Mini musicals showcase student talent

By MARY GRACE BONTEMPO
Staff Reporter

If you happened to see the Student Musical Theater's mini-musicals or production of "Grease" last year, you will remember how entertaining these performances were. Entering its second year, the Student Musical Theater's offerings for this season prove to be just as exciting.

The musical revue consisting of song and dance numbers from "Godspell," "Anything Goes," "Barnum" and "Fiddler On The Roof" will be performed Nov. 21 through Nov. 21 through Nov. 24.

The Student Musical Theater provides a great outlet for students to express their creative talents. The mini-musicals enable a great number of students who love to act, sing and dance to get involved and meet other students with similar interests. Besides providing the chance to perform, the musicals also give some students the opportunity to try their hand at directing. Members of the board and other students serve as the stage, vocal and technical directors for the various shows.

Student Musical Theater provides a great outlet for students to express their creative talents.

"I like to see the final product and the excitement of everyone involved," said Kristi Peyakovich, one of the student directors of "Fiddler on the Roof."

On Parents' Weekend, students and their parents who attended the musical revue were given a sampling of the mini-musicals. The night proved to be entertaining and exciting not only for the audience, but for the performers as well. Tom DeSanto, cast member of "Godspell" commented, "the feedback from the audience and other students after the show made me feel really good when they said what a great job we did."

Mark your calendars for Nov. 21-24. Come and experience the color and excitement of "Barnum," the toe-tapping energy of "Anything Goes," the tradition of "Fiddler On The Roof" and the spirit of "Godspell."

For those interested in becoming involved with the full length musical of the spring semester, auditions will be scheduled in early December. Anyone interested in helping with sets, props, stage crew etc. should contact the Music Activities Office.

'Love Letters' returns

their talent, often overlooked on a television series.

"Love Letters" is an unusual and diverse theatrical experience. The play teaches the audience the importance of the written word and the value of true friends. As a result, it is often television or film couples that star in the production. Actors such as Steve Allen, Ed Begley Jr., Stockard Channing, William Hurt, Kate Jackson, Andrew McCarthy, Kathleen Turner, Robert Wagner and Stephanie Powers have performed the plays at the Shubert.

The first act tends to be a little confusing because the basic format is foreign to the common viewer. It seems as though one minute the friends are students in grammar school and by the next letter, Andrew is leaving for Yale. Even so, the second act pulls the loose ends together by reintroducing the couple in their adult life. The journey that began in second grade continues until death.

Described by playwright A.R. Gurney as "sort of a play," "Love Letters" is more of an experience than an actual play. Often it has eerie reminders to one's own personal life, one of the main goals. Linda Gray and Larry Hagman conquererd the art of performing solely through words.

Cats suffer loss

By JOHN OGLE
Staff Reporter

The Wildcats traveled to Delaware Stadium on Oct. 19, only to come away with a bad taste in their mouths after a 38-28 Yankee Conference defeat.

Villanova suffered its first loss of the season at the hands of Delaware, falling behind 25-0 early in the game. As the matchup progressed, the Cats valiantly tried to come back with an incredible aerial show by quarterback Tom Colombo and his receivers. Unfortunately, 'Nova was never able to gain a lead over the Blue Hens.

Villanova came away, however, with a couple of positives on the day. First, Colombo set Delaware Stadium records for passes with 61 and completions with 35 while throwing for 389 yards. His main receiver in the game was wide receiver Harold Hart, who grabbed 10 passes for 108 yards. The second positive was more team-oriented. The players and fans recognized that by the end of the game the Wildcats regrouped and brought themselves up to the high level of competition they will be facing in the second half of the season.

Delaware junior quarterback Bill Vergantino led his team, scoring three of the first four touchdowns and gaining 272 total yards on the day. Safety Warren McIntire also added six points to the Blue Hens tally with his interception and subsequent 41-yard touchdown return of Colombo's pass. Colombo's first interception return for a touchdown of his career.

Villanova put its first points on the board as Colombo completed a 15-yard touchdown pass to split end George Brown. The Wildcats hoped this would turn the momentum their way, but Vergantino scored another touchdown on a four-yard run during the next Blue Hen possession, eating up most of the second quarter.

There was enough time, however, for the Wildcats to score one more touchdown in the first half. In one of the great plays of the season, Hart proved to be in the right place at the right time. After the deflection of a Colombo pass with four seconds left in the half, Hart snared the ball for a 33-yard touchdown reception.

Colombo, after a scoreless third quarter, hit his receivers twice for touchdowns in the fourth quarter. The Wildcats marched downfield 85 yards in one possession with Pat Friend catching the 17-yard touchdown pass from Colombo.

Water polo finishes 11-9

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The Villanova water polo team concluded the 1991 regular season with its best finish since entering Division I. The team was 11-9 overall and 3-5 in the tough Mid-Atlantic Conference. All five of its conference losses were to teams ranked nationally in the top 20.

"Our season was full of a lot of close games," said Head Coach Dan Sharidan. This was also the first season the team ever beat Army.

Villanova defeated Fordham University in its last regular season game 6-5. Marc Verotsky scored four goals and Kevin Engstrom and Jeff Bernaducc each rifled home one apiece. Goalie John O'Keefe recorded six saves for the win.

For the second year in a row, Engstrom finished the season as leading regular-season scorer with 39 goals, Verotsky scored 36 goals and Paul Cera and Jim Floerchinger each had 22. Senior Steve Abbott and freshman Bernaducci also finished with 14 goals apiece. Verotsky led the team with 13 assists and Floerchinger had 32 steals. The team found three excellent goalies in Adam Zakarian, Jeff Bodle and O'Keefe. Zakarian had the highest save percentage of 52, O'Keefe led with 62 saves and Bodle had the lowest average of goals scored against him.

The Cats' post-season play begins tomorrow against Bucknell at the Mid-Atlantic Conference Championships in Annapolis, Md.

"We have a good chance to beat Bucknell," said Sharidan, whose team is seeded sixth in a tournament in which they have never placed higher than seventh. Villanova would have to place at least third to have a chance of competing in the Eastern Championships the following weekend.

Volleyball continues to roll; streak now 17

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Staff Reporter

The volleyball team is red hot as it heads into the Big Five tournament. The Wildcats now own a 17-match winning streak which has propelled them to a 6-0 conference mark and an overall record of 24-2.

The first of these wins came against a tough Providence squad. The Cats held their own against an imposing Friar frontline and prevailed in four challenging games (15-9, 13-15, 15-9, 17-15). The contest was capped by a ferocious 'Nova rally in the decisive fourth frame.

Coach David Barkley was very pleased with the Cats' performance. "I think the Providence match was one of our better matches," he said. "Any time you come back from being down 11-1, and you win against Providence, that's excellent because Providence is a very good team when it comes to mental toughness."

The comeback was a tribute to the team's determination, confidence and unity.

"This year's level of play is up 100 percent from last year," said sophomore Maria Perparos. "The team gets along a lot better, I think, than last year. We're like sisters instead of just teammates. It's a lot more fun this year."

One reason for the team's happiness stems from its current winning streak. 'Nova has not lost since Sept. 21, when it played Virginia.

Following the victory over Providence, Villanova downed Boston College in four games (15-8, 9-15, 15-5, 15-3). The Wildcats began the match flat, still drained from the emotional victory over Providence. But they grew more intense as the contest progressed and were able to keep B.C. in check after the second game.

The following weekend, 'Nova again went a perfect 2-0, registering impressive road victories over Cornell (16-14, 15-5, 15-12) and conference rival Syracuse. The Wildcats were able to defeat the favored Orangemen in five tight games (15-10, 16-14, 11-15, 9-15, 15-13).

Villanova's roadtrip continued last week, as the Cats visited Drexel. The scrappy Dragons forged a 2-1 lead before falling in five games (12-15, 15-9, 11-15, 15-6, 15-13).

"Drexel is a team that is just like one of those dogs that grabs your ankle and won't let go," Barkley said. "They're a very feisty team. They're a very smart team. They don't overmatch you athletically, but they will stay in the match and fight with you all the way."

'Nova followed this triumph with yet another road win at Seton Hall (12-15, 15-11, 15-13, 15-7). In recording its fifth conference victory, Barkley said his team "played a good match" against the Pirates.

Perhaps the only setback of the streak occurred last Sunday, when the Cats played Connecticut. Although the Cats won, the team played what Barkley termed as a "disappointing match." After building a 2-0 advantage, the Wildcats faltered late in the third frame and needed five games to defeat the Huskies (15-9, 15-8, 12-15, 14-16, 15-13).

"There isn't a single team in the country in any sport that doesn't have its flat times during the season," explained Barkley. "And that (the UConn match) was one of ours."

Barkley, however, did see something positive in the contest. "The good thing about this team, and there's always a silver lining to everything, they are hurt by the way we played against UConn."

Tennis finishes 16-3

By JOHN OGLE
Staff Reporter

Women's tennis closed out its regular season with the Oct. 8 shutout over St. Joseph's University, boasting a 16-3 overall record and the 600th career victory for Head Coach Dr. Robert Langran. The team traveled to Seton Hall and placed fifth in the Big East Tournament.

Langran was proud of the team's dominance of St. Joseph's. "The women didn't want to leave it [the 600th win] for the men in the spring," he said.

Going into the Big East Tournament, Langran knew their chances of finishing high depended on the draw of the matches. The draw proved good enough to set up Villanova for a great finish on the final day of the tournament.

On the final day, the Wildcats won all six of their matches. Kerry Amen and Kerry Dillon each won third place in their respective singles flights. Carolyn Daley, Krista Chamberlain, and Michelle Bush won their consolation singles finals. Daley and Chamberlain also teamed up to win the consolation match in their doubles flight.

"I knew we'd be good. We ended up being better." This was Langran's overall view of the season, noting the team's five shutouts recorded during the regular season. After reaching the milestone of 600 wins, his goals remain the same. "I just want to have both teams continue to do well."

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Pat Kennedy

Sonia O'Sullivan

This week, The Villanovan recognizes both Pat Kennedy and Sonia O'Sullivan as Athletes of the Week.

Kennedy set a new single-game record for rushing with 249 yards on just 21 carries. The senior broke the previous record set by Pete D'Alonzo who gained 201 yards in 1950 against Duquesne. Kennedy also scored four touchdowns with runs of four, 14, 79 and 13 yards.

Not to be outdone, O'Sullivan captured her first-ever Big East title with a time of 17:09.16 to lead the Cats to the team championship at Van Cortlandt Park in New York City. It is just another major accomplishment in the distinguished career for the senior from Cobh, Ireland, who was last year's NCAA cross country individual champion.

Soccer upends Princeton

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Staff Reporter

In recent action, the women's soccer team dropped two road games to Monmouth College and William and Mary before rebounding to upend the Princeton Tigers to raise its season mark to 9-7-2.

In the midst of five straight away contests, the Cats lost to a tough Monmouth team which managed to come back from a 2-0 deficit to pull out a 3-2 win. The Cats were outshot 12-10 while mustering little offense in the second half.

The first period saw 'Nova strike early as freshmen Sharon Hewitt and Sara Levandusky set up Rachel Moreau only 2:13 into the match. After the halftime intermission, Dawn Clancy notched her fifth assist of the season by combining with Tina Conti for the second score of the game.

With 13:35 left in regulation, Monmouth sliced the lead in half. Minutes later, 'Nova allowed another Monmouth score which knotted the contest 2-2. Both teams failed to push across a goal in the remaining 5:24 of regulation.

In the first overtime session, Monmouth managed to tack up a goal with 2:38 left to make the score 3-2. The Cats were unable to comeback in the second overtime period and settled for their third loss in four games.

'Nova next traveled to William and Mary in hopes of breaking out of its late season slump. Despite a determined effort, the Cats were overpowered en route to a 4-1 loss. The William and Mary offense kicked into high gear in the first period producing two scores. Late in the second half, the Cats fell further behind when William and Mary punched in another score at the 70:45 mark of the match. The Cats were outshot 19-9 and keepers Karen Del Sarto and Danielle Fagan were called upon to make 10 saves.

Trailing 3-0, the Cats struck back when freshman Debbie Wiley assisted Moreau on her fifth goal of the season with 16:00 remaining. Despite the effort, the Cats dropped another game 4-1.

In the season finale at Princeton, the Cats chalked up their ninth victory of the season 2-0. Unlike their previous matches at Monmouth and William and Mary, the Cats outshot their opponents 13-9, while managing goals in both periods. In the first half, senior Betsy Clement scored off a Moreau assist at 30:53 into the match.

After the halftime break, 'Nova posted its second score when Dawn Clancy fed Leslie Coleman for her first goal of the season. Keepers Del Sarto and Fagan guarded the net for their third combined shutout.

With this victory over Princeton, the Cats improved to 9-7-2 and are waiting for the ECAC to announce its field for the post-season tournament in hopes of earning an invitation.

Soccer splits pair

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

The Villanova men's soccer team split a pair of games last week, raising its record to 10-5 on the season. With only two games left, the Cats are still in contention for the fourth and final playoff spot in the Big East Conference Championships to be played Nov. 8-10.

Villanova began play last week by travelling to Philadelphia Textile for its final Soccer 7 matchup of the year. The Wildcats captured the match 2-0. The Cats were led by first-half goals from sophomore Tim Gannon and freshman Chris Hogan. Leading Villanova scorer, Joe Roy also contributed by assisting on both Wildcat goals. The victory raised Villanova's Soccer 7 record to 3-2, its best finish in league play since 1980.

The Cats played host to Big East opponent Connecticut at Villanova Stadium Oct. 27. Villanova got on the board early as Tim Gannon scored off a pass from Chris Hogan just 14:00 into play. The Huskies answered late in the first half, tying the score with 1:18 left in the half.

'Nova once again responded quickly, scoring on a Scott Aimetti penalty kick just five minutes into the second period for a 2-1 Villanova lead. But the Huskies battled back, tying the score just six minutes later. The two teams battled for the next 33 minutes, only to see Connecticut break through with the game-winning goal with just 1:41 left in the game. The loss evened Villanova's record in the Big East to 3-3.

The Cats face a very important challenge as they try to qualify for the Big East conference playoffs for the first time since 1984. Entering the game Oct. 29 against Seton Hall, the Cats are in a three-way tie for the fourth and final playoff berth. After playing Seton Hall on the road, the Cats must travel to Providence College Saturday afternoon. If the Cats can manage to secure a playoff berth, it will make an already successful season even sweeter for Coach Larry Sullivan and his squad.

NOTES: As of Oct. 29, Joe Roy was the third leading scorer in the Philadelphia Soccer 7 and the Cats' top scorer. Roy has scored eight goals and six assists for an average of 1.69 points per game . . . Other Villanova scoring leaders in the Soccer 7 include Scott Aimetti (5 goals, 7 assists; 1.13 average), Rich Maue (4 goals, 2 assists), and Tim Gannon (3 goals, 3 assists).

Hockey awaits post season

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

After winning the 1990 Big East title, the Wildcat's 1991 season has truly been one of streaks. Several weeks ago, a four-game winning streak advanced their record to 5-4-1. Villanova proceeded to lose the next three, and just when it looked as though a winning season was out of the question, they pieced together three consecutive wins. With their record standing at 8-7-1, the Cats climbed into the national rankings, ranked No. 20 in the latest poll.

Villanova faced Syracuse on home turf Oct. 14. Every minute of this game was intense as the league rivals duked it out in an afternoon matinee. It was defensewoman Kate McKee's game to shine as she continually stuffed the menacing Orange offensive line. "They were out to get us so we had to play up to their game," she said concerning the aggressive play that dominated this Big East match. After a 0-0 first half, Syracuse's Shelly Magee scored halfway through the second period. However, a 1-0 Syracuse lead did not hurt the level of Wildcat play. Villanova spent the last two minutes taking corner shots on the Syracuse net. Unfortunately, none went in, and this game ended in a Syracuse win.

Three days later the Wildcats hosted Rutgers under the Villanova Stadium lights. The drizzle and low temperature seemed to affect the play of both teams, as neither team seemed to be able to push the ball past their opponent's midfield line. Only the brilliant stickhandling of co-captain Melissa Rea and a daring breakup of a one-on-one drive by goalie Chrissy Thomas stood out in this unusually slow game. Finally, with 4:51 left on the clock, Rutgers midfielder Heather Jones broke the monotony when she put one between the Villanova pipes. For good measure, Rutgers scored on a penalty stroke with 1:14 remaining, to take the game in a 2-0 win.

With the season winding down, the Cats took their act down south where they faced the University of Virginia. With their record having fallen to 5-7-1, this game was crucial for the Villanova stickwomen, and they played accordingly. After a scoreless first half, defensewoman Monika Pedano drove home a goal assisted by co-captains Rea and Missy Paolantonio. That was all the offense the Wildcats needed, as they held Virginia scoreless and won 1-0.

Another road game found 'Nova taking on Lehigh. The road has been kinder to the Wildcats than Villanova Stadium has been this year. The Cats have a 5-3-1 out-of-town record this season compared to a 3-4 home record. Pedano was out to prove that this game was no exception, as she once again played the role of Villanova heroine by netting her third goal of the season. The Cats came home with yet another 1-0 win, and a record of 7-7-1.

In their final home game of the season, the Wildcats ran all over West Chester, beating them 4-2. Sophomore Bree Hawthorne, who has played a tremendous forward line all season, finally gained two points for her efforts by scoring one goal for each half.

Paolantonio and Barbara King also notched a goal for the Wildcats.

With a national ranking, the Wildcats have good reason to hope for a spot in the upcoming Big East tournament, which will be played November 9-10 at Boston College. The Cats' final regular season opponent is Georgetown, whom they will face on the road this Sunday. Coach Jackie Gerzabek said that she was "looking forward to another chance in the tournament, and hopefully it will be the same result (as last year's victory)."

Golf takes seventh

By PETER MORRICE

The Wildcat golf team tied for seventh place at the St. John's Invitational Oct. 19-20 at Bethpage State Park's highly-esteemed Black Course on Long Island.

The 36-hole event featured 24 teams from around the Northeast. Villanova held seventh place after Saturday's round, shooting a team total of 316 under ideal fall conditions. Sophomore Rob Booth posted a 75 to lead the Cats in the first round. Freshman Rick Wurster, who just earned a spot on the traveling team, fired a 77.

The gusting winds and cold temperatures of Sunday's round caged the Wildcats, as they slipped to 332. However, the whole field struggled in the difficult conditions, allowing Villanova to maintain its position at seventh place. Booth paced the team again with a 78, for a two-day total of 153.

"The course played at least five shots harder on Sunday because of the change in weather," said Senior Mike Merriman.

The long, narrow holes at Bethpage have earned acclaim nationwide. The course's trademark is the dense rough that borders every fairway and every green. Errant shots that bury in the rough at the Black Course are difficult to find and almost impossible to play.

"You've got to hit the ball straight here, because the penalty for missing fairways and greens is exaggerated on this course," said Junior Chris Cox.

On Oct. 29 the team traveled to nearby Huntington Valley Country Club and placed second at the annual Philadelphia Big Five Golf Tournament.

Huntington Valley is one of the most challenging layouts in the Philadelphia area. Its plush, rolling fairways and undulating greens are its most distinguishing features.

The one-day tournament was contested under sunny but cold conditions. Villanova finished 12 strokes behind the victorious Temple Owls and 10 strokes ahead of third-place LaSalle. Jon Kelly captured first place in the individual competition, carding a 75 for the Wildcats.

The Big Five Tournament marked the end of the fall golf season for Villanova. The team will begin a busy spring schedule in early March.

"Overall it's been a disappointing fall, because this team is a lot better than the numbers have indicated.

"It's been a tough season in that the team has had to deal with some big adjustments, like a new coach with a new philosophy and the loss of two starting seniors from last year," said Head Coach Tom Shallow.

"We have the talent, but everyone needs to be more consistent. I'm confident that we'll play better as a team in the spring," said Shallow.

Mahon paces squad

Fellow Irish Olympian and former indoor track world champion Marcus O'Sullivan won 'Nova's first Big East title in 1983.

"Terrance ran a tremendous race, and it was good to see a Villanovan win the Big East for the first time since 1986," said Head Coach Marty Stern.

Finishing one half minute behind Mahon was the equally tremendous performance of Villanova freshman Louie Quintana. Fastest among the first-year men in the race, Quintana covered the course in 25-13 to secure seventh, six seconds ahead of Providence veteran Niall Murphy.

"Louie is an exceptional talent," said Stern. "He has a magnificent future ahead of him, but he's having a pretty good present also.

"Mahon and Quintana are to be congratulated for their outstanding races. The other athletes ran well also, and even though it was our best finish since 1983, I think that we could have finished even higher."

Rounding out the top five for Villanova were sophomore Michael Going (22nd, 25:58), freshman Dave Hartman (30th, 26:08) and senior Tim Pollis. (33rd, 26:14).

In the 27-minute range were 'Nova's sixth through eighth finishers: junior Chris McDermott (60th), freshman Kyle Watson (61st) and junior Jim Meszaros (73rd). Finishing in the 28-minute range were freshman David Seung (83rd) and senior Darren McCormack (91st).

Finishing runnerup to Providence and ahead of V.U. was Georgetown. After the Cats it was Pittsburgh, Connecticut and Boston College, followed by Seton Hall, Syracuse, St. John's and Miami, which was making its first Big East appearance.

Villanova now turns its focus on the Nov. 16 IC4A/NCAA Region 2 Championship at Lehigh University. For the Cats, it will be a return trip to the site of their Oct. 13 victory in the Paul Short Invitational. That meet, also won by Mahon, saw 'Nova defeat a 30-team field which included No. 23 ranked Penn State.

Currently ranked 25th in the latest NCAA poll, the Cats will go up against both Penn State and Georgetown, as well as No. 19 William and Mary and No. 24 Bucknell in their NCAA Regional battle.

"Everyone is healthy, and we are all looking forward to the IC4A meet," said Stern.

Cats run over Tribe, win 35-21

By JOHN OGLE
Staff Reporter

Pat Kennedy rushed for Villanova records of 249 yards and four touchdowns on 21 carries to lead the Wildcats over William and Mary 35-21 Oct. 26.

"This game was our season," said coach Andy Talley. After a tough loss to Delaware, the Wildcats knew they had to get back on the winning track.

The team answered any questions about Villanova deserving a Top-10 ranking in Division 1-AA.

The offensive line and receivers set the tone for the win with great blocking.

Kennedy scored 'Nova's first points on a four-yard touchdown run, offsetting an earlier touchdown by William and Mary. The Wildcat defense shut down quarterback Chris Hakel, a professional prospect, and the Tribe's offense for the entire second quarter.

This gave Kennedy, Jeff Johnson, and Vernon Smith the time to bowl over the William and Mary defense. By the end of the first half, the Wildcats increased the score to 21-7. Kennedy finished off one successful drive with a 14-yard run, while Smith did the same on a five-yard touchdown sprint.

> All turf. I just kept running. Huffin' and puffin'. Glad to see those orange markers.
> Pat Kennedy, senior tailback

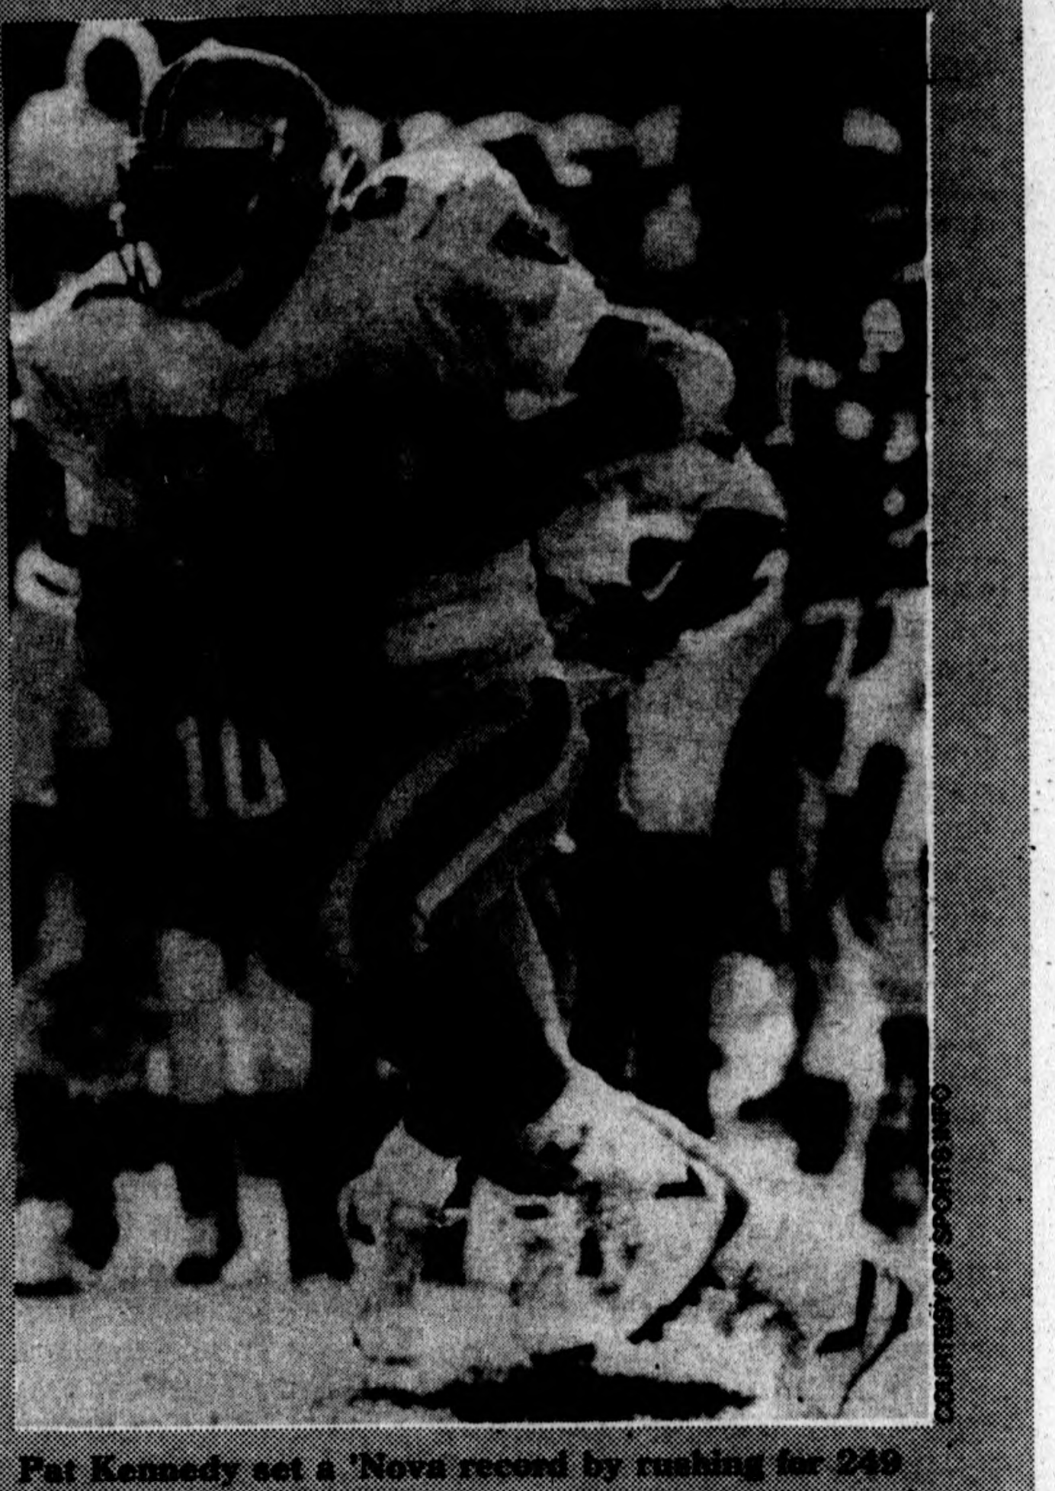
The halftime failed to cool off Kennedy. On the first play of the second half, he received the handoff and broke down the right sideline for a 79-yard touchdown run.

"All turf. I just kept running. Huffin' and puffin'. Glad to see those orange markers," he said.

William and Mary pulled within seven points after Hakel tossed two touchdown passes in the third quarter. However, Kennedy moved the ball again in the fourth quarter. The Wildcats marched down the field and completed the scoring of the day with a 13-yard touchdown run by Kennedy off the option.

Villanova running backs rushed for a total of 405 yards. Smith rushed for 71 yards on 11 carries. Johnson carried 19 times and gained 85 yards. Some other standout Wildcats of the game were Andy Cobaugh, Bill Hoffman, Straughn Lumpkin, and Tom Colombo. Cobaugh picked off a Hakel pass. Hoffman kicked four extra points. Lumpkin caught three passes for 56 yards. Colombo completed 15 of 21 passes for 180 yards.

Tomorrow at 1:00 p.m. the Wildcats play Rhode Island away.



Pat Kennedy set a 'Nova record by rushing for 249 yards and four TD's in a 35-21 win over William and Mary.

Women capture Big East title

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

In one of the more dominating performances in Big East history, the women's track team won the Big East Championships Oct. 26 to maintain its No. 1 national ranking. Despite the presence of No. 2 Providence, No. 6 Georgetown and No. 19 Boston College, 'Nova won the meet by 33 points and placed the individual champion at the 3.1 mile, Van Cortlandt Park in New York City.

> Our conference is the strongest in the nation. It was a big, emotional win for us.
> Head Coach Marty Stern

"Our conference is the strongest in the nation," Head Coach Marty Stern said. "It was a big, emotional win. We had the whole week off from classes and we didn't want to lose our routine. Luckily, our runners stayed focus."

'Nova senior Sonia O'Sullivan, the 1990 Cross Country champion, paced the squad with a time of 17:09.16, 10 seconds ahead of her nearest rival, Providence runner Sinead Delahuanty. The win marked the first time in O'Sullivan's career that she has won a Big East meet. Stern praised the Irish native's running ability and loyalty to Villanova.

"O'Sullivan could have easily graduated and signed a big contract," Stern said of the fifth-year senior. "But it's a tribute to her character that she decided to come back for a fifth season. It shows the type of person the coaches at Villanova recruit. I'm really glad for her."

Along with O'Sullivan's excellent performance, the Cats received strong runs from Nnenna Lynch, Carole Zajac and Cheri Goddard, all of whom qualified for the Olympic Trials this summer. Lynch, the 1990 Big East individual performance, captured third in a time of 17:25.12. Zajac (17.29.20) and Goddard (17:29.45) finished fourth and fifth respectively.

Carol Haux (17:57.77) also gave 'Nova a good individual effort with a ninth-place finish to round out 'Nova scoring.

"Our top runners really set the pace for us and for the whole meet," Stern said. "Carol Haux really gave us a solid effort. She's been running well throughout the year."

Other runners who placed for 'Nova include Chris Gentile (18:06.07, 13th), Michelle Torelli (18:29.37, 18th), Becky Spies (18:43.05, 26th), Irene Ruopoli (18:57.87, 34th) and Emer Molloy (20:16.25, 58th).

While the athletes received honors as the best team in the conference, the coaching staff was awarded the Coaching Staff of the Year Award. The staff, comprised of Stern and first-year assistants Pan Faratis and Judy West.

"Pan and Judy worked very hard," Stern said. "They deserve all of the credit."

The Cats are off until Nov. 16 when they compete in the ECAC Championships and attempt to earn a spot for the NCAA Championships the next week. Despite the No. 1 ranking and Big East Championship, Stern thinks 'Nova can improve and earn its third consecutive NCAA Championship.

"We're just starting to look good," Stern said. "We can't rest on our laurels and we have to stay healthy. We haven't lost in three years and that streak is important to us. All we want to focus on is improvement and winning."

Men take third

By LARRY LANZA

Junior Terrence Mahon proved himself the best of the Big East by capturing the individual title and leading the Villanova men's cross-country team to third place in the Big East Conference Cross Country Championships in New York City on Oct. 26.

For Mahon, the victory marked his first collegiate championship title, and for Villanova, the team finish was its highest since its first place in 1983.

This year's team champion, Providence, came as no surprise. The Friars entered the meet ranked fourth in the nation, a position they currently hold behind Iowa State, Oregan and top-ranked Arkansas.

As many as four members of the Providence squad entered the race as contenders for the individual title, and each were part of a large lead pack headed by Mahon at the two-mile mark of the five-mile Van Cortlandt Park course.

Mahon began his work opening things up by pushing on the uphills and flying down the steep descents. At the final half-mile stretch along Broadway only Georgetown's Steve Holman remained.

Heading to the finish Holman unleashed a strong kick behind Mahon. However, Mahon was there to hold it off, putting down the hammer to cross the line in 24 minutes, 42 seconds, one second ahead of Holman. One hundred meters back, Mark Carroll of Providence held on for third, while teammate Scott Cody took fourth and Pitt's Jason Bodnar finished fifth.

Mahon's win, which followed his fourth place of a year ago, marked the first time since 1986 that a Wildcat has won the Big East Cross-Country title. That year's crown was captured by

Kennedy runs wild as Cats get back on winning track

By CHRIS ABELES
Sports Editor

Going into last Saturday's contest against William and Mary, Coach Andy Talley wanted his team to control the game tempo by keeping the ball on offense as long as possible to neutralize the big play capability of William and Mary quarterback Chris Hakel. What Talley got was a stellar performance from senior running back Pat Kennedy.

Kennedy provided strong, consistent running for the Cats while managing to break the all-time single game rushing record with 249 yards on 21 carries. In addition to breaking the rushing record, Kennedy, ranked fourth in scoring in Division I-AA, tied the single-game touchdown mark with four.

The highlight of this game came on the opening drive of the third quarter when Kennedy ran for a 79-yard touchdown. Kennedy got the ball on the Villanova 21 and carried it off left tackle. Weaving through the line into the secondary, it was a foot race between Kennedy and the William and Mary safeties, a battle that ended in six points for the Wildcats.

But the real indicator of his consistent performance was the fact that he gained 184 yards in the second half, getting stronger as the game progressed. Kennedy, who has enjoyed a successful year, has turned into a powerful asset that will be a potent weapon as the season begins to draw to a close and the hunt for a playoff berth becomes a reality.

In addition to Kennedy's offensive production, the core of 'Nova backs including quarterback Tom Colombo has begun to come alive. Colombo, who broke a few Villanova records of his own in the Delaware matches, has put in quality minutes behind the line for Villanova. In the Delaware game, Colombo set new records for attempts (61) and completions (35) in a single game en route to passing for 389 yards and four touchdowns.

For the Cats to remain a playoff contender, not only must the offense remain efficient, but the defense must keep up its superior performance. The Villanova "D," anchored by lineman Willie Oshodin, linebacker Curtis Eller and safety Kevin Long, must continue to stifle opposing teams' offenses. Current Division I-AA ranking has the 'Nova defense third in total defense, tenth in rushing defense and fifth in pass-efficiency defense.

The strong all-around play exhibited by Villanova this week is very encouraging after the loss to Delaware. But division leader New Hampshire looms ahead for Villanova in coming weeks in a match that will most probably decide the Yankee Conference championship.

Third annual Special Olympics Fall Festival a success

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

The University held the third annual Special Olympics Fall Festival Nov. 1-3 with student and Villanova community support. "Competition among the athletes was the best it ever was," said Special Olympics Director Ron Baglio.

Special Olympics involved 850 athletes, an increase of 200 from last year, and 2,500 student volunteers, the majority of whom were Villanova students, said Media Chairperson Karen Vonder Schmalz. Students from Temple and Pennsylvania State universities, local high schools and corporations in the community also participated in the weekend's events.

Pennsylvania is one of the top three international programs, based on the number of athletes and how many programs are in the state. The Fall Festival held at the University, an entirely student-run program, is ranked the No. 1 competition site in the state, said Lucyna Gorski, director of Student Activities.

The athletes competed in volleyball and soccer competitions on campus, and roller skating, long distance running and equestrian events at local facilities on Nov. 2.

Winners from the final team competitions in soccer and volleyball will proceed to the international summer games in Minneapolis, Minn., which take place every two years, Gorski added.

"Everybody cooperated, and the volunteers helped us out a lot," Baglio said, adding that the amount of time and planning that went into the weekend's events eliminated many of the problems.

Special Olympics still has two weaknesses, according to Gorski. Like last year, the Opening and Closing ceremonies had little attendance by the students. "It would show better support to attend for just an hour," she said.

Most of the athletic escorts are freshmen and sophomores, but many juniors and seniors do not volunteer, Gorski said, referring to the second weakness. "The juniors and seniors find it hard to get back on campus early on Saturday," she added.

"There were just as many or more volunteers this year, but it

'Nova graduate student struggles with bulimia

By MARIA LOVETT

The following is an account of a 24-year-old Villanova graduate student's struggle to overcome bulimia nervosa, a bodily and spiritually destructive eating disorder. Although her story is frightening, the message is full of hope. The hope that her cycle will end, and that others who suffer from similar eating disorders will change their lives before it is too late.

Summer, the warm weather season of sunning, swimming and enjoying the great outdoors is a wonderful time of year. But for this young woman, the summer months meant a stressful succession of dieting.

"Every summer I would go crazy with diets trying to slim down," she said. "I would restrict myself to basically salads and rice."

But this past summer things changed. Because of other health problems, her doctor said she needed to eat a more balanced, nutritious diet.

"When I go out I always feel very, very self-conscious about the way I look. When I was no longer able to diet, I felt tremendous guilt for not doing anything about my appearance," she said.

She over exercised to compensate for eating more food. Walking, running miles everyday to burn away the calories, to try and achieve the body she would be happy with.

Former runner files discrimination suit

By KRISTIN JULASON
News Editor

A former female track team member filed a $1 million lawsuit against the University claiming she was discriminated against because of her race, assaulted and defamed by women's track Head Coach Martin Stern.

Kim Certain, who graduated from the University in 1990, was officially dismissed from the track team in March 1990 for being unprepared for races and not staying in hotel rooms assigned her. No official hearing was held regarding the matter at the time.

Certain claims that Stern spread rumors that she was having a lesbian relationship with her high school track coach Tara Hogan. Hogan and Certain both have denied having a sexual relationship in court testimony.

Stern declined to comment on the case, which could go to trial by the end of the year. In an official statement, Director of University Public Relations Eugene Ruane said Certain's allegations are "totally without foundation in law or in fact. Villanova University and Coach Stern condemn racial discrimination as immoral and completely contrary to the mission of this institution."

I am going to take it as far as it has to go.
Kim Certain

The University "must reserve the right to enforce team rules and maintain team discipline for the good of our athletic teams and all of their members," the statement concluded.

"I feel I was treated unfairly. I think I have the ability to compete with that type of competition and to make it in the Olympics ... I am going to take it as far as it has to go," Certain said in an interview in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

The suit was filed in U.S. District Court in Philadelphia in 1990. Certain revised the suit in September 1991 to include allegations that Stern "poisoned" track team members with the lesbian rumors before she arrived at Villanova in 1987. The assault charges stem from a Nov. 27, 1989 incident in which Certain claims Stern pushed her into a bus seat during an argument.

Langran loses election

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Staff Reporter

Professor Robert Langran proved unsuccessful in his bid for election to the Radnor Township Board of Commissioners on Nov. 5.

The Radnor Township Board of Commissioners is the executive and legislative body of Radnor Township.

Langran lost to Republican incumbent Jim Marks by a margin of 662 votes to 575 votes.

"Langran could not overcome Marks' powerbase in the second precinct," Villanova University's College Democrat President John Sullivan said. Langran did win the first precinct by a margin of 464 votes to Marks' 255 votes. The seventh ward, first precinct, is the district Villanova students voted in.

University students were provided rides to Radnor House where the polling booths were located. Saferides, Campus Ministrty and Student Activities provided the vans for student transportation.

Sullivan noted many election day "irregularities." Among them, "intimidation" of student voters by Marks' supporters. Students were falsely told if they were registered Republican, they must vote strictly by party line and were unable to split their ticket, Sullivan said.

Other unconfirmed reports concerning student intimidation also allegedly took place. Marks' supporters shouted at students "You do not pay taxes, you do not know this township," said Sullivan.

Radnor Township's Democratic Party Chairperson Cliff Wilson said, "It is outrageous that the local Republican Party has such disrespect for people's right to vote. It is not only outrageous, but childish." Wilson hopes students will not be turned off to voting because of this one experience.

"When I went to vote, Langran's name was spelled wrong on the ballot. It took me 10 minutes to find his name," said senior David Criblez.

ATLANTIC CITY, NJ

A record flooding since the 1944 hurricane washed away New Jersey's beaches and demolished boardwalks and roads Oct. 31.

Governor Jim Florio, declared the region a limited disaster area as schools and apartments were evacuated. Along Atlantic County's shoreline, 600 residents were urged to move inland. However, no injuries were reported from the storm.

The tide hit 9 feet, the second highest tide on record, according to the National Weather Service. The highest was 9.3 feet during the 1944 hurricane.

Damages consisted of a cracking sea wall in Bellmawr and the closure of a 100 feet stretch of boardwalk after waves smashed dozens of timber support pillars.

MADRID

At the Middle East peace conference, Israel and its Arab adversaries disagreed on everything except their mutual desire to begin negotiations.

Arabs blamed Israelis, and the Israelis blamed the Arabs for the violence that has wrecked the region for 43 years. However, there were no offers of compromise on the main issue of Arab demands for the return of all Israeli-occupied land. The Palestinians said they would accept a period of self-rule before seeking nationhood. All sides pledged to return to the bargaining table after the opening round of the conference ends.

Israeli Prime Minister Yitzak Shamir and officials representing the Arabs were harsh and accusatory. Each claimed a historical and legal right to the land in dispute key portraying their people as innocent victims of atrocities and their sincere intention to find peaceful solutions despite the other side's intransigence.

Israel is basing strategy on military might, historical claims to statehood and the land it has won in warfare. They want its steadfast friend, the United States virtually to drop out of sight.

VIENNA

The Soviet Union, in a break with its secretive past, said Nov. 5 that it was ready to allow spy planes to fly over its territory to verify military activity.

The proposal, which could take effect in 1993, marked a large step toward an "open skies" treaty that the 22 nations of NATO and the Warsaw Pact have been negotiating since a conference in Canada in 1989.

To date, the Soviet military has guarded its airspace and refused to allow flights over its installations, despite arms-control agreements signed by President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The United States and the Soviet Union have for years used satellites to spy on each other. But surveillance from high-flying jets is more flexible and less expensive and produces more accurate intelligence.

TOKYO

Kiichi Miyazawa was formally elected Japan's prime minister Nov. 5, and he appointed as his foreign minister an outspoken politician who has reportedly offended blacks, Chinese, women and others with his remarks.

The selection of Michio Watanabe, 68, to serve as Japan's face to the world surprised countries on both sides of the Pacific.

Praised for his vigor and decisiveness, Watanabe was also named deputy prime minister. With his previous service as finance minister and in other key ministerial posts, he is considered Miyazawa's chief rival.

Miyazawa won 276 or 492 votes cast in the lower House of Representatives. His election had been assured by his victory in the ruling Liberal Democratic Party's (LDP) election Oct. 27.

In an effort to suppress factional infighting, Miyazawa gave his supporters only two of the 21 cabinet posts he filled Nov. 5. Six of the slots went to the LDP faction supported by former Prime Minister Noboru Takeshita, while the rest were divided among three other party groups.

Homecoming planned to welcome back alumni

By SONNY THOMPSON
Staff Reporter

University alumni from around the nation will attend a variety of events during the 1991 Homecoming Weekend from Nov. 6-10.

There are approximately 66,000 alumni representing each of the 50 states and a number of foreign countries. There are 68 alumni clubs and chapters in the United States and in three foreign countries.

Sponsored by the Alumni Office, Homecoming highlights included the 7th Annual Jumbo Elliott Awards Dinner Nov. 6 at the Overbrook Golf Club.

The Homecoming Golf Outing at the Radnor Valley Country Club was scheduled to tee off at 8 a.m. today with a continental breakfast, followed by a shotgun start at 10 a.m. This evening, the 12th Annual College of Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion Dinner will be held in the Villanovan Room of Connelly Center.

The Association of Commuting Students (ACS) is sponsoring the Homecoming Dance this evening. Tickets are available at the Connelly Center Ticket Office. They are $8 per person and $15 per couple.

Last year, the dance was held in the Day Hop cafeteria in Dougherty Hall and 150 people attended. This year the dance will be in the Jake Nevin Field House, since the ACS is expecting a larger turnout.

Dance music will be played by WXVU (89.1) who will be operating on a prearranged request list. Refreshments and hors d'oeuvres will be served throughout the night.

The dance will include the introduction of the Homecoming Court, and souvenir footballs will be given out. The festivities will last from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Activities on Nov. 9 begin with the Alumni Memorial Mass in Corr Hall Chapel at 9:30 a.m. At 10 a.m. in the duPont Pavilion, the Men's Varsity Basketball Scrimmage gives Wildcat fans a preview of the 1991-92 season. The communication arts department will host a continental breakfast in the St. Mary Hall library. The Nursing Alumni Society will also host a continental breakfast at 10:30 a.m. in the President's Lounge of Connelly Center.

The Wildcat Club Tailgate at 11:30 a.m. on the lawn behind Galberry Hall will spark fans' enthusiasm for the football game in the stadium. Villanova will face the University of New Hampshire, with the kickoff at 1:30 p.m.

Immediately following the game, the Villanova Alumni Club of Philadelphia will host the Alumni Post-Game Reception in the Jake Nevin Field House.

At 6 p.m. in the duPont Pavilion, the Women's Varsity Basketball Team will play an exhibition game against the Canadian National Team.

The weekend wraps up Nov. 10 with masses at St. Thomas of Villanova Church

Senior tailgating returns for game

and

Staff Reporter

Tailgating officially returns for seniors on Nov. 16 with Senior Day in Butler Annex of the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse before the football game versus the University of Connecticut from 12 to 1:30 p.m.

In order to gain admittance, students must have a valid senior student identification card matching the University's listing of seniors to be checked at the door, a driver's license and a football ticket.

Student Government attempted all semester to implement senior tailgating but for financial reasons only one day could be organized, O'Rourke said.

With tailgates already planned for Parent's Weekend and Homecoming, the final home football game was really the only available date, he added.

"At the first Villanova home game this semester there were pre-game festivities but if we publicized them they would have been squashed," said O'Rourke.

This event was planned not just as a tailgate but to bolster support and attendance for the football program, he added.

The demise of last year's equivalent, Football Friday, was attributed to behavior at the event such as food throwing and "boisterous behavior," said O'Rourke.

Three years ago the University decided that senior tailgating would no longer be permitted since the University's liability was too large, said Lucyna J. Gorski, director of Student Activities. With 75 percent of the students under 21, the University could not realistically control underage drinking, she added.

"The past history of tailgating showed a lack of responsibility of the students who were unable to control garbage disposal and excess drinking. Tailgating became a 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. party that the school was responsible for," said Gorski.

Last year, legislation was not created for the preservation and organization of senior tailgating. With only Student Government and the Alumni Association sponsoring the event, Senior Day was harder to plan than last year while trying to avoid the same pitfalls, O'Rourke said.

The kegs, food and music will be financed by the Alumni Association.

Faith legislation endorsed by student government

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
Assistant New Editor

President of Student Government Mark O'Rourke wrote a letter to President George Bush and the U.S. Congress to demand support to re-initiate faith representation legislation. The legislation would maintain a balanced proportion of military chaplains in the U.S. armed forces.

The letter was also sent to all Pennsylvania colleges and universities. It urged the support of other colleges and universities across America to "assure full protection of our First Amendment right to FREE EXERCISE under the United States Constitution."

"As I understand the situation, people are being denied access to religious services," O'Rourke said.

The Rev. Joe Turner, a member of the Society of the Divine Savior, is the main proponent to re-initiate the legislation. Turner maintains that chaplains are treated like second-class citizens and that medicine has now become more important than religion.

"They always held hearings for doctors, but they never let God have his day in court," he said.

The bill, titled "Military Chaplains Faith Balance Act" (House Bill H.R. 1875), was originally introduced in the House of Representatives in April 1985 by U.S. Rep. Robert Borski of Pennsylvania. The bill urged the armed forces to maintain a balance of chaplains from different faiths.

Borski failed to "follow through with a floor vote in Congress and render a full account to all members of the Congress and its 210 co-sponsors," O'Rourke said. The bill was referred to another committee six hours before the scheduled vote.

Mark O'Rourke, president of Student Government

"It's a bill that should have never lost passage because it had the support of both speakers and 210 cosponsors," said Turner in Nov. 1987 issue of the Villanovan.

"If this was an attempt on Borski's behalf to sweep this legislation under the rug, it wasn't too courageous of him," said O'Rourke.

Turner is urging student governments across the nation to write a letter of endorsement of the legislation to the president of the United States and members of Congress.

"Former Student Government President John Lewis supported this bill so we looked into it, and we also support the principle behind it," said O'Rourke.

In a letter to the University, Turner wrote that "our boys overseas and in the foxholes deserve protective assurance for free exercise of their right to practice their beliefs. They do not merit this interference from a few uncaring members of Congress."

Peace and Justice lecture focuses on feminism

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Staff Reporter

Dr. Ann Ferguson gave a lecture entitled "Big Daddy's New World Order, Patriarchy and the U.S. Foreign Policy" Oct. 31 in the Radnor Room of Connelly Center. Ferguson presented a feminist critique of President George Bush's war policy in the Middle East during the Persian Gulf War. The Center for Peace and Justice Education sponsored the lecture.

Ferguson offered some theories as to why Bush and his advisors made certain decisions concerning the crisis in the Gulf. She also analyzed the "patriarchal reasoning" behind the U.S. government.

Ferguson, in questioning the Bush administration's foreign policy, discussed the way that the action taken by the United States against Iraq continued to escalate and progress throughout the conflict in the Middle East.

The war itself has claimed 150,000 civilian casualties, and many more people are suffering due to the dessimation of their cities and homes, she said.

If the United States had decided to utilize its nuclear capabilities and destroyed Iraq, it would only have led to the strengthening of Iraq as another aggressive Middle Eastern country with which to contend, said Ferguson.

Ferguson asserted that it was the patriarchal society of the United States that influenced Bush and his advisors to act in the manner they did. She said Bush's "militaristic" attitude could be attributed to his desire to be the most powerful world leader on the globe. Another possible explanation for Bush's attitude concerning the Persian Gulf War was his desire to overcome the "rich-boy wimp" image he had taken on during his campaign and had retained once in office, she said.

Ferguson said she wanted to stress the idea of broadening the scope of what most people deem "feminist issues" and to explore various topics from a feminist point of view.

Piper elected head of Alumni Concerns

By CHRISTINE FINGERHUT
Staff Reporter

George Piper was elected head of alumni concerns at the Alumni Reunion in June 1991, and his term will run until June of 1992.

Piper, who graduated from the University in 1967 with a business degree, is currently president of G.W. Piper, a brokerage firm in Ridgewood, NY.

Piper said his job is to "talk up Villanova" and to keep up enthusiasm among the alumni. A university becomes what people perceive it to be, and the key to Villanova's success is enthusiasm and involvement from both students and alumni, Piper said.

Piper also said that strict prohibition of student tailgating is not the answer. He said he remembers a time when fraternities and sororities tailgated every Saturday on the lawn behind Sheehan Hall.

Throughout the year he travels and meets with people at such alumni functions as the Trustee's Dinner in Philadelphia, and the Mendel Associates Dinner held tonight in the Connelly Center to present awards to graduates of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences. He also meets with the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, to voice alumni concerns about various issues on campus.

The University belongs to the students and alumni, and not the administration, Piper said. If students wish to see certain changes, it is their responsibility to voice such opinions to the administration, he added.

Entrepreneur turns class project to profit

By College Press Service

Take the Monet and run.

That is what one of Geoff Walsh's marketing campaigns for his VP ArtWatches reads above a black-and-white picture of the artist wearing one of Walsh's creative timepieces.

"These strikingly beautiful wristwatches have highly distinctive faces, four-color reproductions of the world's most admired paintings, from the greatest impressionists to the most fabulous moderns, from Monet and Van Gogh to Picasso and Dali."

Not bad for a guy who started his business on the campus of the University of Pennsylvania selling watches with faces that donned Dan Quayle in Mickey Mouse ears.

"It started when my roommate said, 'What did Mickey Mouse get for his 60th birthday?' " Walsh says. The answer, of course, was a Dan Quayle watch.

Walsh and his roommate sold between 600 and 700 of the watches and his career as an entrepreneur was well on its way.

Now, at the age of 24, the 1989 Wharton School graduate is the chairman, president and chief executive officer of Walsh Enterprises, a $4 million-a-year business in Larchmont, N.Y.

The success of the Quayle watches showed Walsh that the watch market was open for business. After noticing reproductions of Claude Monet and other artists on students' walls, Walsh came up with the idea for ArtWatches.

That idea turned into a business plan for ArtWatches that served as Walsh's undergraduate thesis and blossomed into his current international venture.

Connections with a Philadelphia company resulted in connections with a large Hong Kong company that Walsh says "took me under its wing." The Hong Kong company now assembles the ArtWatches, with its components from Japan and its watchbands from Philadelphia.

With connections in place, the only barricade Walsh faced was obtaining licensing agreements to reproduce the famous works. He spent about six months researching copyright laws and negotiating with museums.

> It started when my roommate said, 'What did Mickey Mouse get for his 60th birthday?' The answer was, of course, a Dan Quayle watch.
> Geoff Walsh

Walsh started with eight art works. Now ArtWatches offers more than 50 different faces, with about 30 different watchband styles. Walsh has sold more than 100,000 of the watches in the United States, Germany, France and Japan.

Although Walsh admits that early in his college career, "I did suffer from the entrepreneurial dream a bit," he said some of the difficulties he encountered early in his watch-making career showed him that success takes "constant push and perseverance."

Walsh started selling his watches in 1989 with the help of college students on campuses and says he worried a bit when Bulova Corp. began selling its Classic Moments watches that also reproduced famous paintings on watch faces.

Walsh won the battle in the marketplace since ArtWatches sold for a significantly lower price of $75 compared with $300.

Since the early struggles, the ArtWatches have come a long way. Now, catalogs like Spiegel, the QVC Home Shopping Network, department stores like Macy's and J.C. Penney's sell the ArtWatches, which cost between $40 and $75.

In an industry that has grown from $240 million almost solely out of Hong Kong in the mid-1980s to an international watch market estimated at $4 billion last year, Walsh sees a lot of room to grow.

The popular Swatch watches account for about $70 million alone and Walsh says he thinks the ArtWatch "has the potential to be the next Swatch."

"It's a Swatch for grownups," he adds.

Now, Walsh is working on developing other watch lines and is starting to dabble in real estate. He also is trying to save the elephants in Africa.

His new Safari Series featuring paintings done by Betsey Burhans Fowler, wife of "Wild Kingdom's" Jim Fowler, sends 10 percent of its profits to the Fowler Wildlife Foundation.

Walsh says that current college students who want to follow his success should know two things. "Good legal support is very important," he says. And, "relationships are very important. Networking is very important ... People sometimes don't take into account that the people you go to school with will be out in society holding positions a few years from now."

UCIS computer fair to be held

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

The latest models of personal computers, printers and software will be on display at the sixth annual Computer Fair sponsored by University Computing Information Service (UCIS) on Nov. 13 in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center from 10 a.m.-6 p.m.

Representatives from various companies will demonstrate their products. IBM, Zenith Data Systems, Apple Computer and local computer stores in Ardmore and Bryn Mawr will display the different types of lap top computer systems, laser printers and popular software.

The companies will hold seminars to explain how to use the latest technology in particular computers, said Dan McGee, manager academic services of UCIS. "Apple has some new models that they announced last week," which will be presented at the fair, he added.

The 1991 Fair will include "break-out sessions" on the various aspects of computing, which will last for half an hour each, according to a UCIS notice. UCIS and Falvey Library will conduct the sessions, along with representatives from Microsoft, Apple, IBM and WordPerfect.

UCIS will operate an informational booth to answer questions concerning what kinds of computers are used at the University and how to order computer equipment. Villanova students, faculty and staff can expect discounts up to 40 percent on selected computer equipment and software. UCIS also will explain all computer terminology at the fair.

Students who purchase computers for school usually have no criteria to help them decide which computers to get, McGee said. The fair will show students the advantages of buying computer equipment through the school, he added.

"Computers can be purchased at the [University] bookstore, but they don't carry a full line," said McGee, adding that the local computer dealers will offer inexpensive computers that the bookstore does not market.

A new program of interest to the students is Cliff's Notes. The material is placed on software, which "lets the students find information a little easier," said McGee.

Money for nothing: how to get scholarships

By College Press Service

What do Tylenol, McDonald's, government, foundations, TV talk show host Montel Williams and universities all have in common?

They all give money to students for college — some in the form of scholarships, some in grants and some in loans.

John Bear's "Finding Money for College," a 157-page guide to scholarships, grants and loans, documents sources of financial aid for students.

According to Bear, more than $6.5 billion in financial assistance for students goes unclaimed every year.

Part of the reason is that some specialized scholarships cannot find people to meet their criterion. Some examples of the more difficult and unusual include scholarships for convicted prostitutes in Seattle. The fund was established by a judge in the city.

Scholarships are available at Harvard for people named Baxendale, Borden, Pennoyer or Murphy.

There are sports scholarships in frisbee at the State University of New York at Purchase and racketball at Memphis State University.

The Charles and Anna Elenberg Foundation grants are awarded to needy Jewish orphans.

Most scholarships and grants are not quite so specific. Usually, the awards specify a geographic area of the country, a field of study or a level in school to narrow the field of qualified applicants.

Often, financial need is not a qualifying factor.

Experts agree that much of the reason money goes unclaimed is because people are not aware that it exists.

Another reason is that, "generally, people do not apply for aid because they feel that they're not eligible," said Joyce Smith, associate executive director of the National Association of College Admission Counselors.

She and others suggest that anyone interested in applying for aid should follow some basic procedures.

First, students should find out what scholarships, grants and loans are available from their schools and their states. This information is available at university financial aid offices.

Second, students can research national scholarships and grants through books like Bear's or through some inexpensive publications like the American Legion's annual "Need A Lift?" which costs $1.

Other sources of money are corporations and non-profit organizations that are worthy of investigation.

McNeil Consumer Products Co. offers the Tylenol Scholarship Program, which gives a total of $600,000 to students in all 50 states and the District of Columbia. "The Tylenol Scholarship Program represents our ongoing, long-term commitment to provide educational opportunities and financial assistance to those students who demonstrate outstanding leadership skills," McNeil President James T. Lenehan said.

TV talk show host Montel Williams has formed his own non-profit organization in Denver called REACH for the American Dream. It distributes college scholarships to students who cannot afford school.

Chick-Fil-A Inc., a growing fast-food chain now in 31 states; offers $1,000 scholarships to employees. McDonald's and many other fast-food restaurants have similar scholarship plans for workers.

According to a 1983 article in the Chronicle of Higher Education, "About $7 billion in tuition assistance is available each year under benefit plans provided by employers for their workers, but less than $400 million is actually used." Many believe even more money is available today.

Finally, in terms of finding the specialized scholarships available, "there are a lot of companies cropping up that will look for these specialized awards," Smith says.

Students grieve deaths

By College Press Service

College life, most would agree, is hardly the smoothest of life's transitions. According to a Kansas State University (KSU) professor, it is not the happiest for many, either.

David Balk says he was surprised to find that many college students are grieving the deaths of family members and friends.

When Balk surveyed Kansas State University (KSU) students about their lifestyles in 1990, he discovered that 28 percent of the students reported that a family member had died in the previous 12 months.

The professor of human development and family studies was so astonished by his findings that he ran a second survey, this time, with a different set of students. The results were the same. Further, 45 percent of those surveyed reported losing a family member in the previous 24 months.

Both of Balk's surveys also reflected that 44 percent of the students said that a friend had died in the previous 12 months, and 66 percent reported the death of a friend in the previous 24 months.

The professor believes the unspoken reality of grief is a hidden problem on most U.S. campuses. "I would be very surprised to find that KSU had a much higher, or lower incidence than other campuses," he said.

Balk, who received a grant to conduct a two-year study through the National Institute of Mental Health, said he is interested in finding out how college students cope with the death of a family member or friend, and how the grieving process can be made easier for them.

Many students do not believe they have an outlet to sort through their feelings, he said.

The professor says that people in this society are often impatient with the grieving process.

may not have seemed like it because of the influx of 200 athletes," Vonder Schmalz said.

More students who signed up at the volunteer training meeting came to the Athlete Escort Registration Saturday morning.

Since Special Olympics is a non-profit organization, companies donated food and prizes for the weekend activities. Honey Baked Ham, Roy Rogers and Frito Lay donated lunch to the 850 athletes, their families and the volunteers.

Fund raising Chairperson Diana Conte and a five-person management team raised $1,813.31 for the weekend's events. Local companies and organizations also donated money and products.

"We got a lot of local [media] coverage, including Eagle 106, which broadcast live" from Olympic Town set up in the Quad, Baglio said.

Special Olympics is a worldwide sports recreation program sponsored by the Joseph P. Kennedy Jr. Foundation, involving over 350,000 volunteers.

Faith bill

Turner also reported in his letter that there are some "3,488 chaplains supplied to the Armed Forces by some 103 different denominations. Since the war in Vietnam ended in 1975, some 2,000 or more chaplains of all faiths were fired without the authority or approval of their churches."

Some universities, colleges and organizations wrote letters of endorsement for this legislation in 1989 including Temple, Rutgers, LaSalle, Scranton, Juniata, the Philadelphia County Council, the 82nd Airborne Division Association and B'nai B'rith International.

"How could our government expect our young 18-year olds to register for the draft when there is a blatant denial of their first Amendment right to have a chaplain of their choice to minister to their spiritual needs," wrote Bob Walker, president of Student Government at LaSalle University, in a letter to Congress in nuary, 1989.

Teaching adults to read is a different task than teaching youngsters. Learning conjures up painful memories of feeling inferior. And no one wants to be reminded of how much he or she doesn't know.

That's precisely why the Gateway program was developed. It gives adults the confidence they need to tackle adult reading programs—an important first step.

With positive reinforcement as its main objective, Gateway focuses on how much students know, so they can develop the confidence many of them never had before.

That's where you come in. We need volunteers to donate their time to help adults better their lives through reading. And you don't have to be a teacher to help.

After a short training session, you and a student will set up your own flexible twenty-hour schedule designed to prepare him or her for a regular reading program. And afterwards, you will feel better knowing that you have helped someone to overcome a huge barrier in his or her life.

Welcome back alumni

Well, here it is, the one time during the school year when the age-old tradition of tailgating can be observed. Yes, it's Homecoming weekend.

Over 60,000 alumni representing all 50 states and several foreign countries are expected to return to their alma mater for a fun-filled weekend. Those members of the class of 1991 living in the area are perhaps the most anxious.

However, Homecoming is more than just tailgates. Few people realize the number of events slated for the weekend. This "weekend" began two days ago with the 7th Annual Jumbo Elliott Awards Dinner at the Overbrook Golf Club.

Today was a busy day for alumni. This morning those returning could be seen on the links participating in the Homecoming golf outing. Tonight, the 12th Annual College of Arts and Sciences Alumni Medallion Dinner will be held. The dinner will include a performance by the Villanova Glee Club.

Tomorrow, the heart of the celebration, has events scheduled for the entire day. At 9:30 a.m., the Alumni Memorial Mass will be held in Corr Hall Chapel.

One-half hour later, the men's basketball team will hold a team scrimmage to give anxious fans a preview of the upcoming season.

The Wildcat Club-sponsored tailgate, the event which most students recognize first, will begin at 11:30 a.m. on the lawn behind Galberry Hall. The Wildcats will square off against the University of New Hampshire at 1:30 p.m. in a must-win situation. Immediately following the game, the Villanova Alumni Club of Philadelphia will hold an alumni post-game reception in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse.

Another Wildcat team will show off its talents, as the women's basketball team faces the Canadian National team at 6 p.m.

Homecoming at Villanova is truly a celebration of the school and its alumni. Far more than just tailgating, the weekend is filled with exciting events.

AIDS education

The 1991 Fall Women's Lecture Series should be praised for its lecture and group discussion on AIDS and interpersonal relationships, Nov. 6. Without such opportunities to discourse on the pertinent matters of sexually transmitted diseases (STDs) and interpersonal relationships, Villanova could be contributing to an ignorance that could be hazardous to a student population's health.

The University has conceded that it "must make the best possible information available, so that students as individuals can make the best decision for themselves." That means that discussions on AIDS must include the full realm of the topic area.

AIDS lectures and discussions should cover the stance of the Catholic institution on pre-marital sexual activity, and also include the high rate of HIV [humane immuno deficiency virus] infections among the nation's intravenous drug users, gays and heterosexuals.

Although abstinence is the best defense against AIDS, other safeguards as a barrier to the disease exist.

Lectures should expose the possible effects that the above practices could have on the future physical, mental and spiritual lives of heterosexual and homosexual students.

The Women's Lecture Series is a step in the right direction, but only a handful of students attended. No matter how many discussions on AIDS are held, if students don't attend they won't learn to protect themselves.

Now that the recommitment to AIDS education has begun, the students have a chance to better defend themselves from, as one student referred to it — the high risk factor of ignorance.

Students and faculty thanked

To the Editor:

I would like to thank the people who supported me in my efforts to work with personnel here at Villanova University.

For those who are not familiar with this meeting, it was a discussion on secretarial concerns.

I want to thank the secretaries for giving up their lunch hour and dealing with concerns that we have here in our work community. I was especially pleased to see a few chairpersons and one priest, since we need a better support system than what we have. It was most gratifying. The most thrilling part of this meeting was the showing of almost 100 secretaries who are genuinely concerned with the working environment that has been created here.

Thank you once again. There will be another meeting next month. Look for notices.

To the Editor:

Finally. After six weeks someone responds to my Sept. 20 commentary on history and Afrocentrism.

I was beginning to think that the term "Vanillanova" was true and that apathy on campus was rampant. Although I stick by my commentary, it is very encouraging to see two people exercise their rights of freedom of the press, speech and the right to be wrong. It is just a shame it took so long to wake up people.

To the Editor:

The big splash given to Dr. Eli Goldblatt on Dr. Seuss was very interesting to me, as was his comment, "It is important that we recognize that children's literature is a vital part of our literature."

That is my gospel. I have taught children's literature on campus for years and have continuously built up the collection of books in the Library Science department. I promote good literature for children. In my course, we cover literature for children from the fifth to the twentieth century, giving a rich interpretation of authors and illustrators, many of whom I know personally, as well as, every kind of writing and literature for children through the centuries. I draw 70 to 80 students each semester.

Dr. Goldblatt's remark was especially interesting since in the summer of 1990 he came to my office to ask me to tell him what I teach in children's literature, and I would appreciate it if Dr. Goldblatt would return my outlines and bibliography for my course.

On behalf of Villanovans For Life, I am writing to thank the Villanova community for its participation in Respect Life Week 1991. This week was a success and helped to spread the pro-life message throughout the Villanova community. Also, as a result of the rose sale at the Grotto, $300 was raised for Birthright, a crisis pregnancy center that reaches out to women facing an unplanned pregnancy.

Thank you again for your support and participation in the Respect Life Week 1991 events.

DPMA offers advantage

To the Editor

When looking for that first job after graduation, it helps to have a competitive advantage. Membership in the Data Processing Management Association (DPMA) can give you the advantage you need.

The DPMA is a nationally recognized organization of computer and information specialists. The membership of the DPMA is made up of professionals from many varied backgrounds, including all aspects of business, computer science and academia.

If you are going to be dealing with information technology of any type, then membership in the DPMA can benefit you, now and in the future. You will learn about all aspects of computer applications in research and business.

The Villanova Chapter of the DPMA is affiliated with the Montgomery County Chapter of the DPMA. As a student member you will benefit from professional contacts, current information and reduced membership fees.

An immediate benefit is the opportunity to associate with professionals from various fields.

DPMA is well known for its pursuit of state-of-the-art knowledge. As a student member, an individual has the opportunity to attend monthly meetings, where expert presentations and interaction among members keeps one up-to-date on the latest development in the profession. There is also an opportunity to attend Region and Association conferences.

Most professional organizations have fairly hefty membership fees. As a student member the fee is only $15 which is $100 less than the regular parent chapter membership fee. Student members are nevertheless able to receive most of the benefits of regular membership. Additionally, monthly dinner meetings are offered to students at a reduced rate.

Membership in the DPMA may not guarantee a job after graduation, but it will show prospective employers that you possess a sense of motivation, involvement and dedication, as well as the knowledge needed to succeed.

Accuracy of last week's commentaries questioned

By SEAN SANDERSON

The specter of politically correct thought is alive and well on Villanova's campus. As any student knows, the current academic fad of politically correct thought has been filtering into university classrooms and core curriculums across the nation. Many professors in many top-notch schools are substituting their academic curricula for a politicized agenda with leftist overtones.

However, I never expected to encounter such a blatant expression of politically correct thought as I read in Miss Carter's letter in last week's Villanovan.

Our heterogenous society is one of America's greatest strengths and recognition of a shared political identity supercedes the various origins of its citizenry.

I was not only shocked, but also dismayed at the misguided thought that Carter displayed in her commentary on what it means to be an American. Certainly Carter has a right to her opinion. She is an American. Exercising her right to free speech, as guaranteed by the Constitution, is a trademark of an American.

Yet in her commentary, she seems to be intent on denying her political identity as a citizen of the United States by rejecting the traditional heritage of America: the multiplicity of all men's ethnic backgrounds under a common political equality. Supporting racial identities as qualities that are more important than the greatest political identity, being an American, is divisive and threatening to the very fabric of our social and political institutions. As Martin Luther King, Jr. said, "We should not be judged on the color of our skins, but on the content of our character."

In and of itself, racial/ethnic identity is not a harmful phenomena. It is when pride and racial identity start dividing the populace into sects and groups (in the name of social freedom) that social unrest, hatred and bigotry grow. As Michael Novak wrote in a recent issue of Forbes, "Diversity of viewpoint is extremely valuable in a democracy — but not when its components are kept hermetically sealed from one another in isolated enclaves." Politically correct thought does not enhance social equality among various ethnic groups by separating and categorizing people, nor does it advance the cause of social equality by arguing that only through aggressive racial identification can people truly realize the American experience.

Our heterogenous society is one of America's greatest strengths and recognition of a shared political identity supercedes the various origins of its citizenry. People should most definitely not abandon their roots, but rather than focusing on their differences, they should concentrate on their commonalities in the effort of creating a greater society.

I believe that if Carter is truly dedicated to achieving social harmony and complete political equality, she should refer to the principles of natural law which were laid down by the Founders in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution (which ascribe to equality among men regardless of individual heritage) rather than to the divisive and misguided notions of politically correct thought which seem to fuel her understanding of what it means to be an American.

Tunisa Anderson's article last week is an example of how complete falsehoods can be couched in logical-sounding arguments. She used these arguments to insult the history of Europe and claim that Western civilization created nothing on its own, but "stole" from Africa.

If nuclear technology were given to African states, do you actually think they would refrain from building weapons, just because they are "the sun people?"

She begins by mentioning skulls found in Tanzania, which some researchers have interpreted to mean that Egyptian culture borrowed heavily from the culture of Black Africa. Even assuming that this is so, Western culture takes little from Egypt outside of geometry and astronomy, which are documented as having come from the Middle East (Sumeria and Babylon) and India.

Her next insult, "The history of Europe is a well-known, shameful one," made it difficult for me to believe that what I was reading was written by an American. Is she aware that almost everything she uses, from her toothbrush to the word processor she probably typed her article on, was invented in either Europe or the United States?

While it is true that Europeans have fought more destructive wars than any other civilization, this is for technological reasons only. Tribes in Asia, Africa and even the Americas have slaughtered and enslaved each other to the best of their ability since the beginning of time. They just did not have effective machinery to use. Anderson claims that, "It was not the Africans who colonized the world nor was it the Africans [who invented and built nuclear weapons.]" May I be so daring as to suggest that since it was a European who invented the astrolabe, the compass and star charts, it would have been very difficult for an African to even find Europe, much less colonize it? Similarly, just because Europeans discovered fission, doesn't mean Africans would not have liked to. If nuclear technology were given to African states, do you actually think they would refrain from building weapons, just because they are "the sun people?"

Eurocentric standards have not been "placed on every other group of people" as Anderson would claim. No one can be forced to adopt a method of thinking. Rather, every other group of people has been exposed to European methods, and most have chosen to adopt them in preference to their own. The Japanese, of course, are the extreme example. They manage to keep a sense of their own culture, while in many ways outperforming the Europeans at their own game.

Anderson's claim that "European growth only took shape after it began to venture into other parts of the world" is the most illogical. The combination of an adventurous spirit and technical knowledge is what allowed Europeans to travel far and wide, gathering bits of knowledge from the people they met.

As a third-generation descendant of Europeans, I take pride in my heritage and call on others to do the same. "The truth needs no defense," said Anderson. Look at something around you, chances are, it is uniquely European/American. Yes, Miss Anderson, in the end, the truth will prevail.

COMMENTARY

Should doctors become the angels of mercy?

By ELLEN GOODMAN

The way they talk of "slippery slopes" here, you would think it was winter in Colorado, not autumn in Washington. But on Nov. 5, the citizens of this state are going to decide whether to cut a new path on an ethical mountainside. And it has many voters checking their footing.

What is at stake is Initiative 119 or, as it is labeled, Death With Dignity. It would allow doctors, for the first time anywhere, to legally assist in the suicide of patients who have been diagnosed with less than six months of live and have written requests to die.

To some this elicits the humane image of Dr. Timothy Quill, the family doctor who prescribed pills to a dying patient and wrote about it eloquently in the New England Journal of Medicine. To others it conjures up Dr. Jack Kevorkian, the maverick pathologist who provided two more women with the means to die just last week. If, as Kevorkian says, he wants to provoke discussion on "the right of people to decide their own destinies," that discussion is well underway here.

There is little mystery about how the "right to die" got on the public agenda or on the ballot. As Ralph Mero, Unitarian minister and director of the northwest Hemlock Society describes it, "We've reached a critical mass. There are enough families who have been touched by the prolonged, painful process of dying. It's resulted in the sense that, damn it, this is not right."

Many Americans have come to see doctors as the handmaidens of a merciless modern technology. It is fear — fear of dying, not fear of death — that has made "Final Exit," the "how-to-die" book, a national best-seller. It is this fearful search for an escape route that has led others here to ask that doctors provide the terminally ill a humane escort.

The ethical case for doctor-assisted-suicide or aid-in-dying rests on a belief in both autonomy and mercy, that people should be allowed to make their own decisions, and that we should expect mercy from others, especially doctors. These two ideas are merged in one of the television ads in the words of a cancer patient, "I have terminal cancer. At the end, I want the choice to accept treatment, to refuse treatment, to die on my own terms."

The ethical case for doctor-assisted-suicide or aid-in-dying rests on a belief in both autonomy and mercy, that people should be allowed to make their own decisions, and that we should expect mercy from others, especially doctors.

But the case against aid-in-dying is also presented simply. What the pro-119 groups calls aid-in-dying, the antis call "killing." In their ads it isn't a patient who speaks in the name of humanity but a nurse. "I am a hospice nurse. Initiative 119 would let doctors kill my patients."

Doctors themselves are about evenly divided on 119, a plan which after all gives the patients the power of medical decision-making. Many who oppose 119 believe that doctors can't serve as ethical double-agents, one day for life, the next for death. Indeed, at an evening meeting of doctors here, an oncologist said with obvious dismay, "We are about to create a public policy that says physicians are to be the agents of death."

Medical ethicists are likely to make more subtle arguments. Some, like Tom McCormick at the University of Washington question the American passion to control everything, even death. They worry that the individual right to die will undercut the community responsibility to care for the sick.

But essentially, the opponents of 119 base their case on forecasts of icy conditions ahead, and slopes that are all slippery. What about Jack Kevorkian, they ask? Not one of his patients was "terminal," nor would his action be legal under 119. Would, should mercy killing extend to them? What about Alzheimer's patients who present such tragic hard cases? Can voluntary euthanasia slip into involuntary? Will we put the dying under social pressure to choose an easy — for us — death?

I see those patches of trouble too. But it seems to me that we are already in motion. When we put people on respiratory machines we step onto one potentially slippery slope, and when we take them off, we step onto another.

We often find our footing shaky. When we allow people to get off kidney dialysis treatment, when doctors use morphine to cut pain but also cut life, when family physicians provide pills in private and aid death in secret, when patients learn how to do "it" themselves, it is slippery all around.

If the people of Washington vote for 119 it will be because sometime they might want aid-in-dying for themselves. As one doctor who treats AIDS patients said at the meeting of his peers, "I intend to vote for 119, not because I'm a doctor but because I'm a human being and I want to know that option exists for me." So do I.

But this is not some reckless headlong schuss down a blind trail. Those who favor this initiative, with its controls, are testing territory just a few yards ahead of where we are now. They are snowplowing, moving with the speed of beginners, and keeping a sense of balance.

LETTERS

Zoning addressed

To the Editor:

I have represented Villanova University for the last several years in regards to the University's zoning and land development applications to Radnor Township. The purpose of this letter is to set the record straight on several statements made in the Villanovan's Commentary and Editorials of Sept. 27.

The Board of Commissioners of Radnor Township unanimously approved a rezoning of 49 acres of land on West Campus to institutional use which permits the construction of dormitories on that site. This act rezoned West Campus from a residentially zoned area, which would only permit residential single-family dwellings on a minimum of one acre of land, to institutional use. This decision was affirmed by the Township's Zoning Hearing Board, but an appeal was taken by an adjacent neighbor. The Court of Common Pleas of Delaware County affirmed the Township's decision, and again the neighbor has appealed to the Commonwealth Court of Pennsylvania where the matter is awaiting a decision.

In addition to the West Campus project, in 1987 the Township approved the further development of dormitories on South Campus, which have now been completed. This past year the Township's Zoning Hearing Board granted the University several variances to construct the Liberal Arts Center. Included was a variance from the current three-story height requirement for any building in the Township, which permitted the University to construct a four-story building.

Hopefully, these comments will clear the record as to Radnor Township's position on the construction of additional dormitory facilities on campus.

DON'T TREAD ON ME

Protect Rivers' Ecologies

By ERIC CHEUNG
Staff Reporter

You hear about it constantly; the world is collapsing around us and it is up to our generation to fix it. Whether it be conserving energy or fuel; whether it is concern for the ozone layer, the rainforest, or endangered species; whatever form it takes, environmentalism is gripping at the hearts of everyone's conscience. We all agree that the future of the world looks rather dim, but what we cannot agree on is the root cause of it all. For the past decade environmentalists have been fighting the battle one issue at a time. Sometimes they concentrate on fighting pollution, other times their concerns are for aluminum recycling, but one thing is clear, it has become increasingly important to look at the ecology as a whole. Many of the issues are unrelated in our minds, and we have been waging a haphazard battle to save the planet even as we spread our resources thin tackling too many things. Only when we have a center of gravity for all ecological problems can we attempt to find solutions. This is where watershed ecology comes into play.

Watershed ecology, simply put, is the belief that the world is made up of watersheds. A watershed is the land that drains into a source of water. When rain falls and hits the earth much of the excess water that does not permeate the soil heads downslope until it finally reaches a body of water. This body of water itself, usually a stream, merges with other bodies to form rivers and eventually head out to the ocean.

> A watershed is the land that drains into a source of water. When rain falls and hits the earth, much of the excess water that does not permeate the soil heads downslope until it finally reaches a body of water.

The watershed can be the land that drains into the river as a whole, often called a basin, or the land that drains into one of the tributaries. In fact, a watershed can be a small circle of land that surrounds a mudpuddle. With this definition in mind, it is fairly easy to see why the world can be thought of as many different watersheds.

Watershed Importance

What is the importance of the watershed? All pollution ends up draining into the river that supports the watershed. Anything that happens to the land will find its way into the river for it will naturally head in that direction. If we can evaluate the health of the river then we can evaluate the health of the watershed as a whole. Most ecological problems one calls to mind can be looked at from the standpoint of a nearby river. And when you consider the world to be comprised of many watersheds, one can apply this realization to other ecological problems in other parts of the world. There is no need to skip around from issue to issue if everyone would take the time to examine their own watersheds. This is the solution we need.

An example of this would involve examining water to find between sewage and chemical pollutants which indicate human abuse of nature. Using the concept of watershed you would look at the land around the river to find the source. We could also find the results, the destruction of life.

A Delaware River Keeper, Cynthia Potent, keeps watch over the entire Delaware Basin. Her task is an enormous undertaking staffed by volunteers. She utilizes the watershed theory to its fullest by constantly keeping tabs on the Delaware River and its tributaries. However, she cannot do the work alone. Her greatest wish is to have colleges, schools and communities working together to safeguard their own rivers. Her belief involves people starting to care for their watersheds; it is then that they will truly begin to understand exactly what the problems of the world are. Rather than having a minority frantically embracing problem after problem and trying to effect a change about each one, we should all be doing our part in looking after the welfare of our own individual communities.

HELP!
I'M TRASHED!

Make the Effort

By SCOTT FRIESE
Staff Reporter

Over the past two years the Villanova community has taken monumental steps in an effort to put forth a sound, environmentally-conscious image. From universal compliance with Act 101 — the state's mandatory recycling law, to the efforts of countless students and faculty members, the environmental education of Villanova continues. We cannot claim victory however, for there is still much to do, requiring effort from all involved with the University.

In the fall of 1989, Villanova's Environmental Group (V.E.G.) began a weekly voluntary collection of glass, aluminum and newspaper. Student participation increased throughout the year, and by the fall of 1990, the state had passed Act 101.

Pursuant to the requirements of this "recycling bill," the Villanova community began mandatory recycling of alumnium cans and corrugated cardboard as well as computer and white office paper. Due to the efforts of Superintendent of Grounds Kevin O'Donnell and the cooperation of the University community, Villanova's recycling program has grown to include newspaper, used motor oil, and the composting of the leaves, grass clippings and other biodegradable items that the maintenance department collects.

VEG is hard at work coordinating a regular glass recycling program in University buildings. This program will implement the already existing glass collection receptacles behind Stanford Hall. In addition, a pilot program of plastic recycling will begin this fall, aiming to recycle waste generated by the custodial departments.

The controversial subject on campus involves the use of polystyrene products. Environmentally-concerned students say they are angered by this practice. The administration doubts that students will perform their responsibilities necessary to justify the massive outlay of monies for commencing such a recycling program. Still others advocate a permanent and complete switch to china for all meals.

VEG has been generating dialogue between food services, maintenance and administrators about the university's options, but the group needs the help and support of the student body at large. Environmental responsibility is not a passive activity; it takes energy, time and devotion to make responsible programs work. Responsible programs require numbers. We need student input and support for the ideas and efforts to succeed.

Do you want to meet cool and unusual people? Do you want your Tuesday evenings to be more productive and politically correct? Do you want to fully grasp environmental issues and understand the roots of their problems?

Paper or Plastic?

1) When shopping use paper only or recycled plastic bags.
2) If you are just picking up a few things, don't use a bag.
3) Reuse bags. You will not look stupid, just environmentally awake.
4) Be wary of biodegradable plastics, their actual "biodegradability" is still in question.
5) Best of all — bring your own!

Speaker Espouses Animal Rights

By ERIC CHEUNG
Staff Reporter

On October 30, a professor from Essex University joined students in Tolentine Hall to discuss views about the animal rights movement. It was an eye-opening lecture explaining man's exploitation of his fellow creatures.

He said that man uses animals as pets, for exhibitions at a zoo, as meat, clothing and even sport. "Unfortunately, we do not see this as wrong. The abuse of animals occurs primarily because we do not think of them as living sentient beings but rather as things or beasts here for man's sole benefit."

Since the 19th century the world has seen the greatest concern for animals. It started with certain churches decreeing that we should be "nice" to our furry friends. We should not be physically abusing animals. The next movement came with animal welfare that looks after the animals's well-being. However, it was 1970 when the animal rights movement finally gained recognition. The animal activists believe that no harm must ever be done to animals. This includes lab testing and killing for food or sport, he said.

Humans kill approximately six to nine billion animals a year. One hundred million of these are used for testing. We cannot continue to abuse the other lifeforms of this planet simply because we feel that we are the superior species. If we continue to exhibit this destructive behavior, it will only result in our downfall, he added.

"Don't Tread On Me" is a newly created section of The Villanovan. It hopes to bring the concerns for the safety of the planet to the University Community. We hope to achieve awareness and action through education. If you would like to participate in the production of this page, please leave your name and number as well as your interest on a recycled piece of paper on the V.E.G. board in the Center for Peace and Justice Eduction.

Millions victimized by eating disorders

Today, six million people in the United States suffer from eating disorders. Ninety to 95 percent of these people are women, said Karen Cavallo, admission coordinator at the Renfrew Center, a residential treatment center in Philadelphia for woman with eating disorders.

The pathological fear of gaining weight leads to malnutrition and excessive weight loss, in anorexia nervosa cases. Bulimia nervosa is characterized by a cycle of binges and purges. Anorexia and bulimia are related eating disorders which typically begin in adolescence, according the the American Psychiatric Association (APA), in Washington, D.C.

"About 20 percent of the women on this campus" are affected by anorexia or bulimia, Dr. Helene Feinberg-Walker, PhD of the University Counseling Center said. "And it is a very secretive problem." At least one in five college women suffer from an eating disorder.

There are more bulimic or binge-purge cases at Villanova. "Anorexic cases are much less frequent, but much more quickly dangerous," Walker said.

Eating disorders have always been considered an illness that predominantly affects white upper class women. "In fact, anorexia nervosa, coined the 'Golden Girl's Disease' specifically refers to pursuit of a White, Western European ideal of beauty run smuck," Maria Root, professor at the University of Washington, said in a 1990 Sex Roles article.

"Eating disorders are rising in women of color, particularly black women in the past year," said Cavallo. Women of color are becoming steadily more vulnerable to white standards of beauty.

"Changes in hairstyles, dress, body-size, make-up, and even cosmetic surgery may be attempts to be accepted and keep the door open to opportunity," Root said. "The double oppression that women of color encounter — sexism and racism — can, for some individuals, provide the basis for the desperateness that underlines resorting to unhealthy eating and exercise practices."

Cavallo also suggests working class women may not have access to health care, so their eating disorder is not being recognized.

Although eating disorders are most common in females; it is coming increasingly more evident in males, particularly athletes, said Walker.

"Between the ages of 13 and 30, about one in 400 men suffer from an eating disorder. There are a higher amount of incidents in wrestling, long distance running, modeling and dancing," Cavallo said.

The body image encouraged for men is often big, bulky and muscular. Society values a small slender frame in women. "One explanation for the lower incidence of anorexia nervosa in men, is that they are not subjected to the same cultural pressures for thinness," Telicia Romeo said in her book Understanding Anorexia Nervosa.

"Eating disorders can develop in both women and men, teenagers and adults, gays, lesbians, and heterosexuals, people of color and Whites, and is not limited to a middle to upper class phenomenon," Root said.

> The double oppression that women of color encounter – sexism and racism – can, for some individuals, provide the basis for the desperateness that underlines resorting to unhealthy eating and exercise practices.
> Maria Root, professor at the University of Washington

"Anorexics and bulimics are often perfectionists, with high expectations of their self and others," Walker said. They look like the most together people — terrific looking, academically excellent, socially active. Persons with eating disorders often assume leadership positions; roles where they are helping others rather than being helped.

"We are talking about really independent minded people. They feel they can handle the problem themselves, but once the disorder begins it is difficult to stop without help," Walker said.

Horror stories of anorexic and bulimic cases describe the destructive damage to the body. But often overlooked is the destruction of the person's mentality and spirit, "Women involved in this troubled behavior often abandon their careers and their studies as the preoccupation with food takes over more and more of each of their lives," Kim Chernin said in her book The Hungry Self.

Bulimics "become unable to leave the place where they are able to binge and purge secretly," Cavallo said. Anorexics isolate themselves to avoid social interaction. "Their body image distortion is such that they feel they shouldn't be out of the house."

Family relations may become chaotic or distanced. The woman may simply cut off ties with the outside world to keep her disorder secret. Severed relationships tear the person's spirit apart, as the illness does the body.

Bulimia: endless binge – purge cycle

The bulimic. She may fast all day, only to later, alone, binge on a box of cookies, a bag of chips, a few donuts ... Distressed and disgusted by her behavior; she retreats to the bathroom to purge — an attempt to rid her body of all its impurities. She is spun into a perpetuated cycle of terror. A course that may be impossible to change alone.

Bulimia is the second largest problem facing college students in America. Twenty to 30 percent of all college women use binge-vomiting as a means to control weight, according to a publication by the Villanova Counseling Center.

Bulimia nervosa often begins in adolescence or young adulthood. It may begin slow, with binge-purge episodes increasing over time. Bulimia is chronic. It can go on for years without detection, and the damage to the body can be fatal.

Most people with bulimia nervosa are within normal weight or only slightly over, at the start of the disorder, according to the American Psychiatric Association (APA).

Bulimia involves recurrent episodes of binge eating, where the individual rapidly intakes a large quantity of food in a discreet time period. Such binges may be planned and usually involve high caloric, easily digestible food.

The bulimic feels out of control during such binges, and may only be stopped by abdominal discomfort, sleep, an outside interruption or self-induced vomiting. Following a binge, a bulimic may be extremely self-critical and depressed. Laxatives or diuretics and strict dieting or fasting, are other means bulimic's use to control their weight.

> Bulimia is chronic. It can go on for years without detection, and the damage to the body can be fatal.

On average, bulimics have two binge eating episodes per week for at least three months, according to the APA. However, bulimic episodes may differ between individuals.

Many bulimics often combine their eating disorder with vigorous exercise in order to prevent weight gain. They are constantly pre-occupied with food and body.

In anorexia weight loss can drop to severe levels, whereas bulimics often experience dramatic weight fluctuations, according to the APA.

Continual episodes of bulimia cause multiple damages to the body. Constipation, malnutrition, dehydration and abdominal pains are complications easily recognized in early stages of the problem. Repeated vomiting can lead to dental erosion or, although less common, esophageal scarring. More severe complications can be gastric intestinal problems, kidney damage and failure. If not corrected, electrolyte imbalances can lead to cardiac arrest.

There are links found between bulimic episodes and alcoholism. Seventy percent of college age bulimics also struggle with alcoholism, according to Karen Cavallo of the Renfrew Center. Some women will restrict their diet and use alcohol or caffeine to keep them going. Other women treat alcohol as a food. They restrict and restrict, then binge on alcohol as they would with food.

Incidents of bulimic behavior are often found in anorexic cases. Likewise, some bulimics experience periods of severe restricting.

Recovery possible with help

The greatest challenge that faces anorexics and bulimics is in overcoming their fears to bring about a change in their lives. But it is difficult, and perhaps impossible for individuals with eating disorders to win this battle alone.

- If you know someone who suffers from an eating disorder let them know your concerns and encourage to seek help. Stress the urgency of the matter; the sooner treatment is initiated, the greater the chance of overcoming the eating disorder.
- Educate yourself on the disorder and do not give into their denial. "It is often difficult for these people to accept help. They are givers, not takers. They do so much for others that it is hard to let friends help," said Dr. Helene Feinberg-Walker, PhD of the Villanova Counseling Center.
- Be a responsive friend. Eating disorders express indirect cries for help with an underlying problem. "You may start something and see no immediate response. But you could be planting seeds that will flower later. The person has to be ready, you can not force them to stop it," said Walker.
- Accentuate the positive. Stress that a person's value is not determined by body shape.
- Encourage their other interests and hobbies.
- Take one day at a time. A relationship with a person suffering from an eating disorder can be frustrating. Be patient, and take time out for yourself. People can and do recover from eating disorders, but it takes time and help. The Counseling Center in Corr Hall offers eating disorder groups during the semester; and counselors are there every day for assistance.

Words of the Wise

The woman I am

Beneath the woman
I seem to be

— Glen Allen, The Woman I Am

"Every time she passed a mirror she was unable to resist the temptation of looking at the one thing that interested her most in the world — herself. And every time she was a bit disappointed — almost as if the girl facing her was some other person."

Anorexia nervosa: case of chronic starvation

The anorexia. A five foot, eight inch tall twenty-one year old woman stands in front of a mirror. She sees a warped, distorted reflection of an immense body. She feels overblown. She grips at fat that isn't there. What she doesn't see is an emaciated frame, weighing only 100 pounds. What she doesn't feel is her body failing to function. How much longer can she survive before she dies of starvation?

Anorexia nervosa is the refusal to maintain a body weight over a normal amount for the age and height of the individual. Ninety-five percent of anorexics are women, according to the American Psychiatric Association (APA). Because of the secrecy of the disorder however, it is difficult to find precise statistics on the amount of people who suffer from this illness. Studies vary from one in 100 women between age 12 and 18, to one in 800.

An intense fear of gaining weight or becoming fat, even though they are underweight, causes the anorexic to view their body in a distorted image. An anorexic's weight may drop to less than 85 percent of her expected body weight, according to the APA.

The illness may begin as normal dieting behavior. But at an unidentifiable point, the anorexic's thinking becomes irrational. She sees herself not only as overweight, but feels corpulent and grotesque, according to Telicia Romeo in her book, Understanding Anorexia Nervosa.

Pre-occupation or even an obsession with food marks the anorexic's daily routine. She may enjoy cutting out recipes and cooking elaborate meals for others; but does not eat herself. Anorexics frequently weigh themselves and exercise excessively, according to a publication by the Villanova Counseling Center.

When she does eat, the anorexic may display perculiar eating patterns; such as taking frequent trips to the oven, carefully cutting up her food in a ritualistic manner or crumbling and concealing food, according to the APA.

Anorexics usually avoid starches, sweets and high caloric food, according to the Counseling Center. It is not unusual for them to eat the same food day after day.

Anorexia starves the body. Many complications arise in all stages of the disorder. Initially anorexics may experience hair loss, brittle nails, and dry, pale skin, according to the Counseling Center. They will be easily fatigued and suffer from frequent headaches. Women will notice an irregular menstrual cycle; and eventually excessive weight loss will lead to amenorrhea (absence of menstruation).

> An anorexic's weight may drop to less than 85 percent of her expected body weight.

Hypothermia, hypertension and metabolic changes are other signs of anorexia. Interference with normal metabolic behavior can eventually lead to weight gain with normal levels of food intake, according to Karen Carvallo of the Renfrew Center in Philadelphia.

Anorexia in adolescense may delay psychosexual development and in adults may decrease interest in sexual activity, according to the association. Heart action, for either pathological or physiological can slow down.

Most anorexics deny or minimize the severity of their illness. Anorexia commonly consists of a single episode or series of episodes. With intervention the person is returned safety to normal body weight, according to ARA. If treatment does not intervene anorexic episodes can be unremitting until hospitalization or even death.

Anorexia nervosa is often coupled with bulimic episodes, eating binges followed by vomiting or using laxatives in hope to rid the body of food.

What underlying factors cause eating disorders?

What causes so many young women to starve themselves, perhaps literally to death? What compels a person to ingest immense portions of food and purge? To swallow 60 laxatives in a day? Frightening as the symptoms are, many anorexics and bulimics are aware of their eating problem, yet unable to end the disruptive cycle.

The fundamentals of eating disorders are deeper than being overly conscious about body and appearance, although that contributes to the problem. "It is an emotional syndrome often involving an inability to express feelings, especially negative feelings," said Dr. Helene Feinberg-Walker, PhD of the Villanova Counseling Center.

"Several underlying issues surface [in regards to eating disorders]: sexual abuse, physical abuse, significant loss, addictions . . . ," said Karen Cavallo of the Renfrew Center.

Such issues may be seen within family patterns. "These women are carrying the family pain. With bulimics they are throwing up the pain, and in anorexics they are distancing themselves from the pain," Cavallo added.

If communication is weak or the family dynamics are not direct in expressing feelings, problems may develop for a long time before they emerge. If an eating disorder develops as a response to such problems, it is more difficult to face it and stop denying it, Walker said.

Often college students with eating disorders play a strong role in the family, perhaps as a communicator or mediator. Anorexic and bulimic behavior may develop as a response to family separation.

"Anorexia reflects difficulty in the transition from childhood to adulthood or adolescence. Bulimia also reflects a young woman's [reaction to] leaving young adulthood and entering real adulthood," Cavallo said.

This crucial time period can be terrifying for a woman. She is thrust into an environment where female development and female freedom has never truly been granted. One way to stop the frightening development is to retreat from social activities into an eating disorder, "a troubled relationship to food frequently hides a serious problem with female identity in an age when women are invited by social circumstance and individual inclination to extend the traditional idea of what it means to be a woman," Kim Chernin said in her book, The Hungry Self.

For women to free themselves from eating constraints, new emphasis must be placed on the woman's image of self-confidence and respect, "Women must gain self-esteem from other ways than the body image," Cavallo said.

Biological, psychological and sociological factors may contribute to a person's eating disorder, according to Cavallo. Depression and stressful life situations are often associated with the disorders.

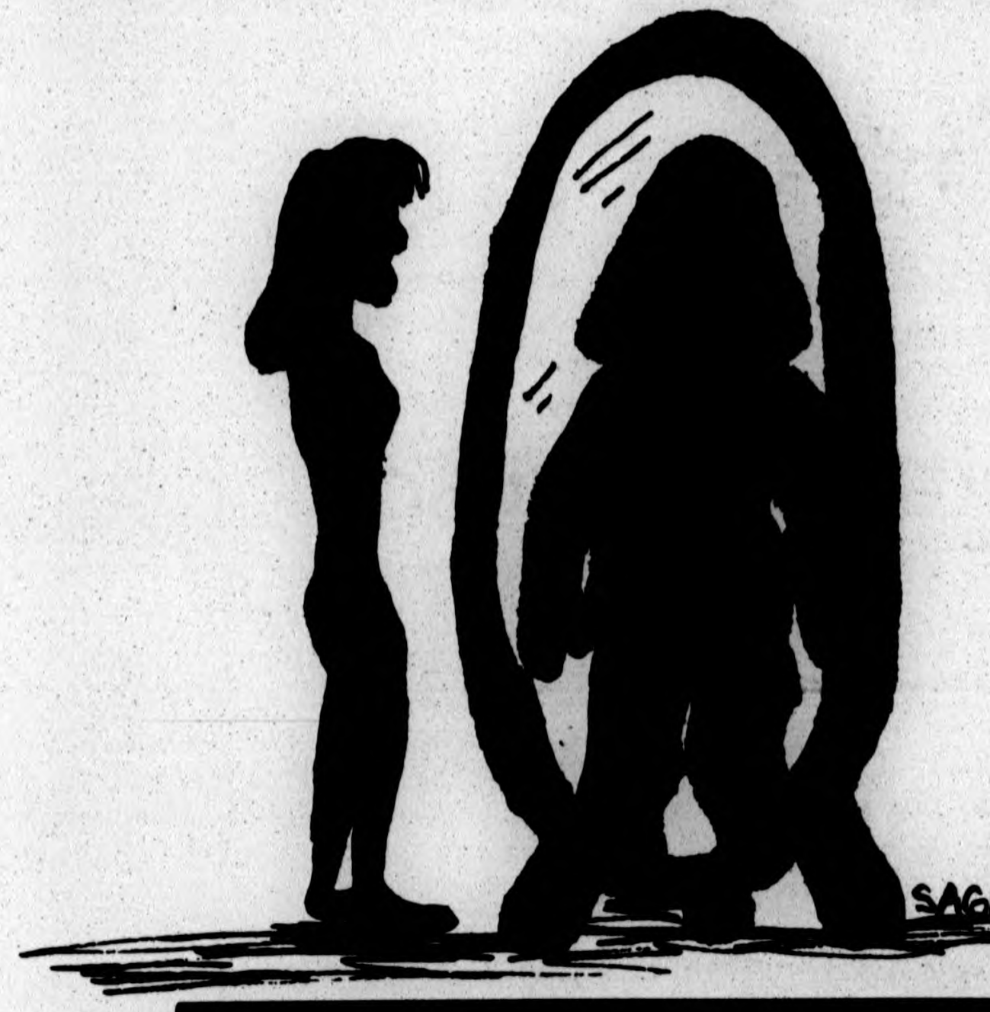
Study's suggest that eating disorders are common in perfectionist individuals. Anorexics are often "model children" who are unable to cope with pressures either from home or pressures placed from themselves.

Perfectionism causes certain individuals who are mildly overweight or even at or under their normal weight to negatively critique their body.

"It comes as a shock to realize that at the very moment where we might expect to step forward and harvest the fruit of a profound struggle for female liberation, many of the most gifted among us fall prey to a severe suffering that gradually consumes more and more of our life energy and finally causes what in many cases is a severe breakdown," said Chernin. As women move into the male job environment, competitiveness is heightened and often the body is over evaluated.

Women rather than men tend to use diet to "increase self-esteem, obtain privileges, increase credibility in the workforce, and contend with conflicting gender-role proscriptions," Maria Root, professor at the University of Washington said in a 1990 Sex Roles article.

Eating disorders affects more than the body. They "interfere with social, spiritual, intellectual — with all aspects of her life," Cavallo said.



The Health section on eating disorders is a special addition compiled and written by Maria Lovett, former Features Editor for the Villanovan and a senior communication arts major.

The pronoun "she" is occasionally used in reference to both men and women, because the majority of eating disorder victims are women. Such a reference does not intend to exclude men from the suffering associated with eating disorders.

Battle continues for bulimic

suppose to look like a stick," she said.

Feeling helpless with no control over her diet anymore, she started purging. Her health, her self-esteem and her social interactions with friends began to deteriorate.

"It is such a vicious cycle," she said. After eating pizza at a friend's house, I'd come home feeling guilty and purge. Next time I just wouldn't go."

Unlike the imagined typical bulimic behavior of binging on high caloric food, she would purge after feeling full from just a regular meal.

"At the worse point I was purging about two times a week," she said. She started feeling dizzy frequently. "It would prevent me from going out, or just give me an excuse not to."

"Ever since I hit puberty I've felt pressured by the attractiveness issue," she said. "You want to appeal to the opposite sex, and my self-esteem is usually based on how attractive I feel."

At 5'8" and 150 pounds, she would hardly be considered overweight. "Friends tell me I look fine, and ask why I am doing this to myself. But I feel there is such a complete difference in my appearance from when I was restrictively dieting and weighed 140 pounds.

"Sometimes I feel like it is hopeless. I was stressed out the other evening. I had an exam and a paper the next day, when a commercial came on television. This woman, I guess she was suppose to look sexy, well her ribs were showing. It was horrible, and I got really angry. So, I made myself a big bowl of microwave popcorn and ate it all."

The value of thinness repeatedly reminded her of what a beautiful woman's body was meant to be. As a senior in high school she enrolled in a modeling class.

"At the end of class, they told me that they would accept me into the agency if I got my weight down to 125 pounds."

At college she could not escape comments about weight. Constant references to women gaining the "freshman 15" and t-shirts that read "No Fat Chicks" made her feel the most important issue for women was to be thin. "I don't remember anything that said, 'No Fat Men,' " she said.

Health complications scared her into seeking help. "I developed ulcers in my throat, from the vomiting."

It never occurred to anyone to ask if she was bulimic. No one expected it. "I'm the responsible child," she said. She often assumes a leadership role in the family. The pressure blindly lead her right into the vicious cycle, "When I wasn't being 'responsible' and controlling my appetite, I'd feel guilty and purge."

Although her friends knew of her eating disorder, her family is still unaware of the problem. Explaining the complexity of her problem is difficult.

"It is beyond my control. I can't just shut it off. There are pressures from all sides, you can't just stop the cycle alone."

Therapy and group counseling have helped her make the first steps to escape the shattering cycle.

"I'm not as hopeless about this," she said. "But I am scared that it is going to be something — the hatred of my body image — which will stay with me for the rest of my life."

Awareness of the detrimental effects of eating disorders will hopefully encourage others to re-evaluate body shape and size. "Even if I become comfortable with my body myself, social pressures make it seem unacceptable. Maybe I could someday get to the point where that doesn't affect my self-esteem, I don't know."

Society sets standards for the 'perfect woman's body'

Despite the underlying issues contributing to eating disorders, women are choosing to use their bodies as an outward expression of internal pain. Society not only makes this possible, but encourages such damaging behavior.

In the nineteenth century the look for women was delicate, frail and fragile. Painful corsets of the Victorian period even caused internal damage to some women, according to Telicia Romeo in her book Understanding Anorexia Nervosa.

Today, magazines are filled with 8 x 10 glossies of voluptuous women with thin thighs, large breast, no stomach and perfect hips. Television programs and commercials reinforce the requirements for a beautiful woman, a loved woman, a successful woman, to be only surface deep.

The weight of the Miss America winner has been steadily thinner since 1970, according to David Garner in a 1980 Psychological Reports article.

Marilyn Monroe, pleasantly plump was once in, but today slim and strong are what is selling. Even Madonna, Ms. Monroe's contemporary look-a-like, has left soft and round for a sleek, ultra firm physique. It seems there is only one acceptable body. So how do the millions of women who don't have this body naturally, or the time and finances to create one, feel about this pre-requisite to success?

Few recipes can be found in the pages of Popular Mechanics or Sports Illustrated, which are predominantly read by men . . .

Society has established a belief that women have to be beautiful and men have to be rich, said Dr. Helene Feinberg-Walker, PhD of the Villanova Counseling Center. In college where initial stages of meeting people are crucial, looks play an important role. They may not necessarily remain a primary focus throughout the relationship, but they are defiantly an advantage.

"Society pressures women to maintain a slender body weight or even an unhealthy body weight. Emphasis is in needing physical beauty to be complete," Karen Cavallo of the Renfrew Center said.

One reason there may not be as many men with eating disorders is our environment has encouraged other areas to channel their problems.

"Women do not have as many avenues to release and change their problems, so they turn inwards," Cavallo said. "Men turn to conduct disorders, addictions, whereas women turn to the body." It is easy for women, since society has already directed the attention there.

Conduct disorders and addictions are considered unacceptable behavior. However "society accepts dieting and restricting as normal and necessary," Cavallo said.

Our environment not only encourages eating disorders in women, but disguises them, "Social values placed on slimness for women and the cultural emphasis on physical fitness and dieting serve to camouflage the anorectic's pathological behavior," Romeo said.

Loss of weight for the woman becomes a great accomplishment. The anorexic is proud of conquering hunger pains and restricting diet to minimal amounts, Romeo said.

The media creates the superficial premise that dieting is a woman's only tool to success, "fairy tales, television, movies, and advertising lead women to believe that thinness is beauty, success, power, and acceptance," Maria Root said in her 1990 Sex Roles article.

Women are in a constant battle between the stimulation to eat and the pressure to be thin. They are the media's target audience for diets, food campaigns and cooking. Few recipes can be found in the pages of Popular Mechanics or Sports Illustrated, which are predominantly read by men; but leaf through any women's magazine, and you are inundated with diets and exercises on one page and extra gooey chocolate brownie recipes on the next.

Meanwhile, the diet industry is booming. Pills, fad diets and magical milkshakes scream out that the way to a happy life is through a thin body. But when children 9, 10 and 11 years old are dieting, as indicated in a 1989 Capitol magazine article , the pressure for the perfect physique is too intense.

All diets are not necessarily bad. For health reasons, people do not want to be obese. "It can, at times be okay to lose a pound a week, if you are overweight, but no more. A diet should be useful in terms of health," Cavallo said. "You start to get into restricting your body when you drink a shake instead of eating a meal."

Society needs to stop evaluating a person's sense of beauty, happiness and fulfillment by their body size. The crucifixion of overweight people must end.

Women with eating disorders have an upward battle to combat centuries of bodily oppression placed on them. Awareness of the damaging effects this oppression is having on millions of individuals each day, perhaps could end the destructive cycle.

Villanova Volunteers spend Fall Break with the poor & needy

Dungannon, Virginia

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Assistant Features Editor

We were told that Dungannon is a very small town in the southwestern corner of Virginia. We read articles and books concerning poverty in Appalachia and discussed the issues that might face us there. We worried about our ability to accomplish the projects assigned to us. We anticipated, we planned and we worried. But upon arriving at the Dungannon Development Commission (DDC), the generosity and hospitality of the community made all of our concerns seem trivial. Before we even began our work we learned our most important lesson. The individuals we were helping are real people, not subjects of a book, not statistics in an article. In opening their lives and homes to us they enabled us to become a part of their community. In the end, we received as much from the people of Dungannon as we had ever hoped to give them.

The group of Villanova Volunteers who travelled to Virginia during Fall Break consisted of 20 Villanovans led by Steve and Anne Johnson, who are Villanova alumni themselves. Despite initial concerns about construction skills and the apparent lack of building experience we finally realized that the DDC valued us more for our ability to tackle any job than for our finesse in carrying out the tasks. We were lucky enough to benefit from members of our group who knew what they were doing. By the end of the week we were all surprised by what we had accomplished.

During our stay in Dungannon we became experts at patching and sealing roofs, scraping and painting houses and hanging insulation, sheetrock and fire board. Some of the larger projects we focused on included completely refurbishing several floors and two porches and constructing a handicap access ramp for a Dungannon home.

As the week progressed, our group found itself developing not only skills to help others, but also a deep sense of friendship among ourselves. Excursions to Carter Fold, a bluegrass music hall, and hikes throughout Virginia's countryside fostered special bonds that were strengthened through our cooperation at the work sites.

The end of the week found us tired and sore, but pride in our accomplishments could not be dulled by exhaustion. We left Dungannon looking forwrd to the comforts of our "real" lives, but knowing that our work with the DDC was not something we could easily leave behind us. Because this was the first experience both the DCC and most of the volunteers had had with service efforts, no one really knew what to expect. Realizing that we had made a difference in the lives of people we had come to care about was the greatest reward for which we could have hoped.

Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Ten years ago, the Franciscans came to Philadelphia to start a parish for the people in the Kensington area. When they arrived they realized that people had needs that were much more basic than a community parish. They opened a soup kitchen which originally fed 20 to 30 people a day. Now the St. Francis Inn feeds 250-450 people a day and has expanded to include a thrift shop, a women's center and a men's shelter. It is staffed by Franciscan friars, sisters and permanent lay volunteers who make a commitment to work at the Inn for a year.

Six students and one staff member from Villanova went to work at the Inn over Fall Break. We helped out with many of the various tasks: picking up donations, preparing and serving food and working at the thrift shop. In doing these tasks, we were able to gain a slightly better understanding of the many issues surrounding poverty and homelessness in the inner city.

One thing we came to realize most from the week was that the "poor and homeless" that we all hear so much about are actual people, with real feelings and personalities. They became individuals rather than statistics. They also became neighbors. The problem of poverty is not just in Mexico and Ethiopia and far away places. It is very close to home.

Each of these things is what made the trip so worthwhile. We learned about poverty and hunger, but we also learned about people and attitudes. We saw newborn children and elderly women and everything in between. We helped when we could, and we made new friends.

> "Living in Kensington and working at the Inn for a week was a truly wonderful learning experience. St. Francis Inn not only feeds many of the urban poor, it also loves them. In witnessing the care and patience of the people who run the Inn, we witnessed the gospel message in action."

Orland, Maine

By CINDY EGGERT
Special to the Villanovan

This past Fall Break, 16 Villanova students together with the Rev. Frank Chambers, O.S.A., decided to spend their vacation volunteering in Orland, Maine. The students aided members of Homeworkers Organized for More Employment (H.O.M.E.), and will never forget the people they met and the experiences they had. Although in the beginning our group barely knew each other, by the end of the week we had become so attached that it was difficult to go our separate ways when we returned to Villanova.

Our adventure began Saturday, Oct. 19 at 6 a.m. when we left the Main Lot in crammed vans and cars. The trip took 11 hours, and we arrived in Orland by sunset. We were immediately impressed with the H.O.M.E. community as we toured the pottery and weaving buildings as well as the woodshop and saw mill.

After buying groceries for the week, we began to settle in. Our sleeping bags were spread on the floor of a classroom in the community school. It seemed like a huge slumber party, but on the first evening everyone was too exhausted and excited to stay up all night.

On Sunday, Chambers presided over Mass in a little church on the H.O.M.E. property. After Mass, we were introduced to Lucy Pollin, the founder and leader of H.O.M.E. who also received an honorary degree from Villanova University last May. We spent the rest of the day touring Acadia National Park, relaxing and taking pictures at every turn.

The hard work began Monday when we chose specific jobs for each day from erecting a barn on Pollin's farm to painting the museum and splitting logs. In the evenings we would take walks, read or just sit together and talk. One night we even ate dinner at Pollin's house.

By spending the week at H.O.M.E., we learned that much may still be accomplished without the use of modern tools, powerful machinery or even electricity. Rather than driving large trucks, the H.O.M.E. community uses a team of horses to pull logs out of the forest. The community is self-sufficient and creative.

Pollin said she sees no need to trade the 1910 saw mill for a newer model since it would cause a loss of jobs and a loss of necessary teamwork.

We found that the members of the H.O.M.E. community come from diverse backgrounds, and this contributes to the lack of discrimination there. The community works together as a strong team with their foundation in God. Many students regretted leaving H.O.M.E. and hope to return someday.

Steve Ruppert volunteered to work at St. Benedict's, a thrift shop that serves the community.

> "The basic thing I learned is that life is so simple. It's all about people and how they live, work and interact with one another. Others can be really appreciative of what you do for them if an honest and sincere effort is made. Most importantly, making a difference to one person is still making a big difference. You don't have to change the world."

Villanova's Gospel Ensemble is open to anyone with the spirit to sing.

Ensemble exhibits talent

By GRETCHEN FISHER
Staff Reporter

Celebrating its second season as one of Villanova's newest student groups, the Gospel Ensemble has had a busy calendar since the start of the school year. The program as it is now began in the spring of 1990 under the direction of Walter Blocker. It has been steadily growing in consistency and reputation under the new direction this year of Alice Parker, who also works with the Archdiocese of Philadelphia.

In September, the Ensemble sang at St. Paul's in Philadelphia, an event at which Archbishop Bevilacqua was present. The positive response from this has elevated the Ensemble in both the school and local church community. In October, the Ensemble performed at the Student Musical Review during Parents' Weekend. Usually the group sponsors two or three concerts a year on campus and fills the remainder of the year with trips to other colleges and performances at local churches.

On Dec. 7, the Ensemble will perform again with the other campus musical groups at the Christmas concert. In February, the Ensemble will celebrate Black History Month by performing at the Philadelphia College of Textiles and Science Feb. 1 and here at Villanova for African-American Achievement night Feb. 23. The Ensemble will hold its annual spring concert at the end of the year, an event which other colleges are invited to attend.

The executive board of the Ensemble has worked hard to add more events to this year's schedule. A fund-raising raffle for the choir will be held next week, and tentatively a tour in Maryland is planned for the spring semester.

President Catherine McKnight is pleased with the success of the group and how far it has come. "Since we started up again, there have been a lot of complications, most prior to 1990, such as establishing ourselves on campus. But we've been received well. This year's board will be our last and final attempt in making a solid program. We've been building a name and reputation on campus, and we've grown together as a choir," McKnight said.

"This is not a competition or only for those who can sing solo," said McKnight. "Our concern is to praise and magnify the Lord in song." She stressed the group is there for anyone who wishes to join and describes it as a support group for those involved. Students interested in hearing the Gospel Ensemble perform, should come out and show their support

"Jeopardy!" challenges collegians on the road

By KAREN CAMPBELL
Assistant Features Editor
and
MAUREEN MEYER
Staff Reporter

So you really think you're a trivia buff? Do you know who the wizard of Menlo Park is? Can you remember the first names of the Darling children in the story of Peter Pan? And in the category of Table Settings (for $800 please, Alex), what is the name of the knife that is laid across the top of a dinner plate? If these questions presented no problem for you, maybe you should have been in Washington, D.C. with us last weekend to audition for the "Jeopardy!" College Championship.

On Nov. 1-3, those with a knack for insignificant facts gathered in the WJLA TV 7 station to compete for one of the 15 coveted "Jeopardy!" positions. We were among students who had travelled from places as far as Minnesota in an effort to become one of the chosen few who will participate in the March, 1992 College Championship.

Admitted aficionados of "Jeopardy!" we ventured out with confidence in our knowledge of inane facts. We returned humbled, but not defeated, with a new awareness of what it takes to be a "Jeopardy!" champion.

The selection began with a written test dictated from a television monitor by, who else, Alex Trebek. In this round, 50 answers were given in 50 different categories and contestants had 10 seconds to write down their responses. Unlike on the actual show, the answers did not have to be in the form of a question. The questions were generally difficult, equated to the $800-$1000 questions on the show to indicate the "best and the brightest" of the college contestants.

While these tests were being evaluated, participants were introduced to a special guest. Alex Trebek had travelled to Washington, D.C. especially for the occasion. He spent 20 minutes answering questions from the audience and trying to ease the anticipatory tension in the room. Trebek spoke of his love for hockey, his newly released book and, of course, "Jeopardy!"

And don't forget to phrase your response in the form of a question!

When the results of the written tests were returned, Trebek announced the results. To advance to the second part of the competition players had to answer at least 35 out of 50 questions correctly. Those who had not been as fortunate were assured that they had answered 34 correctly. According to Trebek, this comforts a lot of bruised egos and allows those not chosen to assume they had done well.

The chosen few went on to compete in a series of mock tournaments and personality interviews. Through a process of elimination a total of 15 students were chosen from all of the test sites. These students will travel to Los Angeles, Calif. in March for the filming of the "Jeopardy!" College Championship. Each contestant appearing on television is guaranteed $1000. Those progressing to the semi-final round earn $5000 and the Jeopardy College Champion wins $25,000.

We wish we could say that we made it past the initial elimination rounds. But answers which come so easily when competing at home cannot be found amid the heightened anxiety of a "Jeopardy!" audition. We were consoled by tales from students who had been auditioning for years. One woman who made it to the mock tournament admitted that this was her fourth attempt for a place in the College Championship. And many who weren't successful in auditioning are making plans now to return next year. So if you would like to demonstrate your knowledge of the bizarre, unusual or obscure, look for the address to contact following this year's broadcast of the "Jeopardy!" College Championship. And don't forget to phrase your response in the form of a question!

Glee Club sings to success

By PEGGY AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

How many times do we catch ourselves singing in the shower? Or perhaps humming a favorite tune as we walk to class? Well, if you are female and like to sing, the Villanova Women's Glee Club may be for you. Whether you choose to sing or to listen this is a group that can add some beautiful music to your day.

It is certainly a group that does more than perform.

The Glee Club is the oldest group on campus that was organized solely for women. It has been in existence for almost 60 years here at Villanova. Still going strong, the group, which presently consists of about 50 women, has a very hectic schedule. Under the direction of Carol Evans, they practice twice a week for two hours and perform at various Villanova events throughout the year, including the Law School Red Mass, Parents' Weekend and the Medallion Dinner held Homecoming Weekend. The women also have annual Christmas and Spring concerts.

Over Fall Break the group did not rest; instead they travelled to the University of Virginia to perform in a concert with the Virginia Men's Glee Club. On their way home they stopped at the National Shrine in Washington, D.C. and performed there also. In the past, the Women's Glee Club and Villanova Singers have travelled as far as Europe, and over Spring Break this year are planning a six-day trip to Walt Disneyland in California. This is quite an honor because singing groups must apply and be accepted to perform there.

Junior Laura Schiller serves on the Executive Board as tour director and feels that her best friends at Villanova have come from the Glee Club. It is certainly a group that does more than perform. "We are a very close-knit group of people who really care about one another and spend a lot of time together. It's not just singing, it's developing friendships that will last," said Schiller.

The selections they perform range from classical to jazz. As no audition is necessary to join, the best thing to do if you are interested is to attend a rehearsal at the beginning of a semester. The rehearsals are Monday and Wednesday nights from 6 p.m.-8 p.m. at St. Mary's auditorium. The Glee Club, along with most other music activities, starts the academic year one week early by attending music camp. This week is both helpful and enjoyable because the groups are able to learn their new music and socialize as well giving them a head start for the year.

If you haven't had the opportunity to hear the Glee Club, you are in luck because their annual Christmas Concert with the Villanova Singers is Saturday, Dec. 7 in St. Mary's Chapel. Come and experience some of Villanova's most beautiful sounds; and remember, if you want to be a part of the action, all you need, said Schiller, "is a love of music."

'Nova sails away

By ELIZABETH HARTNETT
Staff Reporter

As the one-minute mark sounds, boats head toward the starting mark in search of a good beginning. Tension builds as the skippers and their crews squint in the glare of the water to see the course ahead. The wind kicks up and boats seem to fly across the water. The race begins. Voices rise in excitement as the first mark is rounded and skippers shout back and forth at each other: "You didn't give me enough room at the mark!" The heat is on as each boat searches for winning tactics. Back on the dock, the race course seems so peaceful to those watching — nothing but a procession of sails gliding across the horizon, but everyone knows they are watching a battle that will go on to the finish.

Here we have the world of intercollegiate sailing in which Villanova plays an active part. In their 15th year of sailing and racing, Villanova's team has seen a lot of victories on the water and is looking ahead to a promising year. This year, the team is lead by President Dave Swift, Vice-President Vince Gallagher, along with Treasurer Steve Henry and Secretary Joe Chiarello.

The team holds much talent with great potential in the freshmen and sophomores, who make up the majority of the team. Swift brings the team a lot of intercollegiate racing experience. He has been an integral part of the team's success in the past four years. Swift races in Boston, Gloucester and Marblehead, as well as here at Villanova. He captured second place in the 210 Nationals this summer. Several team members are also certified sailing instructors. Having instructors on the team enables the members to work on their own weaknesses, develop the skills of the inexperienced sailors and improve everyone's overall sailing ability.

This semester, the team came together with Drexel University and Haverford College to form a collegiate sailing base at Liberty Yacht Club.

This semester, the team came together with Drexel University and Haverford College to form a collegiate sailing base at Liberty Yacht Club. Liberty provides a place for Villanova sailors to practice on Monday, Wednesday and Saturday afternoons and affords the opportunity to become better acquainted with how sailing programs at other local universities are run. "Liberty is the key to developing the potential of everyone on the teams," Henry said. He is supported by Tarantino, who described the association with Liberty as "the way to develop a marked improvement in the team in a noncompetitive atmosphere." Indeed, this is the first year that Villanova has ever had a place to practice, thus removing the advantage most other sailing teams had over them.

Villanova's sailing team "provides a unique aspect to the school's athletic department," Henry said. It is not the everyday activity of the average college student. "It gives Villanova the chance to compete with other elite universities and fosters a special camaraderie amongst schools, where they are friendly but yet filled with the competitive urge," Gallagher said. By participating in the the Middle Atlantic Inter-Collegiate Sailing Association (MAISA), Villanova establishes itself in the realm of intercollegiate sailing. "They are offering an alternate sports activity, where one doesn't have to be a super athlete in order to be actively involved," said sophomore Joe Chiarello.

Skid Row rises to the top on 'Slave'

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

Skid Row lead guitarist, Dave "The Snake" Sabo spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive interview for the Villanovan.

Thunder, talent and attitude are all the ingredients a band must possess. Mere sophomores in the music scene, Skid Row has already drove their stake into the ground floor of rock-n-roll. Five charismatic young men with the power of Zeus and the style of a Harley Davison hit the streets once again with an album, Slave to the Grind (Atlantic Records), that debuted at No. 1 on the Billboard charts. However, this is merely some mathematical paper work. In order to experience the energy and tight bond this band possesses you must visit their castle, namely the stage. Next week they will embark on their first full-fledged headlining tour across the globe. From the top of the Billboard charts to the cover of Rolling Stone Magazine to the guest spot on "Saturday Night Live," the Skidz have hit it not only big, but hard.

Villanovan: Skid Row seems to have been on a rocket ride from the start. What do you think caused that instant spark with the public?

Sabo: "Just the honesty of the record. We're not trying to b.s. anybody. I think people are a lot smarter then we give them credit for. There's a lot people can relate to. It strikes a chord in a lot of people."

V: Your latest album, Slave to the Grind, is much heavier then your first LP. What made you increase the wattage?

Sabo: "For us it was something that we knew that we were heading in that direction. The more we toured and the more we played live, the more we were influenced by other bands. You rediscover your roots as well as listening to new CDs. It's a culmination of that and the element of release. Our music is a release of anger and frustration that gets pent up inside. Music is an outlet for all of that."

V: How come that sound was not explored on your debut?

Sabo: "Basically, with our first record we knew nothing. We were green. We hadn't played to a large amount of people. We were simply clueless and psyched to do our first record. As time went on and we went on tour and played over 300 shows, the band evolved. You take it all in and learn a lot in the process. If you don't, you're just numb. We had a vision of what we wanted to do and with the help of producer Michael Wagener, we put it all together. It was like painting with a blindfold."

V: How did you grapple with the challenge of opening for Guns N'Roses this summer? Did the two bands mesh well?

Sabo: "We did what we always do. It wasn't about intimidation or competition. They're a brilliant band and a good bunch of guys, we became good friends from the start. We did it our way. We got treated great. We got to play an hour every night, plus we got to play an encore, which is rare. The sound and lights were perfect. Everything was up to par."

V: Have you gone to Europe and if so, how was the band's exchange with the audience?

Sabo: "We went with Guns and we're going back next week. The audience was wild. If you give 150 percent to the audience ... nine times out of 10 they will give that much back to you. If you perform to the best of your ability and the band is into a cool vibe, audiences are gonna give it back to you. It's a universal thing."

V: Will you soon be headlining?

Sabo: "We headlined Japan for three weeks and now we are heading on a full headlining tour starting in Europe for six weeks and we'll start in January in the U.S."

V: What was your reaction to Slave's instant booming success on the charts?

Sabo: "We thought some one made a mistake. It was a great feeling. Now, the challenge is keeping the momentum. There's a lot of good band releasing great records. It's just a struggle to stay some where up there. We just released a new single and video, 'Wasted Time' and it came out great."

V: Songs such as "In a Darkened Room" and "Wasted Time" lie similar to material on your debut. Did you use left over tracks for Slave?

Sabo: "Not at all. 'In a Darkened Room' is such a simple song its ridiculous. Musically, Bas (lead singer Sebastian Bach) sings his ass off and Scotti kicks (rhythm guitarist Scotti Hill). It's very melodic. However, the arrangements are a bit different. For example, not ending with the chorus but rather taking it out with a solo. We wanted to take different steps."

V: What song best represents Skid Row's vision?

Sabo: "I have to look at things as a whole. I can't really break it down. Each song is a representation at our different emotional

George Michael takes a turn for the worse

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

"This tour is a bit different from the first one. But it's just as much fun," announced superstar pop singer George Michael at the beginning of his one night stand of his "Cover to Cover" tour at the Spectrum Oct. 29.

This announcement was merely one of the evening's avalanche of mistakes. Promising the crowd that the "Faith" tour is just as much fun as the "Cover to Cover" tour is like telling a child that yogurt tastes as good as ice cream. Michael's plan was to do two things, to shed his pin-up boy sex symbol image as well as covering some of his favorite classics, hence the title "Cover to Cover."

However, what might appear to be Michael's favorites just might not be the crowd's; after all they came to hear George Michael/Wham! music.

The show consisted of two halves with a 15 minute intermission. Clocking in at two and a half hours, the sets were overly dominated by the covers. Some were hits, some were misses and some fell flat on their face.

On the lighter side, versions of Bowie's "Fame" and Elton John's "Don't Let the Sun Go Down on Me" were astounding both visually and vocally. But covers of McFadden and Whitehead's "Ain't No Stoppin' Us Now," Culture Club's "Victims" and "Calling You" from the movie, "Baghdad Cafe" were poor choices.

Whenever a Michael song was performed, the starved crowd roared. "Father Figure," "Hard Day" and "Faith" popped up along with Wham! classics "Everything She Wants," "I'm Your Man" and one of the evening's highlights, an acoustic version of "Freedom." Strangely enough Michael only performed a few sparing tunes from his Listen Without Prejudice Vol. 1.

An encore of "Careless Whisper" followed by a piercing version of "Freedom '90" brought the evening to a successful closing. But the missing links of "I Want Your Sex," "Praying For Time," "A Different Corner," "Monkey" and "One More Try" left the audience heartbroken. Michael hardly even strutted any of his spectacular dance steps. Occasionally he'd step away from the mike to do a few steps. Regardless, he should learn one thing before he continues his career, never make promises you cannot keep, especially to a crowd of 16,000 people.

Rock stars pay tribute to John & Taupin

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

ELTON JOHN

"Two Rooms" is a collection of masterpieces written out of the partnership of Elton John and Bernie Taupin. The album features cover songs done by classic artists such as Eric Clapton, The Who, Joe Cocker and Rod Stewart who have admired and appreciated the efforts of this partnership for the past 25 years.

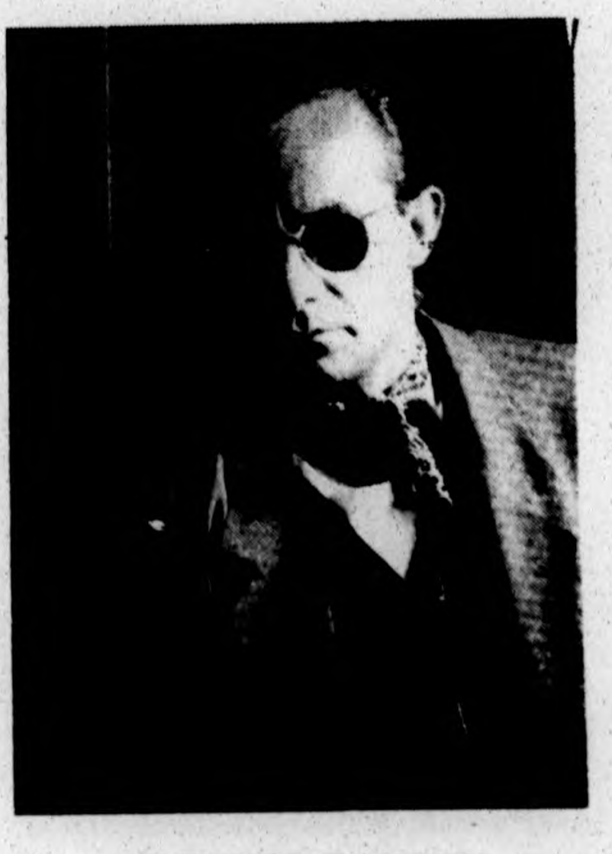
The sheer brilliance of this writing team is evident simply by the thoughtful lyrics supported by intricate melodies. However, it is sometimes hard to make a decent and fitting cover of a song that is considered a classic. Unfortunately, this is the pit in which "Two Rooms" falls. Each and every song has its own identity and it is difficult to applaud another's rendition. It somehow seems strange to hear Tina Turner belting "The Bitch Is Back" or The Beach Boys bop to "Crocodile Rock." It just is not the same.

The covers, themselves, are done tastefully but each artist has added its own interpretation of the music. Clapton's "Border Song," is turned into a blues jam, while as Oleta Adams makes "Don't Let The Sun Go Down On Me" a gospel hymn. The songs are not bad, just different.

Surprisingly, a few covers actually seem to do justice to the originals. Wilson Phillips beautifully harmonizes "Daniel" and Daryl Hall and John Oates rock "Philadelphia Freedom" in honor of their hometown. The Who, as always, pay tribute to John by sticking close to the original "Saturday Night's Alright (For Fighting)."

Perhaps the problem with this album is that John's sound is just as original as the artists that were asked to be a part of the collection. Kate Bush, Sinead O'Connor and Joe Cocker all have their own particular and unique sound. They add their influence to songs that are so commonly heard through the smooth tones of Elton John.

"Two Rooms" does fulfill its purpose. It gives a wonderful tribute to the collaboration of Elton John and Bernie Taupin. However, something seems to be lost in the interpretation. Maybe the songs are simply classics that should be left alone. That is the reason why all these noted artists admire them so.



BERNIE TAUPIN

Hoffman carries Disney's 'Billy Bathgate'

By AARON NICODEMUS
Editorial Assistant

"Billy Bathgate"
Directed by Tri-Star Pictures
 1/2

The life of a gangster totters precariously between unlimited power and a bloody demise. The mighty kingpin can be eliminated on the mere whim of an enemy. "Billy Bathgate" recounts one boy's rise within the mob of an infamous New York underworld leader.

During the Great Depression, thousands of honest men found themselves without jobs, money or homes. One Bronx youngster, Billy, sees the underworld as glamorous and eagerly pursues a career in crime.

Billy gains Schultz's favor and quickly becomes an integral part of his organization. In one of many "loyalty tests," Billy bleeds on a hotel rug (without complaint) to cover a Schultz murder. Nicole Kidman plays Dutch's sultry girlfriend who quickly seduces Billy, causing more tension within Schultz's shrinking gang.

"Billy Bathgate" realistically chronicles underworld life in the mid-1930s, complete with corrupt politicians, lucrative gambling houses and gang-style murders.

> "Bathgate" realistically chronicles underworld life in the mid-1930s.

Dustin Hoffman portrays Dutch Schultz, an aging godfather in New York's organized crime syndicate. Known for his vicious tactics and ruthless cunning, his name commands respect. On trial for various charges, Schultz scrambles to save what is left of his once vast criminal empire. Bo (Bruce Willis) plays his right-hand man who eventually succumbs to greed and later pays with his life.

The theme of loyalty and trust consistently appears in mobster films, with "Billy Bathgate" as no exception. Schultz constantly stresses the importance of faithfulness to impressionable Billy and other members of his gang. Ironically, it is this loyalty and trust that kills Schultz and almost gets Billy.

The acting is outstanding, especially Hoffman as the kingpin Schultz. Until the ending, the film has style and charisma uncharacteristic of the average mobster film. The characters' personalities are well developed with each contributing a distinct imprint on the plot. It is the unconvincing conclusion of "Billy Bathgate," however, that spoils an otherwise honorable effort.

Cabaret Corner

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

On Friday, November 15 The Chestnut Cabaret will host the Crash Test Dummies along with Paleface following their weekly Happy Hour festivities. The Crash Test Dummies is a band that had its beginnings in the midst of the Canadian rockies but has found its way into the American club scene.

A primarily humorous band, the man on acoustic and electric guitar and lead vocals, Brad Roberts, names comic book characters such as Superman and Tarzan as sources of inspiration. Although the band sometimes chooses to cover old songs from artists such as Alice Cooper, Lyle Lovett and The Roches, They will be performing many tracks off their debut album, The Ghosts That Haunt Me. "Once people digest the name, they don't forget it," says Roberts.

Straight from the '60s, Charlie Musselwhite will be appearing at the 23 East Cabaret on Friday, Nov. 15 as well. One of the most influential white blues harmonica players in Chicago at that time, according to The Boston Globe, Musselwhite music has strong ties to the blues.

In recent times, however, he has explored the areas of jazz and funk and is now promoting his new album Signature. Blues legend John Lee Hooker makes a special appearance on the album to perform "Cheatin' On Me," a song he wrote especially to record with Musselwhite. A distinct factor on the blues scenes, Musselwhite gives the audience a thrill.

FLASH: Johnny O and the Classic Dogs of Love are featured at the Chestnut Cabaret's Friday Happy Hour every week. This Philadelphia based band will start off the weekend with covers of classic Motown tunes. Low priced drink specials will be available.

The Boston-based band, RTZ, will rock the Chestnut Cabaret on Tuesday, Nov. 12. RTZ focuses on old-fashioned rock and roll to get the crowd jamming. RTZ will be a treat for fans of the group Boston who hit heavy in the late 70's. The band will be promoting their new album, Return To Zero. Says lead vocalist Brad Delp, "There are a lot of dance and pop things on the radio now, and that isn't what we do."

'Shattered' moves briskly

"Shattered"
Directed by Wolfgang Peterson MGM

One night you are driving along a winding road in the San Francisco wine valley. You lose control of the car, crash through the barrier and land hundreds of feet below. Weeks later you awake from a coma, only you have no idea who you are. It turns out you have a wife, a huge house and are a part owner of the biggest architectural firm on the West Coast. Your life seems perfect, except for the recurring flashbacks of the accident and a violent shooting murder.

This is the opening of the film "Shattered," and the rest of the film is just as intriguing. Tom Berenger plays the accident victim, Dan Merrick. His wife Judith, played by Greta Scacchi, nurses Dan back to health and jars his memory. All seems fine until Dan finds photos of Judith and another man making love, remembers in detail the gruesome murder and begins to question everything around him.

The only person Dan trusts is a private detective, played brilliantly by Bob Hoskins, who helps him decipher his life, his wife and his flashbacks.

Directed by Wolfgang Peterson, "Shattered" is a well-written story that keeps you glued to the screen. Just when you think you have it all figured out, the film throws a twist and makes you question everything you see.

Berenger is great as the helpless victim, and Scacchi is a sexy and conniving, though loving wife. Shot beautifully on location in San Francisco, the film moves briskly with style. While guilty of an easy ending, "Shattered" is nonetheless an intriguing bit of film making from an otherwise morbid MGM film company.

"Year Of the Gun"

Italy-1978. The government is under attack by Communist student organizations. Riots and violence are everywhere and an American writer is trying to write the perfect novel. The problem is, what he is writing is not only very close to the truth, but also hits upon a plan to kidnap a government leader.

Directed by John Frankenheimer and starring Andrew McCarthy, "The Year of the Gun" is an interesting though confusing film of civil unrest.

> "The Year of the Gun" is a film of civil unrest.

McCarthy, playing the American writer David, shows the same innocent, all-American type he has made a career of in films like "St. Elmo's Fire" and "Pretty in Pink." Writing a fictional novel of the Communist group, The Red Brigades, leads David into confrontation with the group's leaders, who beat him and threaten to kill him because they are convinced he is a CIA agent out to infiltrate the organization.

Full of double and triple crosses, personality changes, dishonest love affairs and violence galore, "Year of the Gun" becomes an exercise in excess as the noise and screen action rises to the level of sensory overload. During all of this, the viewer must try and comprehend what is happening without giving up. It is a well directed film with a definite European feel to it, but "The Year of the Gun" tends to ask too much of the viewer.

Connick uncovers class

By CHRISTINA FRANGOS
Assistant Entertainment Editor

SPOTLIGHT: Harry Connick, Jr. should be considered an entrepreneur. With today's popularity going to rap and adult contemporary music, Connick's Sinatra-style voice covers an untapped market of big band sound with strong lyrical content.

Connick is strictly a class act. His clean cut, boyish good looks give him an honest appearance, while his sentimental lyrics render him a romantic. Connick's sound is reminiscent of the '50s with music backed by an orchestra which is thoroughly entertaining. Trumpet, saxophone and bass solos add credibility to the singer's arrangements which often feature the music more than Connick himself.

While his latest release, Red Light, Blue Light, is on Billboard's charts, his last hit album, We Are In Love, is still exposing romantics everywhere. The compilation features love songs as well as many upbeat tunes, including the title song. Regardless of the theme of the song, they are all pleasant sounding with sincere and honest lyrics. Connick's own love for music is so evident on every track that it is difficult not to respond favorably.

"We Are In Love" has an incredibly uplifting big band sound. While most of today's music drowns out individual sounds, Connick's band emphasizes the slight strokes of a piano and the vibrations of the bass.

Another inspiring tune is "Recipe For Love," which is by far the highlight of the album. "Recipe" is so romantic and genuine it makes you wish you were with that special someone; exactly the feeling Connick conveys. His music is for lovers or anyone who has ever been in love. But this love does not have to be of a romantic nature. In fact Connick acknowledges his inspiration to be his love of music.

"Drifting" is the most sentimental of the songs. With its soft, sad lyrics and the whisper of instruments backing, Connick creates a melancholy mood. The tune is basic yet honest. Connick's subtlety is what makes him so appealing. There is no doubt that his music can stand on its own, unlike some performers whose live performances are disappointing due to auditory and mechanical failures.

Harry Connick, Jr. bases his creations on jazz. Claiming that he has loved to sing since childhood, he does not grandstand. Actually, Connick never hesitates to acknowledge singers like Frank Sinatra who he admires yet does not try to immitate. Comparisons to older singers may be insulting to some, but Connick has said that he finds it flattering, after all, consider the great artists to whom he is being compared.

With a virtually untapped market in today's music industry, Harry Connick, Jr. is an alternative for young and old music fans. Simple and sincere, his sound creates a romantic setting and leaves a pleasant trace after it is gone. We Are In Love will undoubtedly be one of many hits for Connick because his music is based on a strong foundation and emotions which are common to all music fans.

SPARKS: Paula Abdul kicked off her "Under My Spell" tour in Atlanta last week, highlighting her incredible choreographic ability. Abdul's first headlining show, a 90-minute, 14-song compilation, covers old material as well as tunes from her latest LP, Spellbound. The tour has already received good reviews and favorable comments on the special effects, props and costumes. Abdul will be in Hartford Nov. 14 and 15 and in New York Nov. 17 and 18 . . .

Michael Jackson's Dangerous album is set for release Nov. 26. The album contains 14 songs, the first will be out next week. Jackson's brother Jermaine released his own album this week. You Said will put the brothers in the same competing category, though competition is not anticipated . . .

After Geraldo Rivera revealed in his book "Exposing Myself" that he and Bette Midler had an affair, Midler appeared on Barbara Walters special Tuesday night to say that Rivera and his producer drugged the actress and groped her. With Midler's new film, "For The Boys," out Nov. 27 and Rivera involved in a TV ratings sweep period, one would have to question the validity of either side.

Enemy leads rap pack

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

PUBLIC ENEMY — APOCALYPSE 91 ... THE ENEMY STRIKES BLACK: "Clear the way for the prophets of rage. Engagin' on the stage ... Just in case you forgot. I pump kilowatts," commands Chuck D lead rapper and strength behind the powerful rap trio, Public Enemy who celebrates the release of its fourth LP, Apocalypse 91 ... the Enemy Strikes Black.

Apocalypse does not possess the ruff styling of their last effort, Fear of a Black Planet but none the less it holds its own. The political scope as well as the streets are examined in Chuck D's brash to the point lyrics that glow like police siren, only louder.

Chuck explores the essence of being black on "Lost at Birth" and "Rebirth" and the political b.s. that surrounds our society as a whole, "I thrive to survive, I pray to God to stay alive. Attitude boils up inside ... They said it never been no worse than this."

Sidekick Flavor Flav kicks it once again breakin' da heat that Chuck dishes with, "I Don't Wanna Be Called Yo Niga" while still making a racial point. Mixmaster Terminator-X fresh from his solo LP, Valley of the Jeep Beets spike the turntables with innerfire and devastation.

Already spawning two hits, "Can't Truss It" and remake of "Bring Tha Noize" with Anthrax, Apocalypse simply restates a fact that everybody knows, P.E. cannot be topped.

HAMMER — TOO LEGIT TO QUIT: Hammer's Please Hammer Don't Hurt 'Em LP became the biggest selling rap album of all time (15 million copies). His next step, Too Legit Too Quit, is a bit of a disappointment. However, if growth is what Hammer seeks, Legit fits the bill. Live instruments are used to perform Hammer's snappy grooves leaving behind the thick sampling that he was once known for.

The hook that Hammer feeds off is the lyric, preferably a catch phrase, that will remain on the lips of today's youth at least until X-mas. "U Can't Touch This" was perfect and the title track of his new effort is being pushed, heavily. Capital records has put together an in-your-face TV commercial promoting the new album featuring this catch phrase plus a new hand signal.

Hammer's other secret ingredient is his unpenetrable bass line. "This is The Way We Roll," Legit's already second single, follows this blue-print closely.

Hammer is striving to be taken with the utmost severity. Even his album suggests that Hammer is "pigeon-holed as a 'rap' artist." But in fact that's what he is. Songs like "Living in a World Like This" and "Brothers Hang On" reach false social conscious levels that are out of place. "Rollin' On (Oakland Style)," "Releasing Some Pressure" and "Good To Go" is what Hammer is all about. Besides, who could take a guy who is a Saturday morning cartoon seriously?

TONE LOC — COOL HAND LOC: Tone Loc, the man with the biggest selling single in history, "Wild Thing," finally returns after a two-year absence. Cool Hand Loc finds the Locman funkier and more subdued. The sampling of rock-riffs has dissipated while the record tends to rely on Loc's raspy captivating delivery.

The pop is lost and exchanged for ballad-rap and gangsta-rap but Loc does not seem to fit into these two new outfits. Sappy cuts "I Adore You" and "All Through the Night" ride on Loc's trademark voice. Despite the vocals, the music itself is not memorable.

Loc comes to life on a couple of tunes, "Freaky Behavior" and "Joke But Don't Play," but this momentum is merely brief. Even with the bluesy sway of "Funky Westside" and the street play on "Pimp Without a Caddy," Loc is lost in a funk. He never reaches that smooth sleek mystique that he once had. Possibly he's had too many Cold Medinas.

DIGITAL UNDERGROUND — SONS OF THE P: The Digital Underground are by far one of the most innovative rap groups to don this planet. Their posse consisting of characters Humpty Hump, PeeWee, Money-B, Shorty-B, Kenny-K, M.C. Blowfish and Blocko round-up raps that will make your head spin and your belly ache. Unfortunately their new album, Sons of the P, fizzles out faster then Vanilla Ice's live album (yes, he did put out a live album).

The Underground's last and first album, Sex Packets, was a master piece of hip-hop. Tunes "Do Whatcha Like," hit "Humpty Dance" and the title track wiped out their competition instantaneously. Even their follow-up EP, This is an EP Release smoked with their best work, "Same Song." Sons should have broke them through from left field.

Sons does have its highlights. "No Nose Job" and "Kiss You Back" revives some of the spirit left over from the Packets album. But as for the remainder of material, it appears that the once flowing creative juices that overflowed on their first album dried up.

Skid Row's Dave Sabo explores success

states at the time. Maybe a fan could pick one that would best define us. I dig that, people's different interpretations. Personally I really enjoy 'The Threat,' which looks like our next single and 'Monkey Business.' I have been recently getting off on 'Mud-Kicker.' It all depends on the night."

V: "Livin' on a Chain Gang" is one of Slave's more intriguing cuts. How did it arise?

Sabo: "Rachel (bassist Rachel Bolan) started writing these lyrics while we were on tour about a year ago. It focuses on all the hypocrisy that surrounds us and all the crap we, as people, are subject to. It's unreal what some people get away with, be it religion, judicial bodies and so forth. It makes you feel trapped and you just want to break from it all."

V: When the band first started, you being the lead guitarist, did you take charge as the leader?

Sabo: "We don't have leaders and followers in this band — its five original personalities. Everybody knows where they stand. Its a democracy in that we are all pushing for the same thing. All for one and one for all, its always been that way and that's the way it will remain."

V: How was Bas recruited?

Sabo: "We found him through a buddy of ours, who found him up in Toronto. We swapped tapes of our music at the time and we flew him down. We hit it off really well. He's the epit/me of a heavy metal frontman. If you looked in an encyclopedia under heavy metal lead singer, there would be Bas."

V: Jon Bon Jovi supposedly had a hand in helping the Skidz get signed and apparently there was some financial tension between him and the band. Is this true?

Sabo: "I've known Johnny for years cause we grew up in the same neighborhood. Our relations are good. We had some problems in the past (Jon Bon Jovi, lead singer of Bon Jovi, was said to have copped a large sum of Skid Row's publishing credits and merchandise under their original contract). But, we worked things out."

V: Why do you believe that the youth of today identifies so well with Skid Row?

Sabo: "Because we will always be fans ourselves, that never changes. Just cause you have some degree of success doesn't mean you can change that and if you do, you become a self-parody. I love to meet fans that doesn't bother me at all. As much as the fans give to you, you got to give back as well. Once you see the looks in their faces, its all worth it."

guitars

V: Your own personal guitar sound is much more geared toward rhythms then the standard Eddie Van Halen clones that plague the air waves. How do you explain this?

Sabo: "I was influenced by a wide realm of players. Eddie as well as Billy Gibbons (ZZ Top), Joe Perry (Aerosmith), Randy Rhodes (Ozzy Osbourne) and many others. I always tried to strive for my own distinct style. I hope to come to the point where people can turn on the radio and identify my playing."

V: You toured with Aerosmith in 1989-1990. How was the meeting of the old and the new?

Sabo: "I became really close to Steven Tyler (lead singer), he's my all time hero. We hit it off instantly. Steven and I still talk on a regular basis and that just kills me. He's a survivor. That whole band is just a testament to perseverance."

V: How do you view each member of Skid Row, including yourself, outside and inside the band? Starting with Bas ...

Sabo: "He's defiant, but in a good way. Strong willed ... nobody's push over. He won't be subject to anybody's ill-beings. He's a complex figure. Rachel is a guy who doesn't realize how talented he is. He's got this knack for lyrics. Scotti is a guy with a lot of soul. He is always pushing himself to go further ahead. That is what his whole life is based on. Rob (drummer Rob Affuso) is the rock. He holds it together. He controls the direction of the song. We all count on him. If we are playing and he screws up, we're in trouble. He holds all the responsibility. As for me ... I'm just a guy who digs being in this band and helping it grow."

V: Bas once said, "When I walk with my band I feel an electric charge through me — like nothing can touch us." Do you share his views?

Sabo: "I know exactly what he's talking about. When we walk on and off the stage nobody can penetrate what we have. There's an electricity that bonds us. There are times when there's tension but that just adds to that vibe that we possess."

'Nova defeats Friars 3-1, enters conference tourney

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

The men's soccer team finished its regular season in dramatic form last week, capturing a must-win match that vaulted the team into the Big East Conference playoffs for the first time since 1984. A loss to Providence College would have ended the Wildcats' season, but the Cats came away with the victory and earned the right to compete for the conference championship this weekend at Storrs, Conn.

'Nova traveled to Seton Hall to take on the Pirates Oct. 30, and ended up losing a tough match. The game was tied at 2-2 with less than two minutes remaining, but Seton Hall broke through with two clutch scores that secured the victory by a 4-2 margin. Sean Whiteley and Hector Campos scored for the Cats in a losing cause.

Facing a must-win situation, the Cats traveled to Providence College seeking a playoff spot. The Wildcats trailed the Friars 1-0 at halftime. The offense finally came to life in the second half, ignited with a goal from Pat O'Malley off an assist from Joe Roy that tied the game with 25 minutes left. Five minutes later, Roy scored what would prove to be the game-winning goal when he scored off a pass from Tim Gannon. The Cats tacked on an insurance goal with ten minutes left in regulation to cap the 3-1 win when Eric Hinds scored on another assist from Roy. Goalkeeper Michael Guarino made four saves and recorded the victory.

Fourth-seeded Villanova faces top-seeded Seton Hall (11-3-2, 7-1 in the Big East) today at the Big East playoffs. If the Cats should come away with a victory, then they will face the winner of the Connecticut-St. John's match for the Big East championship to be played Sunday at noon.

NOTES: Coach Larry Sullivan's team finished the season at 11-6, 4-4 in the Big East. The Cats have come a long way from the preseason when they lost two key players to season-ending injuries and did not have an experienced goaltender. But Guarino stepped in and did the job this season at goalie, recording a .782 save percentage and a 1.80 goals-against average. In addition, leading scorer Joe Roy (9 goals, 9 assists) has been a steady performer this season, earning Big East Player of the Week last week.

Swimmers open strong

The men's swimming and diving team opened the season with an exciting performance at the Villanova Relays as it rallied late in the meet to win the four-team meet.

The Wildcats trailed by 10 points with four events remaining before outscoring LaSalle 11-2 in the 200 Freestyle relay to pull within a point of the Explorers. The two teams battled through the next two events with 'Nova taking a one point lead. In the final event, the 4000 freestyle relay, the Cats finished first and fourth while LaSalle placed second and fifth to give 'Nova a four point margin of victory, 90-86.

The women's swimming and diving team opened its season in fine fashion as well by defeating Rutgers University 88-60 at the Villanova Relays.

The Wildcats are coming off their best season ever under head coach Chuck Horton, qualifying two swimmers for last year's NCAA Championships. The Cats came out and completely dominated Rutgers in their first meet of the year, including sweeps of both first and second place in five different relays.

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Joe Roy

This week, the Villanovan Athlete of the Week is sophomore Joe Roy of the men's soccer team.

Roy recorded a goal and two assists in a 3-1 win over Providence College that earned the Cats (11-6, 4-4) a berth in the Big East Conference playoffs, their first since 1984. Roy's second-half goal proved to be the key to victory, as it put the Wildcats ahead 2-1 in the pivotal Big East contest.

In addition to being the team's leading scorer (9 goals, 9 assists), Roy was recently named Big East Player of the Week.

Cats advance to tourney

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

The field hockey team's final regular-season game proved to be its best performance of the year, as it bulldozed Georgetown 10-0. After a season of extreme ups and downs, this win gave 'Nova a winning overall record (9-8-1) and a 2-3 mark in the Big East. More good news came the next day when the Cats were chosen as one of the four teams to play in the 1991 Big East tournament.

Villanova suffered a tough loss on the road against Lafayette Oct. 29. The game was tied 2-2 late in the second half, but Lafayette netted a goal with 10:30 remaining and took the game 3-2. This is not to say that Villanova went without some contributions from its two high scorers, co-captain Missy Paolantonio and Barbara King. Although Lafayette jumped out to a 2-0 lead, Paolantonio narrowed the margin with a goal late in the first half. Less than three minutes into the second half, King tied it up with her fifth goal of the season.

For a season in which 1-0 games have been the norm, it is an understatement to say that the Wildcats dominated the game at Georgetown Nov. 3. The Hoyas were unable to threaten goalie Chrissy Thomas with a shot on goal the entire first half. All the action was on the other half of the field and right in the midst of it was co-captain Melissa Rea. Her dominating performance in this game (4 assists, 1 goal) gave her a team-high eight assists for the season.

Rea was not the only Villanovan dismantling the Hoyas; forward Bree Hawthorne capped the game off with a pair of goals and an assist, giving her five points for the season. Paolantonio (3 assists) and King (2 goals, 1 assist) chipped in and Monika Pedano (2 goals) added to her list of late-season heroics. Krista Saponara, who has started sporadically throughout the season, registered her first assist of the season, while another spot starter, Jen Hurt, came up with her first goal of the year. Freshman JoAnn Brantuk showed that she may be a force to deal with in upcoming years when she put the Cats' ninth goal of the game between the pipes.

This weekend, the Wildcats head to Boston College's Alumni Stadium as the fourth seed in the Big East tournament. They will square off against top-seed the University of Connecticut Saturday morning. The team rankings will certainly not discourage the Wildcats, especially after they won last year's tournament as the fourth-ranked team. If 'Nova's defense continues to play with the toughness it has established throughout the season, and the offense can come up with a few timely goals, the Wildcats may pull off another Big East upset.

Polo finishes season

By ERIC WARREN
Staff Reporter

The water polo team fought hard and finished seventh in post-season play at the Mid-Atlantic Conference championships in Annapolis, Md., last weekend. The Wildcats, seeded sixth, played a ferocious Bucknell team in the first round, losing 18-9. "The Bucknell team played phenomenal water polo," said 'Nova head coach Dan Sharadin. "We had a really slow start and the guys were never able to get back into the game."

In their second game of the tournament, the Cats battled Army, a team which they had beaten for the first time during the regular season. Down 11-10 with 10 seconds left in the game, the Wildcats fired one last shot on goal in an attempt to tie, but it went wide.

Queens College, a team that 'Nova had beaten three times during the regular season, was its final opponent. "This was another amazing and exciting game," said Sharadin. Villanova won 8-6 and secured seventh out of nine places.

Marc Verotsky was the team's leading scorer for the tournament with 11 goals. Kevin Engstrom added five and Steve Hinton, Brian Pearce, Steve Abbott and Jeff Bernaducci each scored twice. Verotsky also led with five steals while freshmen Ryan Engstrom had two steals. Goalie John O'Keefe had 12 saves and blocked one penalty shot.

Coach Sharadin was pleased with his team's performance not only in the tournament, but also over the entire season. The Cats lose two seniors, Engstrom, and Abbott, but will be ready to take on the tough Mid-Atlantic Conference next year with nine players returning, including Most Outstanding Player Verotsky.

Yankee Conference Week In Review

By BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

The race for the Yankee Conference lead became blurred this week. With wins by Villanova, Delaware and New Hampshire and a first-place showdown between the Wildcats and New Hampshire poised for Saturday, a three-way tie for first next week with only two weeks left in the season is a possibility.

NEW HAMPSHIRE 45, BOSTON UNIVERSITY 26

It was a close first quarter as the teams exchanged touchdowns. The second quarter revealed the vintage UNH offense as it erupted for 21 points, including the third longest TD run in conference history, a 97 yarder by Barry Bourassa. In all, Bourassa ran for 148 yards and two touchdowns on the day.

MASSACHUSETTS 27, NORTHEASTERN 12

Before leaving early in the fourth quarter with a bruised left shoulder, Jerome Bledsoe rushed for 195 yards and a touchdown to lead UMass over hobbled Northeastern, which played without four suspended starters.

DELAWARE 35, MAINE 10

Backup freshman fullback Daryl Brown, who had only 137 yards in limited action this season, was unleashed as he ran for 151 yards on 16 carries with three touchdowns. Brown and senior halfback Jim Lazarski combined in the Wing-T offense for a season-high 349 yards on the ground. The downside of the victory was Delaware's loss of quarterback Bill Vergantino, who went down with a sprained knee at the end of the first quarter.

Football Preview

New Hampshire at Villanova
Homecoming Saturday: 1:30 p.m.
TV: PRISM, Radio: WXVU, 89.1 FM
Records: UNH, 7-1, 'Nova, 7-1

Fans of Villanova couldn't ask for a better Homecoming game than this year's against first-place New Hampshire. It is one of the top Division I-AA games of the season and possibly the biggest game the Cats have played in recent memory. A win by the Cats would propel them into a possible three-way tie for first with UNH and Delaware, if the Hens beat Connecticut.

But it won't be easy to beat a UNH squad that ruined Delaware's Homecoming with a convincing 45-28 win. The other Wildcats have all 11 offensive starters back and are putting up numbers comparable to Villanova's. They are led by tailback Barry Bourassa, a bruising runner who also returns kicks. The 5-7, 165 lb., junior is one of the top backs in the country and must be slowed down if the Cats are going to win.

The New Hampshire defense, though, is vulnerable. It gives up an average of 19.5 points per game, as opposed to 12.75 by Villanova. If you take a look at common opponents, however, the teams are even. New Hampshire eked by UConn 21-16 and pulled away from Boston U. 45-26. The Cats defeated the Huskies 35-13 and killed BU 56-6.

Against Delaware, though, UNH won while 'Nova lost its only game thus far 38-28. Another measure of how even these teams appear can be found in the results from the last few years. The last two years, the visiting team has come away with the win in games decided in the final minutes. In 1989, New Hampshire won 13-12, but last year 'Nova won at UNH 10-7.

The injury factor favors UNH. Pat Kennedy, 'Nova's leading rusher, injured his left elbow against Rhode Island and will miss the game. The Cats will turn to backups Vern Smith and Kevin Mosley to replace him. With continued strong blocking by the offensive line, though, the Cats should be able to continue running the ball well without Kennedy. If not, they may be in trouble.

The Cats have yet to win a close game or come from behind which works as a disadvantage. Therefore, a major priority for 'Nova is to jump out early on UNH and bring the large and boisterous Homecoming crowd into the game. That will ignite the defense and free up QB Tom Colombo to strike with the bomb and make the big play that he has made time and again this season.

Villanova realizes this game is the one that could make or break the whole season. Head coach Andy Talley will have his team focused and fired up. The loss of Kennedy could work as a plus if every player takes it upon himself to play a little bit harder. If the Cats avoid costly turnovers, cut down on the number of penalties, establish a solid running game and limit the effectiveness of Bourassa, there is no reason why they should not make the 1991 Homecoming a complete success.

PREDICTION: Villanova 33, New Hampshire 19.

Cats roll over Rams, await UNH

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Assistant Sports Editor

A great football team can usually lose a key player and replace him without missing a beat.

That is the task that befalls a 'Nova football squad that comes off a 49-14 thrashing of Rhode Island to play in its biggest game of the season on Homecoming tomorrow against Yankee Conference leader New Hampshire after losing its star running back.

Pat Kennedy, 'Nova's leading rusher with 728 yards, injured his left elbow on the team's first offensive series last weekend and will miss the rest of the regular season. That means the pressure is now on backups Vern Smith and Kevin Mosley and fullback Jeff Johnson to pick up the slack.

Based on their performance this year and specifically against URI, the Cats' rushing corps is up to the challenge.

Mosley rushed for 111 yards on 17 carries and added two TD's on the day. Smith, in addition to gaining 78 yards on the ground, snagged three passes for 60 yards and ran for two scores. Johnson, a bruising, hard-nosed athlete, has been blocking and running extremely hard all season long.

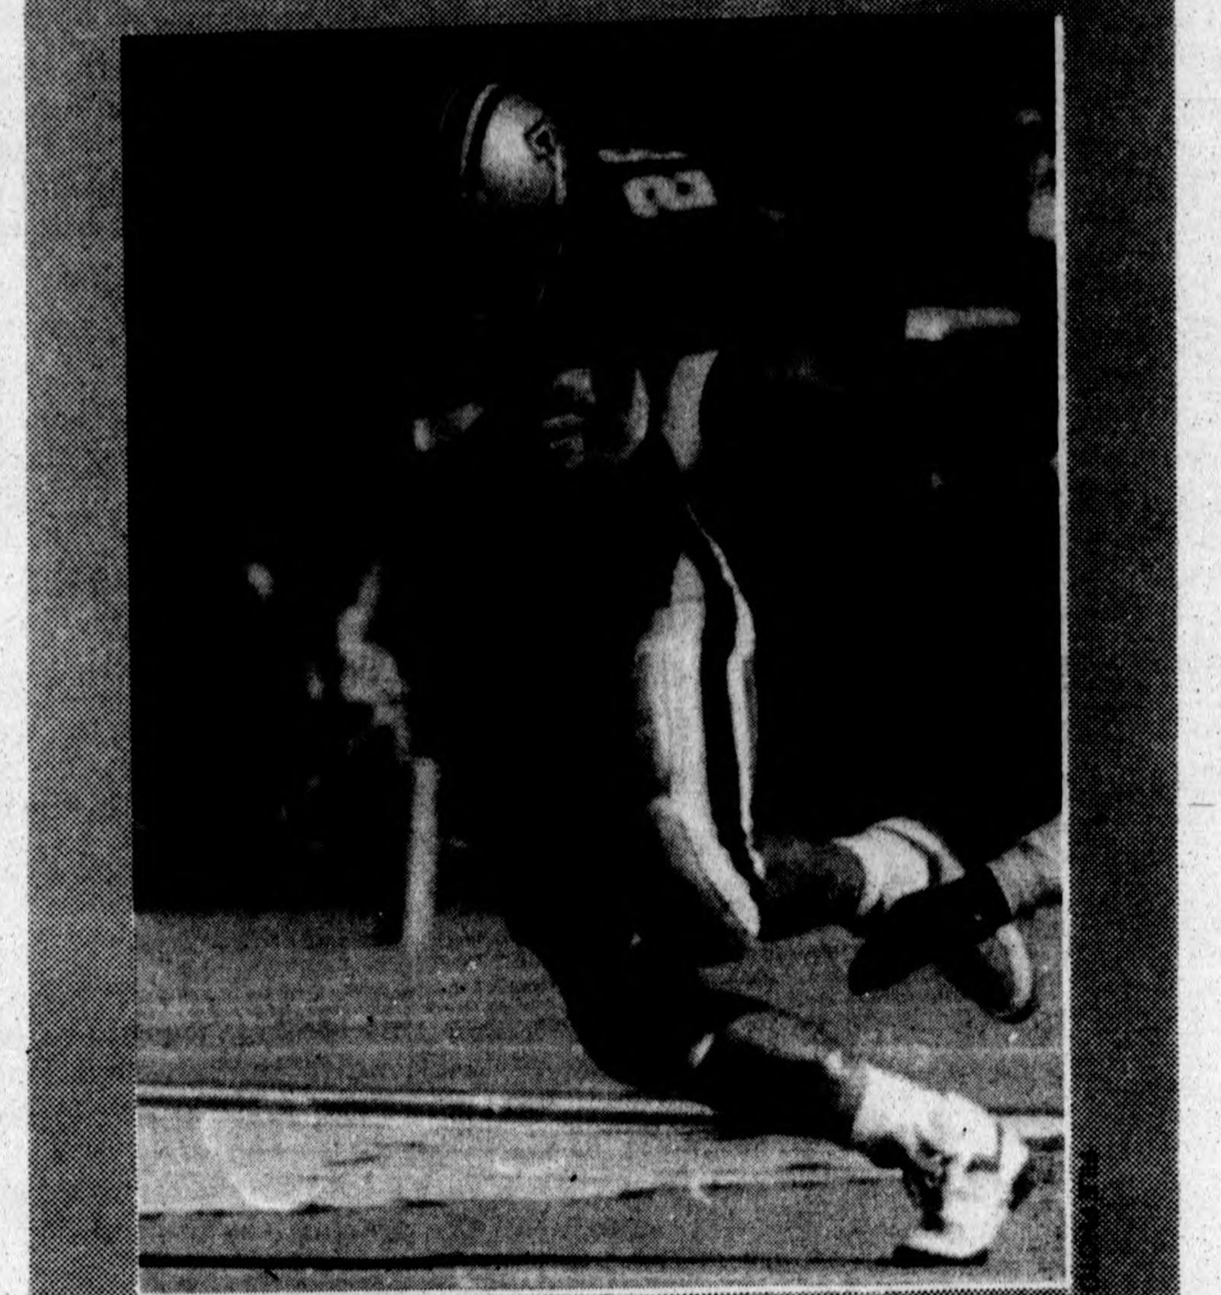
The team as a whole will have to play very well in order to beat a UNH squad that is ranked No. 7 nationally and is enjoying a seven-game winning streak. It won at Delaware 45-28 and currently is 5-0 in the Yankee. The team has a high-powered offense similar to 'Nova's and it will be a great challenge for a Cat defense that has really only been tested once.

Kennedy injured his left elbow on the team's first offensive series and will miss the rest of the regular season.

As for the Rhode Island game, the ninth-ranked Cats fell behind 7-0 before the offense finally started rolling. Quarterback Tom Colombo had another excellent showing, completing 17 of 24 for 200 yards. It is the junior's sixth game in which he has gone over 200 yards passing.

After starting out slowly, the defense soon established its dominance over the Rams. It held URI to just 92 yards rushing and 137 yards in the air. It also helped set up two scores with an interception by safety Barry Alvis and a fumble recovery on the Ram two-yard line by lineman Chris Grychowski that was forced by a vicious hit by linebacker Andy Cobaugh. On the strength of those plays, the Cats took an insurmountable 35-7 halftime lead.

NOTES: The Yankee Conference is one of the top conferences in Division 1-AA, placing three teams in the top 10 with New Hampshire at No. 7, Delaware at No. 8 and Villanova at No. 9 ... The Cats are 6-0 in Homecoming games since Andy Talley took over as head coach ... Not counting the 38-28 loss at Delaware, the Cats' smallest margin of victory has been 14 points, in a 35-21 win over William and Mary ... After UNH, 'Nova has just two games remaining in the regular season, against Massachusetts and at Fordham.



Jeff Johnson fought his way to 16 yards in an easy 49-14 victory over URI. The Cats play UNH tomorrow.

'Nova knocks off Big 5 rivals, streak reaches 19

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Sports Editor

The volleyball team recorded two victories in the Big Five tournament last weekend to gain the inside track to the city series title. In the process, Villanova registered its 19th consecutive victory and improved its overall record to 26-2.

This will be a very tough weekend. It would be a great win if we could pull the Pitt match off.
Head Coach David Barkley

'Nova began the competition by sweeping Penn in three games (15-7, 16-14, 15-10). The team followed this effort with another strong performance by defeating tournament host La Salle (15-11, 15-3, 15-12).

Coach David Barkley was pleased with the Cats' overall play. "I think things went well," he said. "It was pretty smooth. We were the favorite. We should have beat them and we did. We beat them in three (games)."

Villanova has consistently beaten the teams it was expected to throughout the season. This is one of the many reasons for the team's vast improvement from last year. With 26 wins, the Cats have already eclipsed last season's victory total by seven. Both the coaching staff and the players deserve much credit.

But the most difficult part of their schedule is still ahead. The Cats must play three tough road matches this weekend against West Virginia, Akron and Pittsburgh.

"This will be a very tough weekend," said Barkley. "We're playing good teams." He added that Big East rival Pitt has been playing very well. "It would be a great win if we could pull that one (the Pitt match) off," Barkley said.

To further add to the challenge, 'Nova must play Akron at 4 p.m. in Pittsburgh after playing West Virginia at Morgantown at noon on the same day.

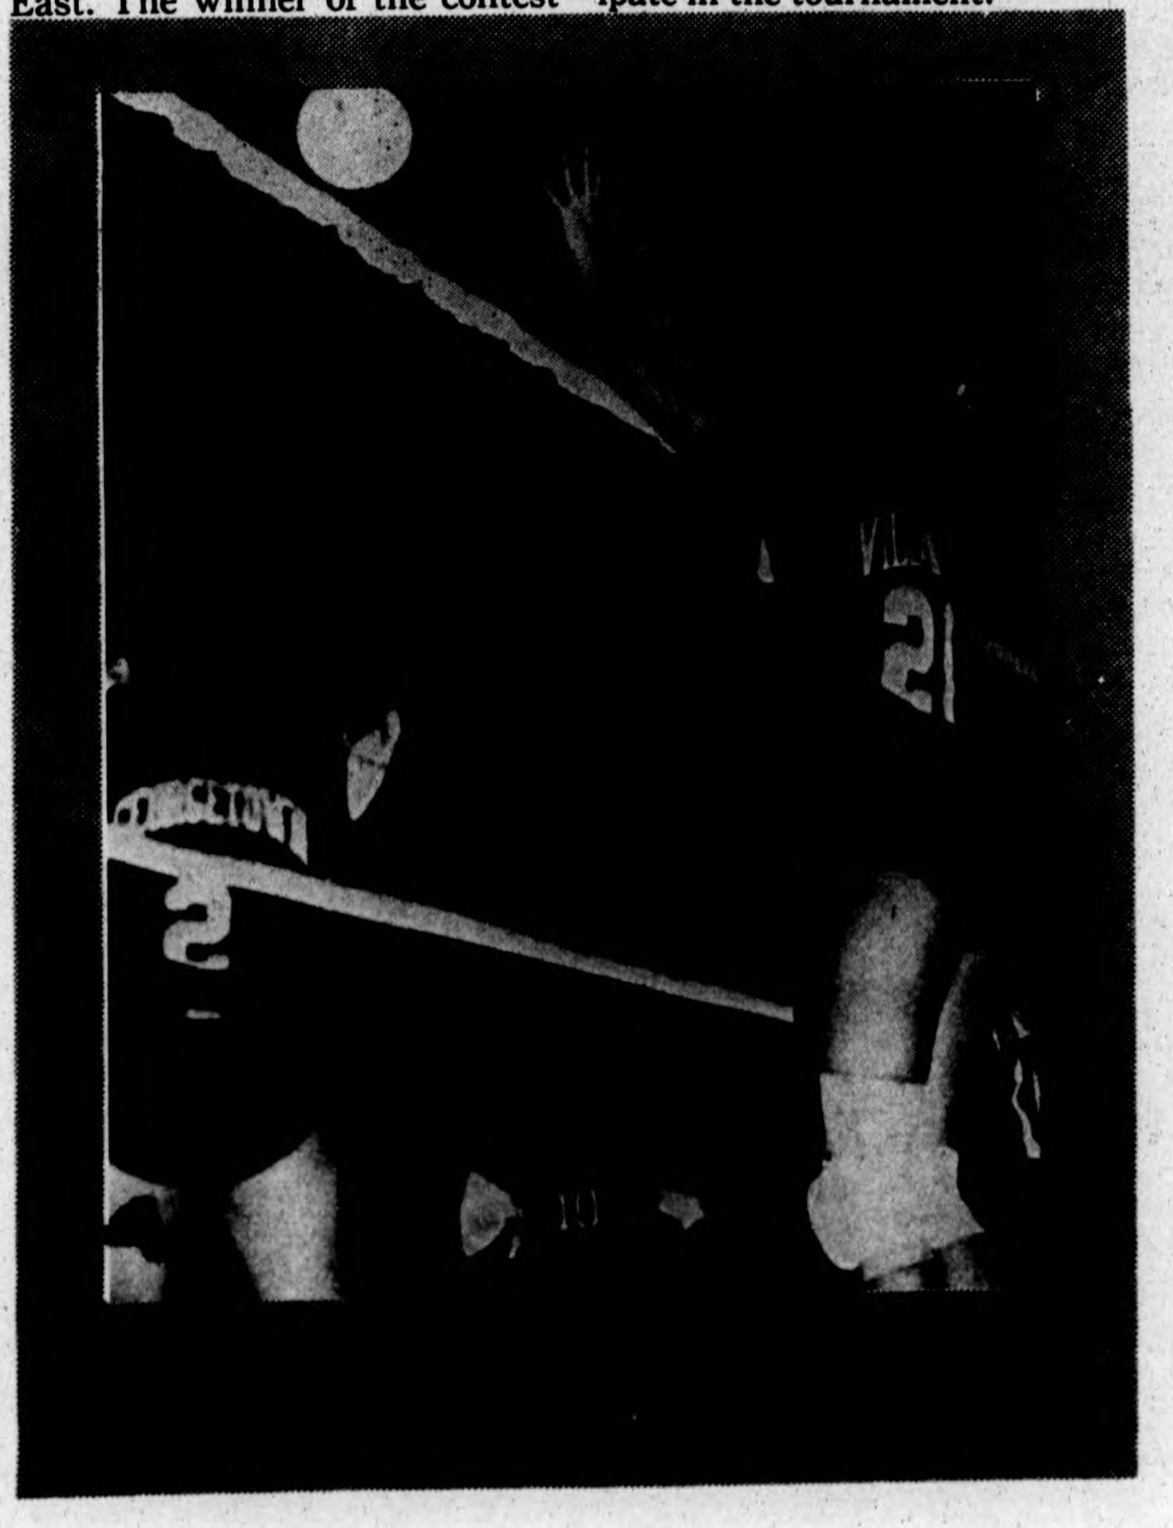
"I think that will affect our second match," said Barkley. "If the first match takes too long, it could hurt us for the next match." Barkley also expressed his concern for fatigue, saying he would definitely have to rely on his bench.

On the following day, the Cats will play their biggest match of the season thus far. Villanova and Pitt are tied for first in the Big East. The winner of the contest will claim the regular season title and thus secure the top seeding in the conference tournament.

Should the Cats win, Barkley indicated they will open the tournament against Boston College. If the Cats are not victorious, they will face Connecticut.

Asked if he had any preference over which team he would like to play, Barkley responded, "Boston College. UConn is stronger than Boston College." Barkley did explain, however, that the Cats would be highly motivated against UConn because of their disappointing performance against the Huskies earlier in the season.

Villanova's next home action will be Nov. 16, when the Cats will host the Asics Autumn Classic. Fairleigh-Dickinson, St. Bonaventure and Providence will participate in the tournament.



EXTRA POINTS

Cats hope for homecoming win

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

The 'Nova football team stands at 7-1 overall and 5-1 in the Yankee Conference. But the Cats' road to a playoff spot faces a major roadblock when New Hampshire visits Villanova Stadium tomorrow for Homecoming.

UNH, also called the Wildcats, will take the field carrying a lofty reputation (No. 7 in the latest national poll) and an equally impressive 8-1 record while standing first in the conference with a 5-0 record.

Its only loss was to a Marshall team that lost to Division I-A N.C. State 15-14, despite the Wolfpack entering the game with top-10 status. Bolstered by tremendous experience, including 11 two-year starters on the defense, UNH may prove to be a tougher challenge for 'Nova than Delaware.

If 'Nova does defeat UNH, it would create a three-way tie for the conference title between Delaware, 'Nova and UNH, barring no late-season upsets for the schools. Who would receive the Division 1-AA automatic playoff bid is unclear, but 'Nova must first defeat UNH. If not, the Cats may be shunned when the playoff field is announced. 'Nova indeed faces a major test and a must-win situation tomorrow.

A number of other sports teams at 'Nova are enjoying success similar to the much-publicized football team. The volleyball team currently stands at an amazing 26-2, already a club record for most wins in a season. The Cats hope to do damage at the Big East tournament this season and the future looks even brighter. Only one senior is on the roster, and the team possesses exceptional talent in the sophomore class, with all five players making an impact.

The field hockey and men's soccer teams also are hoping to capture Big East honors at their respective championships this weekend. The soccer team captured the final spot at the championships and will play top seeded Seton Hall tomorrow in its first postseason appearance since 1984.

Field hockey, which pulled off one of the conference's major upsets last year by winning the championship despite being the lowest seed, hope for deja vu this weekend after gaining a berth with an 8-7-1 overall record.

While the soccer and field hockey teams are aiming at conference crowns, the women's cross country team is looking for its third consecutive national championship and the preservation of a winning streak dating back to 1988. Fresh off a Big East title, the runners appear to be one of head coach Marty Stern's best teams.

The men's cross country team is enjoying similar success, garnering third in the Big East, a No. 30 ranking nationally and hoping to earn its first NCAA appearance since 1983. Stern, also the men's coach, has resurrected the program with exceptional talents like Terrence Mahon, the 1991 Big East Champion, and freshman Louie Quintana, a national high school champion. It may not be long before the men gain the same national honors as the women.

This is the final issue for the 1990-91 editorial board.

Students, alumni participate in Homecoming celebrations

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI

An estimated 15,000 to 20,000 alumni, friends and family returned to the University for Homecoming Weekend Nov. 8-10, said Robert J. Capone, executive director of the Alumni Association.

The Seventh Annual Jumbo Elliot Awards were presented at the Overbrook Golf Club Nov. 6. The event was sponsored by the Athletic department in cooperation with the Alumni office. Those honored were Sonia O'Sullivan, Class of 1991, who holds the world record in the 5,000 meter and Mark Groghan, also of the Class of 1991, an NCAA steeplechase champion. A Special Achievement Award went to Richard Jackman, a senior executive with the Sun Company.

The annual Homecoming Semiformal dance was held in the Jake Nevin Fieldhouse Nov. 8. The dance, sponsored by the Association of Commuting Students (ACS), featured music, dancing and hors d'oeuvres. The 12th Annual Alumni Medallion Dinner was also held Nov. 8. The awards were presented to those who have excelled in their fields of expertise. The Rev. Kail C. Ellis, O.S.A., and University President the Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., were in attendance. Entertainment was provided by the Villanova University Singers and the Women's Glee Club.

The Wildcat football team faced off against the University of New Hampshire and won 33-7.

"The guys that played in the New Hampshire game on Saturday should be applauded for their great performance," said freshman football player Jeremy Taylor.

At halftime, the Villanova band performed "Heat Wave" and the Alma Mater. The Homecoming King and Queen were also announced as Bill Clark and Kate Marley. They, along with their court, B.J. Hind, Mark Saad, Scott O'Neil, Tim Keppel, Jen Campbell, Karen Vonderschmalz, Karen Mohancheck and Diane McBride, attended the Homecoming dance held in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center from 9 p.m.-1 a.m.

An alumni postgame reception followed the game in the Jake Nevin Field House. It was estimated that close to 1,000 family members, friends, alumni and seniors attended. Entertainment was provided by the band.

Overall, there was a very strong response to Homecoming Weekend from the alumni, especially those who graduated one or two years ago, said Capone.

"It's always a good experience to come back. We always enjoy the enthusiastic quality of the students. I always get the feeling that Villanova continues to improve and improve," said Robert Forsyth, Class of 1951.

Religious group recruits students

By SINEAD QUINN
Senior Reporter

Many students have reported to University officials that they have been approached by a group that appears to be "practicing the techniques of a destructive cult," said Dr. Sandra Ellis-Killian, religious studies.

Two students have been baptized into the group, said Matt Fridley, who has been an evangelist for the Church of Christ for five years. Fridley said that "nothing weird is going on" and that the idea that they are a cult is "ridiculous." He is one of about 14 salaried evangelists in the Greater Philadelphia Church of Christ, which has about 300 members in the area.

The description of the group fit the criteria of a thought-reform destructive cult, according to the Rev. Jim McGuire, the Philadelphia diocesan representative for cult activity.

The University is sending out a letter warning students about recruiters from the Church of Christ who invite students to their Bible study group.

"Students have complained of being pestered by the group," said Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice president of Student Life. The University forbids any kind of solicitation on campus and as a result, has banned the recruiters from campus.

Fridley denied that they harass students. "Yes, we do actively seek people who want to do this," he said. If any students have felt pestered, it was because they did not make it clear that they were not interested, he said. He has made it clear to members that they should ask students if they want to be called back.

Affiliates of the Church of Christ have appeared at other campuses like Northwestern and Harvard universities, where the administrations have issued similar warnings to their students.

The group surfaced most recently at the University of Scranton. Someone familiar with the group called Sr. Beth Hassell, P.B.V.M. from Scranton's Campus Ministry to inform her that a church member had claimed to have made inroads into Villanova's campus, the Rev. Joseph S. Mostardi, O.S.A., said. The phone call was a part of the chain of events that led Mostardi to send a memo to University staff and faculty warning them of the presence of the group.

Members of the group have attempted to recruit students in Connelly Center and Bartley Hall; they have made phone calls and knocked on doors in nearly every residence hall. "They were also very active at the homecoming football game," Mostardi said. He added that he had to escort one of the recruiters from Stanford Hall.

Tuition increase proposed by Student Government for '93

By JEN BORDA
Staff Reporter

The Student Life Committee of the University Senate proposed a 4.2 percent tuition increase for the 1992-93 academic year to the Senate Budget Committee. According to the proposal report, tuition for next year would be $12, 285, raised from the current tuition of $11,790.

Arts and Sciences Senators Kathy Breen and Ken Batchelor drafted the proposal based on tuition expenses and financial aid offered at comparable colleges such as Georgetown University, Providence College and Boston College.

"The average college tuition and fees for those colleges which Villanova is competitive with is $12,786. Villanova University's tuition and fees is $11,660; this is .9 percent below the average," the tuition proposal states.

Because tuition is the University's principal source of revenue, it must compensate for any increases in expenses. For the 1991-92 academic year, tuition was increased 7.5 percent from the previous year.

> If there is an increase in tuition there should be an increase in aid. They should go hand in hand.
> Mark O'Rourke, president of Student Government

Alvin A. Clay, dean of the College of Commerce and Finance and chairman of the Senate Budget Committee, said, "The major increase will affect the incoming freshmen, so the increase for upper-classmen can be kept relative from year to year."

Two major factors considered in the proposal are enrollment and the recession. In the next few years, Villanova plans to lower enrollment from the present number of 6,400 undergraduates to 5,700, in order to retain the quality of classes and alleviate housing and parking problems. As enrollment drops, tuition must increase to compensate for reduced income.

Although the recession has not affected enrollment, the cost of living is lower than previous years. "We believe that the tuition can be increased above the inflation rate and still be inexpensive in comparison to the schools we compete against. This increase is less than last year's and years before, which correlates with the nationwide trend of private institution's tuition increases decreasing. We feel that it is a necessity to increase the tuition rate above the inflation rate," the report states.

Senate meets today

By KATE SZUMANSKI
Staff Reporter

The University Senate will conduct its third meeting of the academic year today at 4 p.m. in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center. The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, will give the annual State of the University Address.

"All faculty members were made aware of the meeting in the hopes they would spread the word to their students," said Student Government President Mark O'Rourke.

Location of the Senate meeting was changed from the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall to the Villanova Room in order to accommodate more people, O'Rourke said.

The Senate will review the Budget Committee's update report and the final report from the Planning and Priorities Committee, according to the Senate agenda.

The Student Life Committee will present its recommendation for the tuition increase to the Senate Budget Committee. Factors taken into account when compiling this report were "the recession, the rate of inflation and the increase in financial aid in proportion to the tuition increase," O'Rourke said.

The Social Action Committee is presenting a resolution to "urge that all written and oral communications of the administrators, faculty, staff and students .. respect the dignity and inherent worth of every individual."

MOSCOW

Russian President Boris N. Yeltsin backed down from his decision to impose a state of emergency in the Chechen-Ingush region Nov. 1, a rebellious Muslim enclave in southern Russia.

The Russian legislature voted overwhelmingly Nov. 11 not to approve the emergency measures Yeltsin had ordered to control political turmoil in Chechen-Ingush, where Russian officials contend that power has been illegitimately seized by Gen. Dzhokhar Dudayev.

Yeltsin's spokesman, Pavel I. Voshchanov, said the Russian president would now do everything he could to implement the legislature's resolution on the crisis, which calls for political methods, not the use of force, to solve the power struggle in the region.

In an interview with the Interfax news service, Voshchanov said Yeltsin would agree to negotiate with Dudayev, who is seeking greater autonomy and perhaps complete independence for Chechen-Ingush, one of 16 autonomous republics in Russia created to give large ethnic minorities more control over local affairs.

ZAGREB, Yugoslavia

Yugoslav gunners shelled the center of the port of Dubrovnik, killing at least 20 people, Croatian TV said. Thousands took to underground shelters as the shells hit targets such as tourist hotels and the gynecological and coronary wards of Dubrovnik's hospital, a city resident said.

To the east, troops advanced toward the center of Vukovar along the Danube River.

The two Croatian strongholds have great strategic importance in the four and a half-month civil war, which has claimed nearly 2,000 lives since Croatia declared independence June 25.

The fall of Vukovar, beseiged for nearly three months, would give the Serb-dominated forces near complete conltrol over eastern Croatia. Dubrovnik, under attack for five weeks, is a key Adriatic port and is an important cultural and historical site.

WASHINGTON, D.C.

House Democrats reached an agreement with the Bush administration on a new version of a bill to extend jobless payments to an estimated three million unemployed workers who have exhausted their regular benefits Nov. 12.

Barring a last-minute snag over the cost, the bill appears headed for a House vote tomorrow, followed by Senate action that would forward the measure to the President's desk by this weekend.

Rep. Dan Rostenkowski (D., Ill.), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, came up with a new approach designed to avoid a veto by President Bush and begin the extra payments by the end of the month.

Congressional sources said the bill would provide $5.1 billion in benefits to Americans who have exhausted their regular 26-week benefits and cannot find work because of the prolonged economic slide.

The added benefits would last for six, 13 or 20 weeks, depending on the level of unemployment in the state where the worker resides.

The maker of AIDS-fighting medication AZT announced Nov. 12 the development of an experimental drug to combat a type of pneumonia that is a leading cause of death among AIDS patients.

Burroughs Wellcome Co. said the Food and Drug Administration has authorized wider use of the drug, now called 566, for the treatment of Pneumocystis Carinii Pneumonia (PCP) for AIDS patients.

The company said the medicine should be available to the public for prescription use next year. Physicians can now obtain it for their patients for test purposes.

Academic grading policy could include minuses

By LARISA EPATKO
Assistant News Editor

A new grading system that will add minuses to letter grrades may be incorporated into the new student record system in the fall of 1993, said the Rev. William McGuire, O.S.A., dean of Enrollment Management.

Minus grades will give faculty members more levels in the grading process. Instead of having eight possible grades, the faculty will have 12, McGuire said.

Students and faculty raised the question of minus grades to the University Senate, who approved a proposal stating the grade change, said Mary Jane Morrissey, assistant registrar.

The minuses that will be added to grades A through D are not "retroactive," Morrissey said. Cumulative grade point averages will not change for students who have already been attending the university.

Dr. Harry Stracke, of the political science department and former University senator, said plus grades tend to contribute to "grade inflation." Statistics indicated a jump in the average grades awarded to students, he said.

Villanova is one of the only universities with plus grades and no minus grades, said Strack. "It is not customary to have one without the other," he added.

The University added pluses to the grading system 10 or 12 years ago, Strack said, adding that the question of having minuses had been around for 10 years.

> In a complex activity, such as grading [a student's ability], the more categories there are, the more accurate and precise the grades can be.
> Dr. Harry Strack, political science department

Strack was chairman of Academic Affairs when the Senate proposal became official.

Minus grades would have been instituted in 1992, but the vendor the University was using to build the new student record system went out of business. Finding a new vendor set the process back a year, said McGuire.

"In a complex activity, such as grading [a student's ability], the more categories there are, the more accurate and precise the grades can be," said Strack.

The four additional grade levels will halt grade inflation, which is costly to students who are solidly in a letter grade, Strack said.

The students who raised the question about changing the grading policy to include minuses were "strongly concerned" about entering law school, said McGuire. "They said law schools don't look at pluses or minuses. The students felt that with minuses, they had a better shot" at receiving the higher grade, he said.

McGuire also said that a number of people from other universities disagree with the idea of incorporating minuses into the grading system.

Ryan White's mom discusses AIDS

By MARY JANE MAHAN
Staff Reporter

Jeanne White, mother of hemophilliac Ryan White who died of AIDS (acquired immunodeficiency syndrome) last April, spoke in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center about her son's ordeal.

White was diagnosed at age 13 with the AIDS virus after he contracted it through a tainted blood sample in 1984.

The diagnosis caused panic in their hometown to the point of hatred and violence. The people were the victims of their own ignorance, because homosexuals and drug users were the only well known people who contracted AIDS at the time, said White.

White was not allowed back to school because of the fear of AIDS. It was the courts that returned him to the classroom, but the abuse reached such a height that the family moved to Cicero, Ind., where they were welcome.

Lack of education on the realities of AIDS was the reason her hometown deserted them. "I thought everyone knew as much about AIDS as I did, but I was wrong. People don't think this is their disease," she said. "AIDS doesn't pick you because of race, religion or affluence."

Mrs. White said that she opposses forced disclosure of AIDS but thinks everyone should practice safety procedures. White wants people to have the freedom to come out and say, "I have AIDS," without the stigma and threats Ryan experienced.

"Ryan isn't here but Magic [Jackson] is," White said. She supports Johnson because his announcement that he has the HIV (human immunodificiency virus) will help AIDS awareness and the people who have AIDS feel more comfortable about it.

She also explained that the Ryan White Care Bill passed in Congress helps take care of people who cannot get medical care and/or are in hospices. It is money that is being put into health care for a change.

"I think we've had a miracle in Ryan White because his spirit will go on forever," White said.

Economics majors to teach school children in area

By AMY DeMARCO

Eleven junior and senior University economics majors will participate in the Junior Achievement Program this semester to teach rudimentary business in Delaware Valley elementary schools. The "Business Basics" course is geared toward fifth and sixth grade students.

The purpose of the Junior Achievement Program is "to enlighten elementary students on the world of business and economic concepts," said Delaware County Coordinator Martin Jackson.

The students will not only learn about business but also gain a role model which will hopefully encourage students to stay in school, work hard and start thinking about future careers, Jackson said.

The Business Basics program teaches students about organize tion, management, production and marketing.

The program, established in 1980, has grown substantially in the past decade to include 250 franchises in the United States and 40 other countries involving over 1.2 million students each year.

Last year, the Delaware County division taught 4,415 elementary students in 168 classes with the number expected to increase to over 5,600 students this year, Jackson said.

Junior Achievement classes exist for middle and high school students that are taught by professional business consultants.

The Junior Achievement Program consists entirely of volunteers who give students the opportunity to work with young children, help develop communication skills and convey what they have learned to others, said Jackson.

Asian students form association

By WAYNE CRESKILL
Staff Reporter

To facilitate the growing Asian population at the University, co-presidents senior Stephen Pang and junior Ed Choi founded the Asian Student Association (ASA) this semester.

"Although many Asian students at Villanova feel strongly about their culture, they have found it difficult to retain their heritage and sense of unity," said Pang.

"This is my last year at 'Nova and basically I was tired of passing other Asian students on campus and not knowing them ... there are only a handful of Asian students on campus. There shouldn't be any reason why we don't know each other," he added.

Unlike the established academic Japanese and Chinese clubs on campus, the main focus of the A S A is to coordinate social events. The A S A modeled itself after clubs at other universities such as Drexel, Temple and the University of Pennsylvania and hope to schedule events with these colleges and others in the eastern region, said Pang.

Hunger Awareness Week to benefit Peruvian mission

By SONNY THOMPSON
Staff Reporter

The University's Campus Ministry Office will hold its 19th annual Hunger Awareness Week (HAW) from Nov. 17-24. Various events will be held to raise money for the Augustinian missions in Peru to help build an educational center there, said the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., of Peace and Justice Education.

This year's HAW committee is headed by Michelle Hicks, Jackson, Mike Adams and Laura Heitzmann.

"Our program is two-fold. It is not only to raise money, but to increase the awareness of students," Hicks said.

The activities will begin Nov. 17 with four masses in the Villanova Room of the Connelly Center at 4, 6, 8 and 10 p.m. The masses will focus on the topics of hunger and poverty.

The Run for Hunger will begin in front of Falvey Memorial Library at 3:30 p.m. Nov. 18. On Tuesday evening, Nov. 19, from 5 to 7 p.m. in the North Lounge of Dougherty Hall, students will be able to sample Third World food.

Volunteer Day, Nov. 20, will feature representatives from 25 to 30 volunteer groups in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center from 3 to 7 p.m. They will discuss their work and recruit seniors for work both in the United States and overseas.

Nov. 21 will be a day of fasting in all campus dining halls. Students are urged to give up their lunch and in return the University will donate $3 for each meal to the hunger fund. Also on Nov. 21 a lecture entitled "World Hunger: Ideas that Work" will be held at 4:30 p.m. in Room 110 of Bartley Hall with speaker Marc Cohen, research director of Bread for the World.

This non-profit lobbying organization seeks justice for the hungry through research and education.

Education tables will be set up to provide information on hunger from Monday through Friday, 10:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m.

A five-mile run will begin in the main lot across from the Jake Nevin Field House on Nov. 23. Hunger Awareness Week will conclude with liturgies Nov. 24 at 4, 6, 8 and 10 p.m. in the Villanova Room.

This year, a new faculty educational component was added to the week's agenda. The deans of the colleges of Arts and Sciences, Commerce and Finance, Engineering and Nursing will sponsor faculty seminars to draw attention to the curriculum development tasks that focus on Third World development issues.

Last year, HAW activities raised approximately $12,000 that supported the construction of a school in Mali, West Africa, Hicks said.

Students fight judicial board for their rights

By College Press Service

Students on a review board at the University of Minnesota said that the school sacrifices fairness for expediency, ignores constitutional rights of due process by giving one person the power of prosecutor, judge, jury and appeals judge, and ignores the constitutional protection against self-incrimination.

"To me, [these violations] sound like a good argument against having the university handle anything that isn't academic," said Jack Stecher, an economics graduate student serving on the committee.

Stecher is not alone in his thinking. For years, students, faculty, administrators and other scholars have disagreed on the issue of a university's right and power to prosecute criminal cases in the campus courts.

Universities' "determination to enforce this ... rests on the premise that colleges and universities have a jurisdiction over the lives of their students that is independent of the law of the land," writes John Roche, a former member of the Johnson administration, in a recent article in National Review.

"The notion that an aggrieved person believing him or herself the victim of a crime must 'keep the matter in the family' is a jurisprudential absurdity," he added.

On the opposite side of that argument are campus judicial administrators.

William Bracewell, the former president of the Association for Student Judicial Affairs and the current head of the Office of Judicial Programs at the University of Georgia, said universities justifiably have separate jurisdiction.

"Each one of those jurisdictions has a different interest to protect," Bracewell said. Each school, like each city and state, "has a set of regulations that are right for that campus, that are right for that community," he added.

Bracewell points to the issue of date rape as an example of why campuses need to address criminal charges in their judicial systems.

"If you talk to women, they don't want those men on campus. What if the woman has a class with the man who assaulted her? In some states, the law doesn't even include date rape" as a criminal offense, Bracewell said. "Will the institution defer to the state if the state isn't going to respond at all?"

Bracewell said schools need to address criminal complaints because they affect the university community in terms of campus safety and victims' rights to get an education without interference from the people who have committed criminal acts against them.

Others disagree with the campus system's ability to handle criminal cases.

"The goal of the campus judicial system is ... primarily to protect the interest of students. The criminal justice system focuses on punishing offenders," said Carol Bohmer, a sociology professor at Cornell University and a former attorney who is a national expert on date rape. She said that because schools try to afford equal protection to both the victim and the offender, punishments often do not fit the crimes.

One problem in any discussion of how campus judicial systems should operate is the fact that virtually no two systems are the same.

"You'll find that they are anything but uniform," says Randy Bezanson, Dean of the Washington and Lee School of Law and a national expert on constitutional law. "The larger universities have more elaborate processes. The smaller liberal arts schools are less elaborate and their systems are more widely varying because the whole process reflects traditions."

The systems that contrast most harshly are public and private, because public institutions must adhere to state and federal laws.

In September, Liberty University expelled three seniors for worshipping at the United Pentecostal Church, a violation of a school policy. Although the school held a hearing on the matter and granted the students appeals based on the school's rules, the students' First Amendment freedom of religion rights were ignored.

Because Liberty is a private school, it is not bound by the Constitution, so the freedom of religion element of the case was not relevant.

But in Minnesota's case, the allegations against the system, including a lack of a student's Fifth and 14th Amendment rights to due process — the right to trial by an impartial judge and jury — are worthy of investigation because the school is bound by the Constitution.

"The Constitution has a special bearing because we are a public university," Stecher said.

The Minnesota students said that the school's director of the Office of Judicial Affairs, Betty Hackett, has unilateral power over a student's fate.

"Say you get a letter accusing you of a crime," Stecher said. "You go see a counselor, who is Betty Hackett. You talk to her and she makes a recommendation. She then becomes the prosecutor of your case, which goes into a closed door hearing. She is not obligated to tell you during counseling that she will be prosecuting you."

Hackett, who did not return telephone calls to her office, told the Minnesota Daily that, "I wouldn't be here if I didn't think this was a fair system."

Currently, the committee reviewing the judicial system is writing two proposals for changing the system — one submitted by the students and faculty members, the other from the administration's members.

The privacy of campus judicial hearings is at issue at the University of Georgia. A student newspaper editor filed a complaint in Fulton County Court against the university, saying two incidents in which the school denied the newspaper access to hearings violated their First Amendment rights and the state's open records laws.

Red and Black editor Jennifer Squillante says the two hearings involved charges of hazing and underage drinking against two fraternities.

"Our contention is that educational records are not brought into play," Squillante said.

Lecture focuses on feminist ethics

By CHRISTA MRUZ
Staff Reporter

Dr. Sara Ruddick spoke Nov. 7 on "Peace and the Politics of Care," as part of the Feminist Ethics lecture series.

Ruddick, professor of philosophy at the New School of Social Research in Manhattan, N.Y., spoke about how people legitimize war and violence.

The major thrust of her argument lay on the "masculine" characteristics of war, Ruddick said. The "figure-heads" of war and the warriors themselves usually are men, so the war takes on masculine qualities, she added.

Feminine qualities are nurturing and care-giving, Ruddick said. Nurturers, even though they dislike violence, cater to violence and war through the way they support these acts.

Ruddick said the yellow ribbons used to symbolize the Desert Storm fighters were feminine. Yellow is a "feminine color" and by utilizing this color we are trying to legitimize war by giving it feminine characteristics, she said.

Ruddick did not say that all male qualities foster war or that all men cause wars. Rather she said that there is no such thing as a just war.

Ruddick is also the author of Maternal Thinking, the textbook for the course the Philosophy of Women.

Tuition

Another major concern of Student Government is the amount of financial aid available at the University. "If there is an increase in tuition, there should be an increase in financial aid. They should go hand in hand," said Mark O'Rourke, Student Government president.

George Walters, director of Financial Aid, said, "The increase in Villanova's need-based grant program was 39.7 percent." One of the factors being looked at along with the tuition increase this year is the increase in the aggregate need of the applicant population. In order to improve financial aid next year, "the University needs to provide support for current students as well as making offers to prospective students," he added.

The University also hopes to increase endowment funds to subsidize faculty and administration salaries and student aid. "There is a major fund drive going on this year for contributions. This will reduce the need for income on an annual basis in the future," Clay said.

Play censored for language

By College Press Service

Theater director David Brailow told the public relations department at McKendree College that an upcoming play entitled "Acts of Passion" would contain strong language.

Little did the associate professor of English realize that those words would spark a controversy that would catapult the 750-student campus into the national spotlight, leaving in its wake cries of censorship, disillusioned faculty members and angry students.

Some people at the church-affiliated college in Southern Illinois were stunned when President Gerrit Tenbrink first issued the statement, "This play conflicts with the college's mission statement to support Christian values." The president then banned the play, which Brailow was directing, from campus.

"Acts of Passion," which consists of three, one-act plays, was to be performed by a professional acting troupe that has been giving performances on the McKendree campus for years.

"The play is peppered with the f-word, and the s-word," said one school official, who admitted that he had not seen the play.

At first, it appeared the president had scant support. A number of faculty members and students accused the president of imposing his conservative moral views on the school.

The faculty voted 38-6 to censure his decision, and the Student Senate unanimously adopted a resolution saying the policy violated the First Amendment right to freedom of speech.

"In a liberal arts college, church or not related, censorship of theatrical productions is unacceptable because it limits students access to works of art and that runs contrary to the mission of a liberal arts college," said Brailow, adding that he resigned as theater director in protest of the president's actions.

However, the Board of Trustees supported Tenbrink in banning the play. A special committee has been established that will review the president's new directive prohibiting the use of profane and vulgar language in any cultural production sponsored by the college.

"The faculty and the president are really at odds over this," said Brailow. "The church connection is important, but it is not fundamentalist. In fact, 60 percent of our students are Catholics." McKendree College is affiliated with the United Methodist Church.

Religious group

"We expect to be kicked out of a Catholic campus, we disagree about our faiths. We are not ecumenical," said Fridley. He said that he has come to expect to be persecuted because people have heard bad reports and false accusations about the group.

Their method of recruitment is to introduce themselves to students and offer friendship. Once they start a conversation with a student they claim to have similar interests. They always try to make a connection with a student whether it be a true connection or not, Mostardi said.

"We don't try to recruit members in the strange sense of the word; we believe that we are making disciples. We introduce people to the Bible through personal interaction," Fridley said. "All making a disciple means is loving someone," he said.

> I know I will be accused of narrowmindedness, but Jesus taught people that the way to God was was a narrow road and the gate is small . . . it is a broad road that leads to destruction.
> Matt Fridley,
> Church of Christ evangelist

"I know that I will be accused of narrow mindedness but Jesus taught people that the way to God was a narrow road and the gate is small, and it is a broad road that leads to destruction and the gate is wide," Fridley said.

Fridley said that their faith is based on the Bible and nothing else with no interpretation. For instance, the group is not a democracy and women are not allowed to be evangelists, he said. The group has midweek and Sunday services as well as regular Bible study sessions.

The amount of time and money members give to the Church is completely up to what they have "decided in their hearts," he said. The Church is financed completely by its members, he said.

"We are not concerned with their practice of faith but the drastic change of behavior," Mostardi said. He mentioned one student whose roommate's behavior changed radically. "She withdrew from her sorority, her friends and her activities," he said.

Right now it is the friends and roommates of church inductees that are having difficulty dealing with the effect of their friends' new lifestyle, students have said.

One student, whose friend has become involved in the group, said that all of her friend's former beliefs are gone. "There's nothing anyone can do for her," she said. The student said that when they discuss the group the girl becomes defensive and patronizing. "She tries to convince us that what we think is wrong," she said.

Ridley likened this change of behavior to the story of Legion. He said that just as Jesus drove the demons out of Legion and into 3,000 pigs, the Church drives the demons out of its members. Of course people were shocked and frightened by the change in Legion, he said.

One Student's Experience

Joe Sweeney, a sophomore physics major, after attending meetings and parties sponsored by the Church of Christ, became concerned about the nature of the group and went to the administration.

He said that his first impression of the group was that they were very pleasant and warm. "There was no indication of any sort of religious affiliation," he said.

After the party, one of the group's leaders continued to call him and ask him to go to church. Sweeney finally went to the baptism of his friend who was completely immersed in a bathtub as her induction into the church.

Throughout his affiliation with the group, he said that he asked questions that seemed to disturb the leaders. "Freedom of thought was strongly disapproved of. They stressed a word-for-word reading of the Bible. No interpretation or traditions are considered," Sweeney said.

"Joe is not for this Church. He has always had deep, evil suspicions of the group," Fridley said. He said that he kept Sweeney away from other members in the group because they were "fragile in their spirituality."

Fridley denied that the group uses such tactics and has never drugged the food at their functions. He also stressed that members are free to choose how much time they spend on Bible study.

Dear Villanovan:

A group calling itself "The Church of Christ" appears to have targeted our campus for recruitment. This group has at least four non-Villanovans coming on to campus to entice unsuspecting students to attend "Bible Study." Their method typically is to approach students who are alone or appear vulnerable and proffer them friendship and companionship. From such innocent beginnings a few students have completely given themselves over to the direction of these recruiters, leaving behind old friendships, family, and former values.

The New York Times has recently reported the emergence of cult-like groups at Northwestern, Harvard, Tufts, and Boston Universities. Marquette University has also had activity on its campus. Groups of this nature are very sophisticated using highly effective psychological techniques to seduce recruits into joining them. Typically they continue to pester recruits until they agree to attend a meeting. Once a person shows any interest the recruiter monopolizes their free time with stronger enticements to join the group. Their tenets direct the person away from former friends and supportive systems towards the new group. Questioning and doubt are discouraged. Time demands are made to attend meetings -- "baptism" into these groups may take place after just a few weeks of involvement.

Villanova University stands for and embraces religious freedom. The indoctrination tactics of these groups, however, are far different from those of organized religions. In our opinion, their approaches are destructive of truly authentic religious experiences and a violation of the principle of religious freedom.

Since the University forbids any kind of solicitation activity on its campus and several students have complained, these outside recruiters will be escorted off campus when they are discovered. Should you be pestered by any recruiter simply inform the Office of Public Safety (527-1405) or tell a Public Safety Officer about it. It would also be helpful to let the Campus Ministry staff or the Dean of Students know about any behavior by this group or any similar group that you find annoying.

The Student Life and Campus Ministry staffs are alarmed by the intentions and tactics of this group. Much harm has been done on other campuses by coercive organizations. Our community needs to be aware of the potential danger here.

Professor explains "cult" behaviors and dangers

By SINEAD QUINN
Senior Reporter

The primary difference between a cult and organized religion is not their doctrine or beliefs but the means by which they recruit and retain members, said Dr. Sandra Ellis-Killian, religious studies. Ellis-Killian is an expert on the methods and the nature of cults and is a deprogrammer. She has met with the administration as well as resident assistants to inform them about cults.

Cults use coercive persuasion, which is different from simple manipulation and persuasion; it constitutes psychological coercion andthought reform, she said.

She said that it is often difficult to prove that their subtle yet intense methods are coercive because victims feel as if they have made a free choice. Cults are too sophisticated and savvy to use overt, easily detectable forms of persuasion such as force or drugs.

Cults can gain sympathy by claiming that they are a persecuted religious minority and thus people are reluctant to criticize the group, Ellis-Killian said. But cults are not the same as organized religion because members of an organized religion have exercised their right to make a conscious choice to believe in that faith. "Cults systematically violate the conditions for free thought," she said.

"The net effect is that victims retain the illusion that free will was used," she said.

It is this method that is being persecuted and not the doctrine. "Cults are not just a nuisance like street corner evangelists because a person has the right to accept or reject what the evangelist says," Ellis-Killian said. Cults subvert a person's power to make that choice.

"Cults create an intolerant group that inspires a reaction of intolerance," she said. Unlike organized religion, cults fear and reject questioning or critical analysis of their doctrine. "They equate doubt with guilt," she said.

The Martin Luther King Jr. Celebration Day Committee is sponsoring a contest for a t-shirt and logo design. Entries must be submitted to Jeaneen in the Center for Peace and Justice Education by Dec. 1, 1991. The winning entry should be multi-colored and submitted on a plain white sheet of paper. A $25 cash prize and t-shirt will be awarded.

Beware of cults bearing promises

We always hear the warnings that Villanova is sheltered from the real world, that students must be cautious because of the false sense of security that develops on a suburban campus. We usually only take notice when a situation affects us personally, or the circumstance is so vivid that it makes the front page of the Villanovan. But what if, just imagine what if, a destructive agent was so sneaky that you didn't even know you were personally being affected. A destructive cult can affect you in such a way, that you would not even know it had you until it was too late.

What is a destructive cult? When we say destructive, we do not mean violent necessarily. A destructive cult uses various techniques of coercive persuasion and exploitation to overtake their victims' decision-making capacity.

The problem is that at face value a destructive cult could be defined as just another religious group professing an evangelical message. But if you look a little deeper, you will see something different. Destructive cults usually have certain distinctions that separate them from legitimate religious groups.

For instance, what is in question is not the content of their belief, but the means by which they recruit and retain members.

Cults demand total allegiance, loyalty and obedience as well as a deep emotional dependence of followers. You may not realize how dependent you are on the group.

By capitalizing on one of your assets, a cult member may attempt to gain your trust and explot your weaknesses. They are deceptive in their recruiting.

The destructive cult will attempt to discredit and denounce other religions as false or evil. The major difference between a cult and a legitimate religion is that the cult does not allow choice. A destructive cult will not consider other opinions in the search for truth. Anything different from their biblical teachings is evil; only those believing in their teachings will be "saved."

Christian theology respects the existence of other religions and encourages the debate and comparisons different religious beliefs and interpretations as a means of achieving the truth. A university works in a similar fashion; a group of different people come together in a community to debate and learn from each other's differences. But, in order for constructive debate to occur, both sides must admit to limited knowledge as a characteristic of being human. A destructive cult refuses to respect other religions as viable because they equate question or doubt with sin.

One tactic of thought reform that cults practice is coercive persuasion. Isolation is often practiced, and victims are isolated from contact with opposing viewpoints. This may occur by keeping recruits out until early in the morning. Peer group pressure may be used where everyone in the cult acts totally convinced of their beliefs and causes a victim to doubt their own conviction. Victims may be maneuvered into divulging their innermost secrets through confession. By knowing the weaknesses of their members, the cult is able to keep their members loyal through guilt.

Reports from around campus have reached the administration from students complaining that their roommates are acting different. Different variants of the above techniques have been documented in the reports. In each incident, the students have been meeting with the Greater Philadelphia Church of Christ Bible group off campus.

Beware of strangers; even the most intelligent people can be victims of cults because cults practice sneaky and manipulative tactics. Remember legitimate religion must be chosen, not forced on its followers.

Villanova community thanked

To the Editor:

I want to take this time to express my thanks to the many people at Villanova who worked so hard on behalf of my candidacy for the Township Commission. To single out individuals and groups is always unwise due to the fear of missing someone, but the work of John Sullivan was tireless and his efforts at registering students, heightening awareness and getting students to vote was extraordinary.

In addition, the coverage of our efforts and the endorsement by the Villanovan was rewarding. Unfortunately, our effort fell just short, but the effort was there and it did give the University community a cause to rally around this fall.

I hope the students will not become discouraged but will make another effort in the future when an election occurs, and I hope you will utilize your current commissioner when you have legitimate problems you would like to see solved. Again, my thanks to all of you. Your efforts were sincerely appreciated.

To the Editor:

The Villanova chapter of the Student Nurses Association of Pennsylvania (SNAP) sponsored a benefit dance Oct. 11 to raise money for the Ronald McDonald Camp, a camp for children with cancer. The camp, run by the Children's Hospital of Philadelphia and the Ronald McDonald House, is held for one week in August in the Poconos. The camp began in 1985 with only 35 campers. This year, 135 campers attended the camp.

The week-long camp, which runs at a rate of $400 per camper, is cost free to those who attend. The funds for the camp come from various resources, usually in the form of donations.

Last May, Villanova's SNAP decided to hold a benefit dance for this camp with a goal set to sponsor two children ($800). Tickets, sold for $4 each, were sold before the dance as well as at the door. Though many students said they would not be able to attend the dance, they bought tickets anyway.

The concern Villanova students have for others was exemplified during this fundraiser. The Villanova SNAP chapter was able to raise over $800, enabling two young children with cancer to experience a very special week at the camp next year.

Thank you to the students who contributed to this very meaningful cause. As a counselor at the camp as well as a former camper, I know the value of being able to partake in such an important and memorable experience.

Men are to blame

To the Editor:

Many thanks to the Villanovan and Maria Lovett for last week's comprehensive set of articles pertaining to the subject of eating disorders. The articles dealt with all aspects of anorexia and bulimia, including physical and emotional stress resulting from the sicknesses. However, Lovett does not elaborate on the most obvious cause of eating disorders in women, men.

She writes, "Society needs to stop evaluating a person's sense of beauty, happiness and fulfillment by their body size." Although it is not true in all cases, I think men mainly comprise the "society" of which she writes. Men are the ones who wear "No Fat Chicks" shirts and who would not give a passing glance to a woman who was the least bit overweight. Most likely, men are behind the advertising that exploits women with perfect bodies and portrays thinness as desirable.

Also, I am certain that a male employer would be more prone to hire the more attractive, thin female applicant for a particular position. Perhaps only this half of society leads women to believe that thin is better and, therefore, causes excessive dieting and eating disorders.

I suppose that all I have stated could be reversed by arguing the point that women cause eating disorders in men, but in most cases men diet for athletic reasons and the like.

If he has not already done so, I suggest that any man reading this letter go find a copy of the Nov. 8 issue of the Villanovan and read pages 17 and 18. Perhaps he will gain a sense of the stress that females with eating disorders encounter and then think twice about snickering the next time he sees an overweight woman.

In the recent debates on multiculturalism in the Villanovan and across the country, the arguments against multiculturalism seem to contain two premises. First, by bringing attention to racial and cultural differences, inequities will naturally occur and, second, that Western and American societies possess some uncanny, mythical qualities allowing them to completely form superior cultures from within a vacuum. These arguments are the products of a knee jerk and siege mentality that has replaced communism with "political correctness" as the current menace to America. The Brown Scare has replaced the Red Scare.

The alleged voter intimidation of Villanova students by Radnor polling authorities and voters illustrates the fact that particular groups, though American, are continually shut out of power.

Racial and cultural differences have historically been used to justify economic and political inequities after the fact. In other words, racism and sexism were not the prime motivations in the creation of an unequal political economy. They just provided convenient justifications for inequities. For example, Native Americans and poor Europeans were used in colonial America to work as indentured servants on plantations.

However, Native Americans died from European diseases and poor Europeans were needed to provide labor for Europe's new industrial economy. Europeans were familiar with African slavery and took advantage of an existing slave trade in West Africa. African slaves provided cheap, abundant and consistent labor (indentured servants had to be freed, slaves did not). Racial differences were employed as justification of slavery only after the institution of slavery had been well established. Differences in race and culture were used as excuses to the seizure of Native American land and the genocide of the Native American countries. Sexual differences were employed as excuses to keep women in the lower realms of the economy.

The movement of these historically marginalized groups to focus upon such distinctions is not intended to foster further separation. Rather they seek to illuminate and express the pride in knowing one's culture. The effort is to take the differences upon which oppression is based and show that such differences do not inherently create segregation and inequity. By embracing cultural identity these groups demonstrate that such differences should not be a source of shame but rather a significant part of their heritage. Why are so many people so afraid of this movement?

Some people subscribe to the myth that America currently does and always has treated its people with utmost egalitarianism. Need they be reminded of the products of Jacksonian Democracy which extended the right to political participation to property-less white men? Marginalized groups had to fight to gain a legal voice in the political economy of the United States. The 15th, 19th and 26th Amendments extended the right of political participation to African Americans, women and those over 18 respectively. Just last year, civil rights were legally extended to the handicapped. Initially these rights were intended exclusively for white men of property, no one else. Full participation was denied to Americans on the basis of race, sex and class. Though the constitution may contain universal truths, its application has historically left out particular groups.

The alleged voter intimidation of Villanova students by Radnor's polling authorities and voter illustrates the fact that particular groups, though American, are continually shut out of power.

In regards to European history, it is unrealistic to assume that ancient culture developed in a vacuum. The entire Mediterranean region was truly cosmopolitan. Cultures in the region constantly traded and exchanged ideas, goods and information with each other. Is it any wonder that our beloved St. Augustine was African? The founder of Christianity was Jewish and semitic? Our knowledge of the Greeks came from Muslims. Much of our Western civilization owes much of its existence to the contributions of non-Western civilizations.

However, it was European mercantilism and capitalism that led to colonization. It was not the spirit of discovery, but the search for new markets and more profits that motivated European colonization. Thus, it can be argued that aggressive economics and not cultural or technical superiority led to European domination.

While this argument may inspire some to research history further, many continue to shut out any arguments or evidence that challenge European and white American superiority. Some see the expression of cultural and racial identity as a threat to the "American" way of life. American history is a history of many peoples and their experiences. To assert that there is only one true mainstream brand of American culture is to trivialize the experiences, contributions and cultures of generations of Americans.

COMMENTARY

What is the traditional family?

By ELLEN GOODMAN

We are talking about sneakers. Big sneakers. Size-12 sneakers. The new ones that are currently located on my friend's son's feet currently located on a high school floor.

The sneakers, which loom even larger than a size-12 in her mind's eye, came into her life all pumped up with hostility. Parent and child had wrangled over them for weeks.

This woman did not approve of the purchase. She and her husband regard $150 sneakers as proof of warped values, rip-off materialism, not to mention the decline and fall of Western civilization. Her son regards them as a necessity, an object of desire, proof of his need to make his own choices.

At the end of the family wrangling, the boy played his trump card or, more specifically, his paycheck. This is what he said, "I'll use my own money." He went into the store with a portion of his summer earnings and walked out with scientifically designed, engineered and marketed ego-building shoes.

The woman and her husband were silenced by his declaration. And bothered by it.

This is what we talk about in the shadow of these sneakers, this woman and I, our parents, ourselves, our children. Money, independence and family.

Our parents who were young during the Depression used to bring money home, put money on the table. Those were the expressions they used. The assumption was that whatever they earned went into the family pot for distribution. Little went directly to their own pockets.

Now half of a century later, teenagers earn "their own money." They are much less likely to "bring it home." In some families, that money may ease pressure on the family budget. In others it may be designated for college as well as compact discs and sneakers. But it is usually described and circumscribed as "theirs," to do with as they will.

Immigrant families still seem to pool their resources. But American parents who depend on a teenager's earnings for groceries or rent are more likely to feel ashamed of themselves than proud of their children.

Increasingly each generation is on its own, liberated and isolated in and by the economy. We appear less like a permanent family unit than like temporarily connected individuals, currently cohabitating.

Is this an economic piece of the heralded breakdown of the American family? My friend thinks so.

We count the many ways in which the marketplace treats us as individuals rather than members of families. Most adults are employed on our own as workers who now earn single wages, not family wages. We are subdivided as consumers with separate wants — sneakers and Walkmen — not shared needs. Even pre-schoolers have their Saturday morning TV market.

Increasingly each generation is on its own, liberated and isolated in and by the economy. We appear less like a permanent family unit than like temporarily connected individuals, currently cohabiting.

It happens up and down the age spectrum. On the turnpike this summer, I passed an elderly couple in a car decorated with a bumper sticker that read, "If you don't go first class, your children will." My friend remembers laughing at a boat named "My Children's Inheritance."

We both know parents of our age wrestling with the costs of college. Should they borrow money on their house or have their children borrow? Should they invest in their children's future or their old age? Will helping their dependents leave them dependent?

What do they want/expect of their children later in life? The assumptions of family, I will raise you and you will care for me, have been replaced by the assumptions of independence. A reluctance to ask, a fear of needing.

Even divorce laws are now infused by the idea that husband and wife are separate economic units. The goal is to achieve independence, self-sufficiency as quickly as possible.

My friend's paycheck is, of course, not entirely her own, nor is her husband. It is owned by the bank, the supermarket, credit card companies, the whole catastrophe, as Zorba might describe it. They do not ask their children to pay room and board, although in rancorous wrangling over these shoes, an ugly reference was made to this expense.

But in the aftermath of the sneaker affair, her family has done a great deal of thinking about money earned and shared. The pros and cons of our famed American self-reliance. About economic rights that belong to an individual and responsibilities that belong to a family.

This is not a simple talk. The mess of economics and emotions do not lend themselves to a bottom line. But this is what my friend has learned: It has become far too easy to run away from family in a pair of $150 sneakers.

Lloyd deserves respect

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to the cheap shots aimed at Lloyd Mumford in more than one edition of the Villanovan. It is evident to us that he was dismissed from the school, but do those of us who were close to him have to be antagonized each week by weak attempts of humor?

Lloyd Mumford left behind him at Villanova a lot of friends and a lot of people who cared about him. Is it necessary or even fair for those people to see their old classmate and friend being made a fool of at the expense of a little laughter? We are talking about a real person with a sad situation, not just a fictional character.

Not only are you hurting someone who was once part of this so-called "Villanova family," but you are also hurting those of us he left behind. The same person we all cheered for one year ago is the same person you are ridiculing today. Is this what Villanova pride is all about?

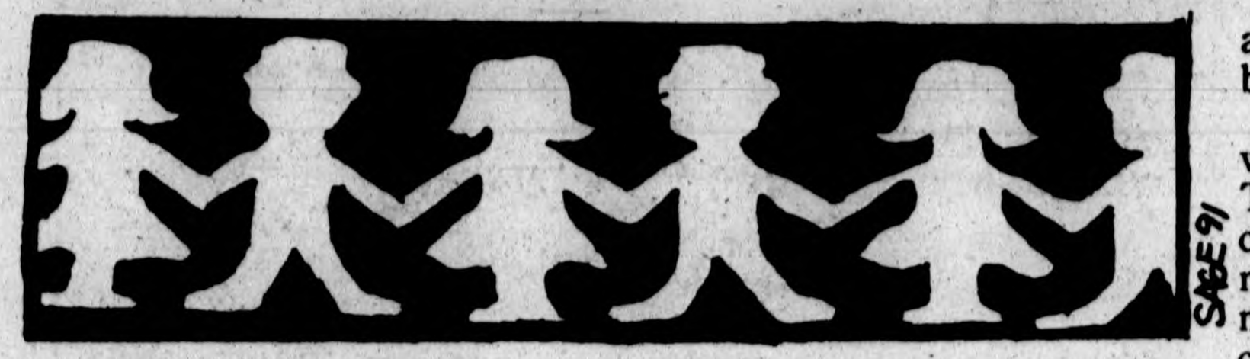
Child victims suffer from the AIDS virus



By MAUREEN MEYER
Staff Reporter

The recent announcement by basketball star Magic Johnson that he has tested positive for the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) has suddenly brought the topic of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) back into the immediate attention and concern of the public. Coincidentally, Student Programming Council (SPC) Lectures Committee addressed this issue with a lecture by Jeanne White titled "The Legacy of Ryan White" Monday, Nov. 11. This lecture dealt with a unique aspect within the problem of AIDS, children with AIDS.

Sometimes people tend to think that only male homosexuals and intravenous drug users can get AIDS, but that is not the case at all. Children are not a high-risk group, but that does not mean that children do not get AIDS. In fact, between 1981 and 1988, more than 750 cases were diagnosed in the United States, with that number almost doubling in the year between 1987 and 1988.

Most infants born with AIDS will die before their third birthday. The median life expectancy of a child diagnosed with AIDS is only nine months. These statistics are made worse by the fact that in children even the initial diagnosis of the disease is difficult.

Infants usually test positive for HIV antibodies at birth since these antibodies are freely transmitted in the womb from mother to child. Actual transmission of the HIV antibodies occurs only in about one-half of the cases. The problem in diagnosis arises because up to 15 months may pass before it can be determined whether or not the child has produced his or her own antibodies, indicating the presence of the disease.

The symptoms of AIDS in children are often different from those commonly found in adults and are more difficult to recognize. Even healthy children are relatively likely to catch recurrent bacterial infections. In adults these infections are somewhat uncommon and can clue the doctor in to the possibility of AIDS, but in children they are perfectly normal.

The drug AZT has helped limit the spread of the AIDS virus in adults, though sometimes with serious side effects. It is still being tested for use on children. Preliminary test results are very positive for drastic reductions in the symptoms and severity of the disease. It is possible that when it is given to newborns, AZT might even be able to stop the spread of the virus completely. There is even some hope that in the future the drug may be administered to babies while they are still in the womb.

AIDS also poses a significant threat to the teenage population, especially since adolescence is often the period during which sexual and drug activities begin. As of yet, most AIDS research targets young children or adults, but unique social, psychological and biological factors prevent adolescents from fitting into either one of these categories. The population between ages 13 and 21 have a great need for easily-accessible counseling, testing and treatment. These services do not yet exist on a wide-scale basis, and even when they are available,

Alumni office caters to grads

By PEGGY AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

Homecoming Weekend has come and gone and it was once again a wonderful success. Over 15,000 alumni, parents and friends returned to a familiar place where many memories are stored. The four years spent at Villanova are full of activity. The real world anxiously awaits us and time moves quickly in the hustle and bustle of everyday life. Everyone likes to return to their roots, their alma mater and the memories of their college days. What everyone might not realize is that when the big game is over and visitors return home, the Alumni Association continues working year round to keep Alumni in touch with Villanova.

There have been 60,000 graduates from Villanova since its doors first opened. Fifty percent of the living alumni have graduataed since 1973, and each year more and more people are anxious to travel back to "Wildcat Country." The Alumni Association maintains records on all 60,000 alumni, and through events such as Homecoming, try to create a comfortable atmosphere for them to return.

The Alumni Office is a place where past students can voice concerns and make contacts. A newspaper called "The Spires" is published quarterly, keeping former Villanovans aware of what is going on at the University and with fellow alumni. The association works with Alumni clubs around the country and the world with activities such as an admissions networking program and a job placement program. A program called Villanova Alumni Lending Undergraduate Experience is one that many Villanova students will take advantage of during Christmas break. Students will be able to observe various careers in action to help them decide on their field of interest. Students can speak to Nancy Dudek in the Career Planning and Placement Center to get more information on this program.

> Everyone likes to return to their roots, their alma mater and the memories of their college days.

In addition to Homecoming Weekend, the association sponsors a "Reunion Weekend" in June inviting all classes to return. Five-, 10- and 25-year graduates are the focus of this weekend.

On campus the association is represented in the Villanova Senate. It is also working with the music department in presenting the DePasquale Quartet concert series.

Villanova has just incorporated the Alumni Association. This will help to solidify it and will also provide a sense of continuity. Joseph C. Hare, class of '72 is the immediate past president of the Alumni Association. "The Alumni Association is growing rapidly and is undertaking new and more dynamic responsibilities as a full participant in the life of Villanova. This is really what the association is all about. We look forward to opportunities like Homecoming, Reunions and other special Alumni events on campus to continue to participate in activities and support the University in any way we can," said Hare.

Alumni response is indeed growing — more Villanovans are coming back each year, and the association is continually working to improve. "We are the only group on campus who deal vertically and horizontally with alumni, students, administration, faculty, staff, parents and friends on a consistent and daily basis which is important. We try to do it in the best Villanova fashion. The alumni considers our strongest resource the student body," said Alumni Director Robert Capone.

Meet William McGuire, O.S.A. dean Enrollment Management

To many of those who visit Kennedy Hall's bookstore and mailroom, the offices on the second floor are part of an unknown world. However, in one of the offices, there is a man who not only has the job of establishing policies for admission, financial aid and the registrar, but who has also been a major part of Villanova for 13 years. The Rev. William McGuire, O.S.A., is an alumnus whose position for the past two years has been dean of Enrollment.

McGuire plays a distinct role in the Villanova community through the admissions process. It is he who "orchestrates the proper quality and quantity of undergraduate enrollment."

For the past 13 years, he has been the assistant dean of Admissions and Liberal Arts and the assistant athletic director. "Knowing the various functions of Villanova is an advantage to keeping one's vision wide open to multiple components of the school, and seeing how everything works together to be a successful university."

McGuire grew up in Washington, D.C., where he attended Archbishop Carroll High School and then continued on to Villanova, from which he graduated in 1962. It was at Archbishop Carroll that McGuire first felt he wanted to become part of the Augustinian community. At Carroll, there were 36 Augustinians teaching, and that enabled him to get to know what they were about and what their life was like. "I felt that I could best help others by joining the Augustinian order, as well as serving God and saving my soul in the process." Following Villanova, he did his graduate work in theology.

Deciding to join the priesthood was not McGuire's lifelong goal. He planned on becoming an accountant. Still, he put to use all of his knowledge and became treasurer at Monsignor Bonner High School in Philadelphia before he came to work at Villanova. Not only was he able to become an Augustinian, but he was also able to teach and work in a field that he enjoyed.

Coming to Villanova as an alumni was a welcome change for McGuire. He lived in Austin Hall for nine years, "a delightful place to live." There, students took advantage of his strong point, which is his ability to listen to students' problems because of his understanding nature. He still keeps in contact with many of his old residents who have graduated.

"Living in Austin Hall was the highlight of my life," McGuire said. "We had a wonderful time together. If you have a healthy dorm life as well as an excellent education, it balances out into a beneficial college experience," said McGuire. Presently, Father McGuire resides off-campus, in nearby Villanova.

The daily challenges at Villanova for McGuire make him very

"Oprah's" psychic is a hoax

Courtesy College Press Service

Students at colleges in the Northeast got more than the traditional Halloween scare this year because of a rumor predicting a mass murder on one of their campuses.

Most breathed a bit easier when the first of November dawned and brought the death of the false prediction.

Students at Syracuse University, Franklin Pierce College, the University of Massachusetts, Holy Cross, Boston College and Harvard all had heard the story — that a psychic on the "Oprah Winfrey Show" predicted the Halloween massacre on a campus with an L- or T-shaped building overlooking a lake or a cemetery.

According to the rumor, 16th-century astrologer Nostradamus originally predicted the killings.

A spokeswoman for "Oprah" says no psychic made an appearance on the show and made the prediction. She added that dozens of people had called about it.

Days before Halloween, the Harvard Crimson ran a story about the rumor, quoting several students who said they were a little anxious, but not really worried.

Murder prediction is voice from the past

Say, did you hear about that psychic on "Oprah?" Did you hear that rumor about a mass murder on a college campus on Halloween? Hey, a rumor is a dangerous thing. Nine years ago, a rumor swept through campus and scared some residents out of their minds and even out of their dorms. Supposedly, a psychic on the "Merv Griffin Show" predicted that a murder would occur on a campus much like Villanova's, in a dorm much like St. Rita's. This year, it seems the rumor was dug up again once again.

By KIM RUSHTON and MARY STEPHENSON
Reprinted from the Nov. 5, 1982 issue of the Villanovan

A widely circulated rumor purporting a mass murder to be held at Villanova caused a number of students to leave campus for the weekend, despite increased security.

According to the rumors, a psychic reportedly seen on the "Merv Griffin Show" predicted that a mass murder was to be committed in a single-sex dormitory overlooking a graveyard at an eastern Catholic university on Halloween night.

St. Rita's Hall fits this description.

Dr. Richard Neville, vice president of Student Life, investigated the rumor by calling WPVI-TV in Philadelphia, and was subsequently referred to a producer of the "Merv Griffin Show." Neville received completely negative replies in his inquiries.

Alumni return for Homecoming

By GRETCHEN FISHER
Staff Reporter

Homecoming Weekend has always been a time when alumni of all ages travel back to Villanova to see how their alma mater has changed and to relive their college days for a brief time. This year proved no exception as hundreds of cars could be seen Nov. 9, packed into every available parking place near the football field.

The alumni traveled from many different states to partake in Homecoming Weekend. The football game was well worth the time spent traveling, with a resounding 33-7 victory by Villanova over the University of New Hampshire.

When asked of his fondest memory of his days at Villanova, Jim McKeon, a Villanova graduate and presently a lawyer in Kinnelon, N.J., said he remembered the great times he had in his fraternity, Delta Pi Epsilon, which no longer has a chapter at Villanova.

John Lloyd, a 1973 graduate of Villanova, now lives in Rosemont and works with the Philadelphia Investment Company's Department of Insurance, recalls his most vivid memory as the 1969 basketball game against St. Bonaventure. Lloyd remembers the excitement of the game and the thrill of Villanova's two point win over second ranked St. Bonaventure, when Villanova was not even in the Top 20 that year.

> It is a comfort for current Villanova students to know that Homecoming will give them the chance to remain a part of the Villanova community long after graduation.

Scott Christian, a 1968 graduate of Villanova and currently employed with the Federal Bureau of Investigation, traveled all the way from Dumfries, Virginia, to take part in the festivities. This weekend was an especially momentous one for Christian since it was the first time he had attended a game since graduation. He recalls the good times with good friends he had at Villanova and the remarkable spirit of the school as his fonndest memories. His only regret was that Villanova was not fully co-ed until after he graduated.

Homecoming weekend gives alumni and future graduates, both integral parts of Villanova, the chance to come together to support their alma mater: the former in remembering and cherishing the memories they hold, the latter in creating memories that will last a lifetime. It is a comfort for current Villanova students to know that Homecoming will give them a chance to remain a part of the Villanova community long after graduation.

there is still a question of confidentiality and notification of parents.

The topic of the occurrence of AIDS in teenagers was recently addressed on the ABC television series "Life Goes On." Becca, played by Kellie Martin, became interested in Jesse, actor Chad Lowe, only to find out that he had tested positive for the presence of HIV.

> Children are not a high-risk group, but that does not mean children do not get AIDS.

Recent publicity such as this has alerted doctors and researchers to the growing problems of both children and adolescents with the AIDS virus. An increasing amount of research is being done for these age groups in particular. The more research that is done, the sooner answers will be found.

happy with his life. "My job and my interaction with the students is enjoyable and fulfilling. As a result, the challenge of my job is never boring since new student ideas pass through every day." He loves being a part of the Catholic education system and learning new things through the eyes of the youth.

Prediction haunts collegians

"We found that the rumor had no basis in fact," said Neville. According to Sgt. Harrity, acting head of security, there were 15 extra security guards on campus Sunday night, with fewer additional guards on Friday and Saturday.

Harrity reported that the Radnor police had been receiving calls from parents and that they were "standing by to help."

"We had two men at either end of St. Rita's. We had no incidents at all that evening. All we did was beef up our security," commented Harrity.

According to Neville, it was not the rumor itself that caused the alarm in the students, but the fact that some psychopath would take it into his mind to carry out the rumor.

"You need to respond to the rumor whether it is true or not. We need to respond to the student's emotional state. The more publicity a thing like this gets, the more problems that arise," commented Neville.

"People will believe this type of thing — they do not question the source of the rumor if they heard it from a close friend. In addition, the more details a rumor has, the more weight it carries, added Neville.

> According to the rumors, a psychic reportedly seen on the "Merv Griffin Show" predicted that a mass murder was to be committed in a single-sex dormitory . . .

Providence College, as well as Holy Cross College, were affected by the rumor, according to Neville.

St. Rita's Resident Assistant, Margie Nardone, estimated that approximately 10 out of 52 girls remained in St. Rita's for the weekend.

Janeen Sokusky, a senior St. Rita's resident, commented that, "When we first heard about it we weren't scared because it was only a rumor. Then, when the media got a hold of the story, and with the article in the Daily News, we were afraid some sick person might get ideas, like the Tylenol incident . . . it got all blown out of proportion. My parents were concerned when they heard it on the Channel 3 news . . . they thought it would be a good idea for me to go home . . . I didn't want to take any chances."

Eve Marie Berardi, a junior St. Rita's resident, was one of the few that stayed. According to her, there was nothing to really be scared about. "There was a security van sitting by Alumni Hall, and extra security guards. Also, they posted a sign warning everyone to lock their doors and make sure they were closed tight . . . I thought about leaving, but I had a track meet on Saturday . . . the R.A. convinced me it was safe."

The Stray Cats scratch back

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

Stray Cat bassist, Lee Rocker, spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive interview for the Villanovan*.*

Flashback to 1982: the band with the high hairdos, crude tattoos and slick attitudes copped the music scene with their rockabilly style, namely the Stray Cats. The Cats have always been lean with fresh guitar licks from Brian Setzer, pounding bass lines from Lee Rocker and steady drum beats complements of Slim Jim Phantom. The small population of the group is their essence. The tight bond they hold is what makes them so powerful. Their live performances are what they strive on. Once tripped up by their 1984 break-up, this fall they regrouped to regain their reputation as road kings as they go clubbing behind their 1991 "Murphy Tour," while they work out new material, as well as old favorites, on stage.

VILLANOVAN: The Stray Cats were a hot band in the mid-'80s. Suddenly the band seemed to drop-off, not with the public but within yourselves. What caused that inner-turmoil?

ROCKER: "We started playing in 1979 in New York and then went to England in 1980 and made records . . . By 1984 we were burnt out by it all. When we first went to England in 1980 we were all kids. All the fun went out of it in a way so we broke up and did solo bands. Jim and I did Phantom, Rocker Slick and Brian did a couple of records of his own. Then we all moved out to L.A. and started bumping into each other. Our friendship started up again. We did a benefit for a children's hospital in Hollywood and that was a magic night. We said, 'we gotta do this again.' "

V: Looking back at that period, if you were to do it over, would you change anything?

ROCKER: "We should have put the band on ice instead of going public with the break up of the band."

V: Splintering off into separate projects, do you think this effected or rather bettered your songwriting?

ROCKER: "I think it helped us to work with other musicians. When we started with the Cats we were so young that we didn't know what was out there. These couple of years, I got to play with George Harrison, Eric Clapton, Keith Richards, a lot of other musicians which broadened things for me."

V: When you got together for the Rock Therapy album, the first LP after the initial break up, was that same vibe still there between you three?

ROCKER: "Not really. That record was something we needed to put out. That's where the business side tends to take over the music. I think there are some great moments on that record. But, overall we were pushed into it. We recorded it on off days during the preproduction stages of our second solo efforts. It gets to the point where you can't be a band sometimes."

V: Had you always wanted to venture on a solo career?

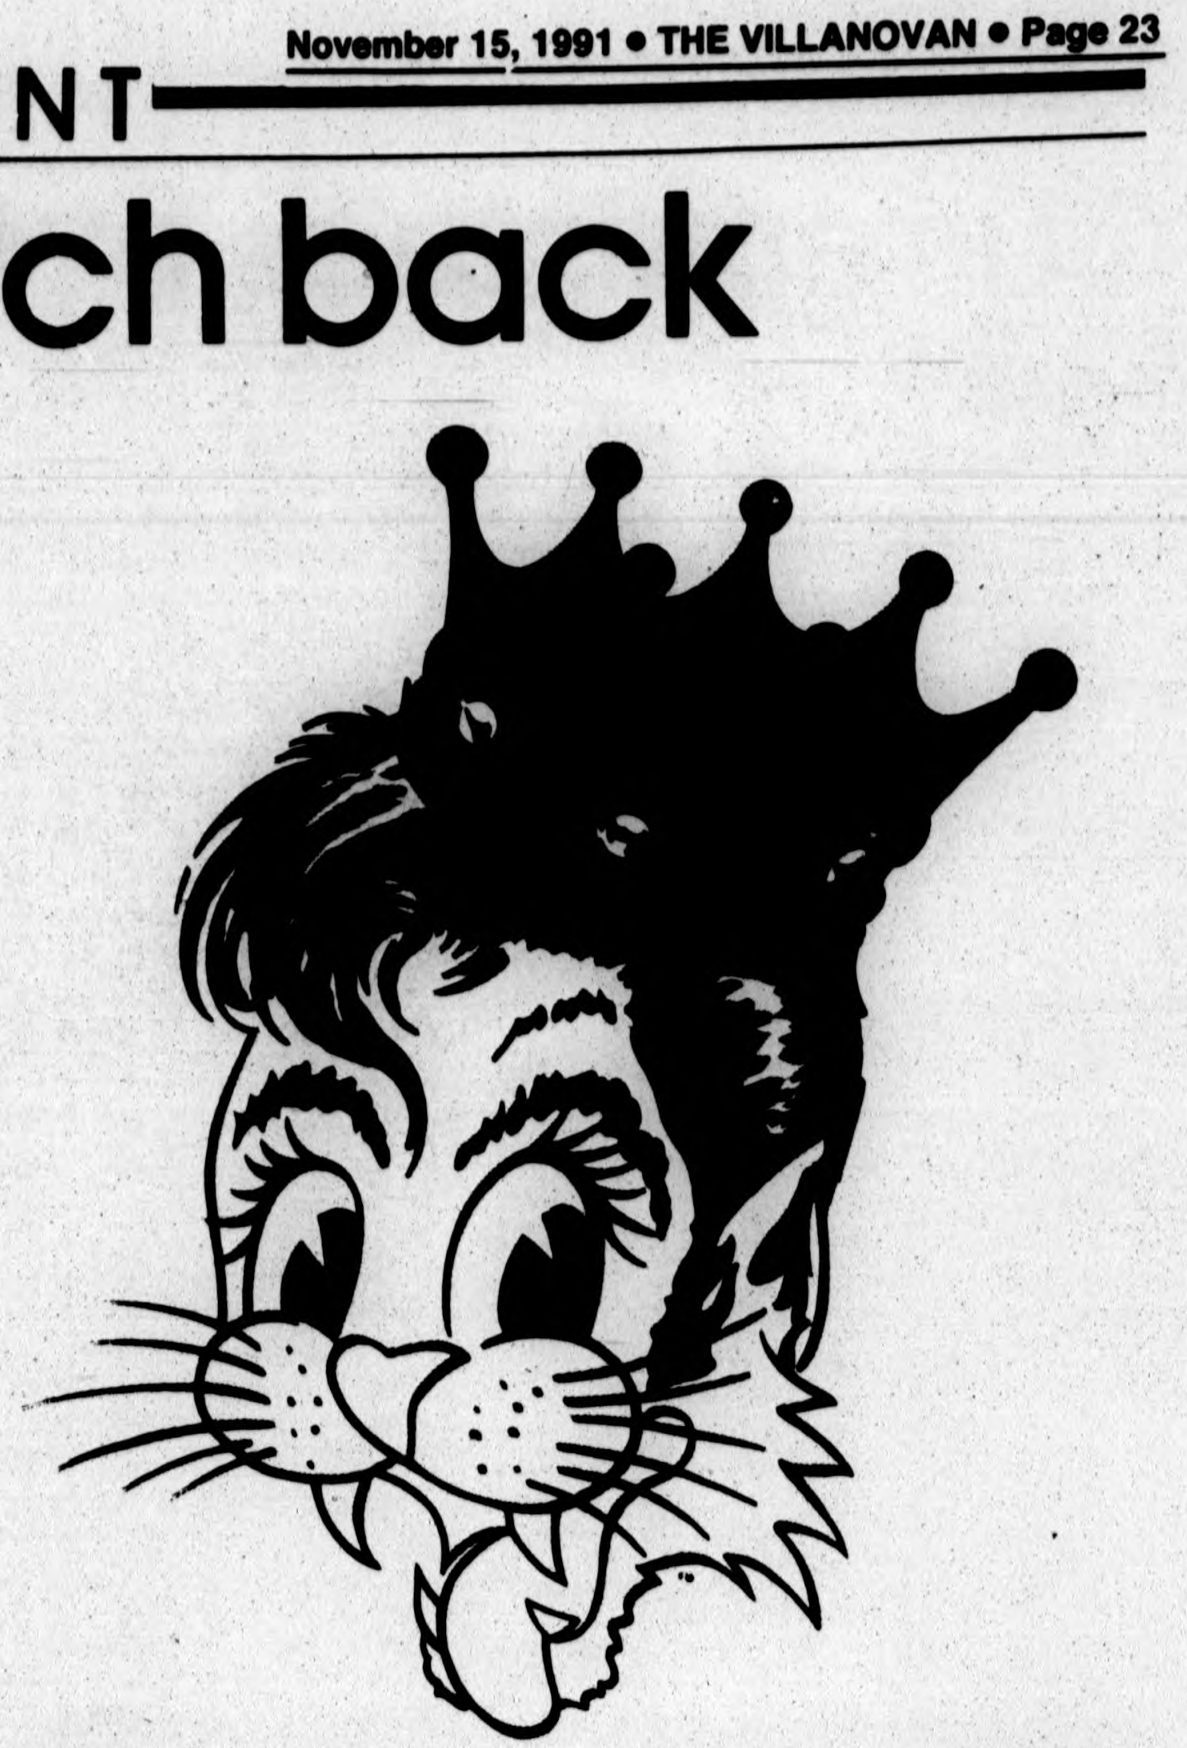
ROCKER: "I don't know. I think that is what we thought we wanted but soon realized that anything we wanted to do we could do within the Stray Cats."

V: Your first Phantom, Rocker Slick LP was well received. What was your initial reaction to the public's response?

ROCKER: "It was great. We did a huge U.S. tour. "Men Without Shame" broke the top 40. We had a lot of fun doing it. But there was always something about the Stray Cats . . . when you play with guys since you were nine years old, there's a communication there. No matter how good the musicians you hire are, there's still a magic, within the Stray Cats, that you can't define."

V: How would you go about explaining Brian's guitar playing?

ROCKER: "He's a great guitar player, one of the best. He's got a unique style that's all his own. Most people are clones of other people. He has his own sound. I think it's from his vast influences. He wasn't influenced by Jimmy Page but, rather jazz guys Charlie Christian and Scotti Moore. He comes from a completely different place."



V: How about Jim and yourself, are you sticking to the stand-up drums and bass style?

ROCKER: "Jim stands but has a bigger kit complete with Tom-Toms. I stick with the up-right bass. It's got a more unique sound. It fills up a lot more of the space with the trio. A lot of the records I love in the '50s . . . you can't get that sound on an electric bass."

V: On songs such as "Runaway Boys" and "Rumble in Brighton" your music seems to be drawn to

Sinatra rests on the past

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

"Thank you for the wonderful welcome. I'm so very glad to spend the evening with you. I love you all," quipped Ol' Blue Eyes, Frank Sinatra, expressing his great appreciation for the audience's dedication as he charmed the Spectrum Nov. 9.

Classics are what epitomizes Sinatra as the living legend of yesteryear. His presence simply brought back the electricity that once surrounded him as a young gun. Thirty-year-old yuppies, middle-aged married couples and senior citizens flocked to the stage as he entered the arena and acted as charismatic as ever.

Familiar sounds of "Come Fly With Me," "You Make Me Feel So Young" and "The Lady's a Tramp" filled the air, along with the sweet sounds of Frank Sinatra Jr.'s 31-piece orchestra. However, the painful truth is that the Chairman of the Board can no longer sing.

Frank, Jr., the orchestra and a rather large glass of Chivas Regal scotch (the tour sponsor) held him up. "Son whatta ya got . . . I know what I got and I am gonna have some," cried Sinatra as he frequently went "to the well" to drink the night away. Regardless, he possessed a comical presence that allowed him to slip by on his personality alone.

> The painful truth is that the Chairman of the Board can no longer sing.

Sinatra did not sing so much as entertain. He tended to speak the lyrics, failing to hit the long high notes he once mastered. He performed a series of "saloon songs" featuring "Lady Luck," "The Gal That Got Away" and "Angel Eyes."

"I don't do anything new 'cause . . . if it was new, I wouldn't understand it," announced Sinatra, "So I stick to the oldies." Signature Sinatra songs such as "Mac The Knife," "New York, New York" and "My Way" were performed but "Summer Wind," "The Way You Look Tonight" and "Cycles" were lost in the shuffle.

In a brief attempt to cover the vast amount of material he has recorded over the years, Steve Lawrence and Edyie Gourmet, the opening act of the evening, joined Sinatra to perform a 20-song medley. Sinatra trademarks "Strangers in the Night" and "That's Life" were merely brushed by in the medley by the mentioning of a few lyrics.

Although it seems that Sinatra's singing career is over, the legacy he has built reigns on. Sinatra must be commended for his endurance. He is well composed and physically fit. Seeing him live is like capturing a bit of history. What other 75-year-old man can give a commanding performance?

Erasure goes mainstream

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

Chorus
Erasure
Sire Records

Erasure takes a big leap into the mainstream with its latest release Chorus. A pop group that was once known for its alternative dance tracks, Erasure has taken an obvious step towards commercial success. The songs are synthesized products of the standard chords that created the alternative dance scene. It is unfortunate that a group that once climbed to the forefront of the music industry has fallen into the trap of mediocrity.

All songs were written by band members Clarke and Bell and each song sounds strangely similar. As a collection, the songs are not particularly hyper nor are they smooth or mellow. They all rest in limbo, no dance tracks and no ballads. It could be one long, neverending musical beat.

With this lack of musical originality, it seems as though the lyrics would be especially meaningful. This is not true. Every song deals with trivial love relationships and the search for happiness. A prime example is from "Love To Hate You;" "And the lovers that you sent for me/Didn't come with any satisfaction guarantee/So I return them to the sender." The words are simply too weak to compensate for the dull and dreary sound.

Chorus is a disappointing album for true Erasure fans. The title track is somewhat upbeat but falls short in its presentation. It is the only song that seems to have some meaning, "Holy Moses our hearts are screaming/Souls are lifting only dreaming/We'll be waiting some are praying/For a time when no one's cheating." Unfortunately, the other songs do not follow suit.

Overall, Chorus is a failure and seems like a rushed effort, surprising since it has been well over a year since Erasure's last album. It is possible that it was hoping to cash in big during the Christmas season. In reality, this Chorus will have no encore.

Current issues overlooked in 'Business'

By AARON NICODEMUS
Assistant Editor

"Strictly Business"
Directed by Kevin Hooks
Warner Brothers

The corporate quest for success often completely dominates its pursuer. A businessman becomes so engrossed in his work that all his energy and emotion is poured into professional goals. While becoming wealthy in material goods, a once-rich life is left with a barren spirit. "Strictly Business" comically portrays one man's rediscovery of true friendship and love.

Waymon Timsdale III (played by Joseph C. Phillips) is a young black executive in a well-known New York real estate company. His friend Bobby (Tommy Davidson) works in the company's mailroom, waiting for his chance to move up. While Waymon might know how to close a major business deal, he is far from adept in the social scene. At one point, Bobby comments on Waymon's lack of "soul," calling him "whiter than the whitest white man."

Then he meets Natalie (Halle Berry), a beautiful dancer/waitress who dreams of owning her own nightclub. Waymon is enthralled by her and begs Bobby to introduce him. He promises Bobby a place in the company's training program just for setting them up. But first, Waymon must learn how to act "like a brother" and Bobby has to clean up his act.

"Strictly Business" includes all the usual themes and characters in a business comedy, complete with a bigoted co-worker, a greedy boss and a "career deal" with a Japanese company. The film touches upon blacks' attitudes among their own people. "Blacks are always passin' judgement on each other ... never givin' each other credit," says Bobby. The issue is resolved too neatly, with an automatic unity formed between the characters and the black community.

"Strictly Business" is a funny film, but not a particularly good one. It is predictable and refuses to take chances with its characters, setting or plot. The film contains straight comedy which is only average. "Strictly Business" may showcase a few stars of tomorrow, but does not earn many for itself.

Chili Peppers slam funk rock at the Tower

By JOHN KOLMER
Managing Editor

"I love Magic Johnson," proclaimed bassist Flea of the Red Hot Chili Peppers, as the band took the stage at Tower Theater Nov. 8. This statement was made in response to the announcement one day earlier that Johnson had tested positive for HIV (Human Immunodeficiency Virus). Albeit an odd way to begin a concert, the Peppers have a reputation for their eccentric ways.

This opening remark showed the kind of heart and soul that the Peppers have always had and this heart is reflected in their music, especially on stage. With a pounding drumbeat, funk-influenced hardcore basslines, sparse guitar melody and rap-style vocals, the Peppers defy categorization by varying their songwriting genres, but their live performances are always high energy romps.

The band consists of long-time members, vocalist Anthony Kiedis, Flea bassist with relative newcomers drummer Chad Smith and guitarist John Frusciante.

The Peppers defy categorization.

The show consisted of a good mix between new songs from Blood Sugar Sex Magik and classic Peppers compositions. Even with the great popularity of their newest songs, the Peppers filled the crowd with diehard fans that longed for older material. So, in addition to tracks from Blood like "Give It Away," "Suck My Kiss" and "Mellowship Slinky in B Minor," the Peppers played old favorites such as "Stone Cold Bush," "Blackeyed Blonde" and "Knock Me Down."

The highlights of the concert were "Nobody Weird Like Me" and "Me and My Friends," proving that the Peppers can still jam with punk rock intensity.

As an encore, the Peppers played a medley of earlier, more comical songs, such as "Yertle the Turtle," "Freaky Styley" and "Secret Special Song Inside." The bizarre impression that this encore left, alone with the seriousness of the statement that opened the concert, proved that this tight band is eclectic and still one of the best.

Opening act Smashing Pumpkins brought the crowd into a frenzy with its visually exciting music, a modern day wall of sound. With great songs like "Lull" and "Rhinoceros," Smashing Pumpkins will soon be a major force in its own right.

Blues Traveller misses Cabaret

By SINEAD QUINN
Staff Reporter

After several shows at the intimate Chestnut Cabaret, it came as no surprise that Blues Traveller's performance at the Tower Theater Nov. 9 was a disappointment. Any band that grows in popularity quickly has to make the transition from smaller venues to concert halls, but Blues Traveller was not readily able to make this transition.

The Traveller played for a solid hour and a half and balanced its set with songs from its first album and their latest attempt. Travellers and Thieves. Apparently the crowd was not familiar with the band's recent album, but songs like "Ivory Tower (Tusk)" and "Optimistic Thought" were upbeat enough to rouse the crowd out of their seats. "Sweet Pain" also seemed to get the audience going with its mellow groove. "A Hundred Years" had the entire crowd singing, and naturally, the band's most popular tune "But Anyway" was the highlight.

Musically, Blues Traveller was more restrained and its trademark improvisational jams were lacking. The band made no attempt to fuse its different songs and killed the momentum by pausing for applause between each song. In addition, lead singer Popper's voice was definitely worn.

With its self-titled debut album, Blues Traveller has definitely created a distinctive blend of psychedelic blues and funky music that appeals to Dead-esque diehards and the casual college listener alike. Thieves has a harder edge than the first album. The group's music has evolved into a kind of acid blues turning the focus from the harmonica to the bass guitar. But it was the intense live shows that cultivated its following.

Unfortunately, Blues Traveller lost its intensity and spontaneity at the Tower. This could be for a number of reasons, the pressure to promote its album or simply the fact that it could not command the larger venues the way it could small clubs. Whereas the band would sell out the Chestnut Cabaret easily, it was not able to fill the Tower.

Simon tops INXS' live set

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Entertainment Editor

ROCK QUARRY

INXS is one of the most vibrant and creative bands today. When performing live, the band is able to recreate its unique sound which is rare in a time of prefabricated bands composed of studio effects drool. Live Baby Live should be a monumental live album, unfortunately it slips into mediocrity.

Live albums are for bands that can bring new life to their old songs by reconstructing them with a raw edge. But, more importantly the vibe that the band gives off and the bond that it forms with the audience is the magic that must be captured. Two other major aspects must be tended to as well. A well-balanced song selection and quality sound are key for the success of a live effort.

Coming off its year-long tour behind X, INXS recorded different shows around the world. However, Live Baby Live might as well have been recorded by a teenager with a hand-held tape recorder. The sound is that of a well-recorded bootleg featuring the audience's screams throughout each song. This muffles the instruments as well as lead singer Michael Hutchence's hypnotic voice.

The second mistake is the heavily saturated X and Kick set listing. INXS has been recording for 10 years, compiling seven albums and one EP. A live effort was something that was greatly anticipated. The listing reads like "Your Favorite Classics from X and Kick" when so much of their colorful career is faded on this compilation.

Past recordings "Good Times," "Send a Message," "Original Sin," "Listen Like Thieves," "The Swing," "Black and White" and the sorely missed, "Don't Change," are passed over. "The One Thing," "Burn For You" and "One X One" are the only ones holding up the flame from their past.

One studio track, "Shining Star," is positioned in the center of the album, breaking the continuity of the LP instantly. The track evokes a left-over demo from the X sessions that hardly holds any lyrics and has high hopes of a lofty chart positioning.

Spontaneity is what Live Baby Live lacks. Songs fade in and out not allowing the album to flow. The flashy packaging is more impressive than the disc inside. Sad baby sad.

Ten years ago, a live album was released that became an instant classic even before it hit the racks. Simon and Garfunkel Live in Central Park is in almost every record collection across the country. Paul Simon's Concert in the Park, 10 years later, maintains the quality of the former album but, expresses very different styles.

Paul Simon's Concert is captured in a one shot beginning to end fashion leaving no stone unturned. From the opening drum pounding notes of "The Obvious Child" to the airy renditions of "Me and Julio Down By the School Yard" and "Kodachrome," the LP rolls smoothly and with fine clarity.

Of Simon's 18-piece band, each instrument is miked perfectly so that the listener's ear captures the essence of the individual players as well as their combined sound. The percussion is particularly astounding and produces a complete and full sound.

The music ranges from many different periods in Simon's career: "You Can Call Me Al" to "Still Crazy After All These Years" to "Hearts and Bones" to "Like A Rock." The Simon and Garfunkel songs were not merely rehashed but rather reworked. "Bridge Over Troubled Water" and "Cecila" were performed with a Jamaican sway while "America" and "The Boxer" leaned toward strict acoustic guitar.

The album with Garfunkel cannot be compared to Simon's solo live set for the specific reason that they are two separate entities going in two different directions. While you may prefer the harmonization with Garfunkel over the rhythmic beat of Simon's more recent sound, musically Paul Simon's Concert in the Park is superior.

PEBBLES: Guitarist Jimmy Page (Led Zeppelin), singer David Coverdale (Whitesnake/Deep Purple), drummer Tommy Altridge (Ozzy Osbourne/Whitesnake) and bassist Ricky Phillips (The Babys/Bad English) have recently signed with Geffen Records and are currently working on their debut album. Legend is the working title of the project that will surface next summer.

Bromberg hits Cabaret

By AARON NICODEMUS
Assistant Editor

Philadelphia-born David Bromberg has been at the top of the blues/folk scene for over 25 years. His guitar licks have backed such stars as Bob Dylan, Ringo Starr, John Hurt and Chubby Checker on over 100 albums. Recently, instead of showcasing his talent as a sideman, Bromberg has launched a successful solo career. His latest album, Sideman Serenade, features the talents of such popular musicians as Jackson Browne, Dr. John and John Sebastian.

Even among such stars, Bromberg's talent has its own distinct flavor. His style often borrows elements from blues, jazz, rock, country and folk in his widely varying tunes. According to the Boston Herald, "Bromberg's lyrics ring of authenticity, and he interprets rural blues with care and affection." Bromberg's voice is usually more convincing in his rowdy rhythm and blues numbers than in his ballads. Although his singing is decent, it is no match for the sweet sounds emanating from his guitar.

At live performances Bromberg likes to keep audiences guessing. He moves from one style to the next, often mixing his own deadpan seriousness and twisted sense of humor between songs and within lyrics.

The blues aspect of his music keeps Bromberg's substantial reputation as an acoustic guitarist intact. No one can detract from his brilliant career nor his ability to capture the attention of a room full of people. He is one of those artists who has recorded so many songs that his repertoire in performances amaze most audiences. Bromberg will be on stage at the 23 East Cabaret Nov. 16.

CABARET FLASH: The Guess Who are once again touring after a lengthy absence from the music scene. The band, popular in the late '60s and early '70s with such hits as "American Woman" and "No Time," bring their mellow sounds back as cherished memories. The Guess Who will perform at the Chestnut Cabaret Nov. 16.

Billy Bragg and Red Stars, another popular act, also have a local concert date scheduled. This talented band will appear at the Chestnut Cabaret Nov. 19.

David Bromberg will perform his wide variety of music at the 23 East.

Lee Rocker examines Stray Cats formula

the street level. Did you grow up along those lines?

ROCKER: "We grew up along suburban New York lines. When we moved to England we became part of the end of the punk movement. That influence flowed in there, its very street. It runs along the lines of what we were doing now. I feel that we have come full circle. It's rockabilly, but not what they have originally considered rockabilly."

V: With your music, it seems that your tunes tend to lean toward good time music. Songs like "Rock This Town" and "(She's) Sexy & 17" all appear to be geared toward the lighter side. Do you do this on purpose?

ROCKER: "It's the kind of stuff that moves us. We are not politicians. It irritates me when I hear musicians doing political death rock. There's a lot of stuff that inspires us out there like girls, cars. . . ya know the important stuff! (jokes)."

V: People tend to label Stray Cat music as strictly a '50s revival — would you call it differently?

ROCKER: "Definitely. I don't understand it. There are so many bands out there that are all trying to be Led Zeppelin and I don't see people calling them '70s revival bands? Blues isn't labeled '40s music? Rockabilly has a strong '50 image. We heat it a lot. But it's just an American art form."

V: How do you view the recent band culture?

ROCKER: "I think things are changing again. People are getting sick of this pompous music. It seems they want an alternative. So, something's brewing out there. This industry definitely needs a kick in the ass."

V: How has producer Dave Edmunds effected the Stray Cats and in what way? Has he brought a special element that makes the band work?

ROCKER; "He's producing our next record. We're getting back into the studio in December. He's got a better understanding and knows more about rockabilly music then anybody. He's one of the finest guitar players too. He also helps us with songwriting here and there and plays with us from time to time. He tries to capture the best performance as possible without the high tech involvement. He's unique, a world class producer."

V: How did you initially hook up with him?

ROCKER: "We met him after one of our gigs in England. He was in our dressing room drinking all our vodka. 'We were like, who is this guy?' Its funny ... he produced our first record (Stray Cats) and we were pretty big over seas. Our first and second LPs (Gonna Ball) went gold in 16 different countries. Built For Speed (the Cats' first U.S. release and break through hit LP) was actually a compilation of the first two LPs. The U.S. was the last to catch on to us."

V: How has the reception been on this new tour?

ROCKER: We didn't know what to expect, but its been great. We did 25 shows on the West Coast in September alone. We just signed with CBS Records. We'll be touring Japan and Europe in the spring and hit the states this summer for the release of the new album. We have put a lot of time into writing songs. We have about 15 songs so far. Right now we have been working them out on stage every night. It runs along the lines of 'Runaway Boys' and 'Rumble in Brighton' — '90s rockabilly with a punk edge. We also do a few covers such as 'I Fought the Law,' 'Sleepwalk' and 'Mystery Train.' We get such a weird mix of people, from skin heads to old ladies with beehives. Kids are slam dancing and they just hang out back. (laughs)"

ROCK this TOWN

V: Has the Stray Cats' direction changed at all?

ROCKER: "We've gone through different stages and styles. We're going to remain together and with this style for good. We're doing what we are best at and happy doing it. We try not to change it into something else. The band's unique and that's what we got to keep."

The mens soccer team ended its best season ever despite a Big East tournament loss.

Men booted from tourney

Staff Reporter

The men's soccer team concluded a very successful season despite being eliminated in the semifinals of the Big East Conference Tournament at the University of Connecticut last weekend. Villanova fell to top-seeded Seton Hall 4-0. Coach Larry Sullivan's squad finished the season at 11-7 and qualified for the conference playoffs for the first time in seven years.

The Cats had several opportunities to score in the first half as they attacked the Pirate goal early and often. Wildcat players Rich Maue and Scott Aimetti both launched shots that sailed wide during the opening minutes of the game. But the Cats could not score and the two teams battled to a halftime stalemate.

Five minutes into the second half, Seton Hall broke through with the initial goal of the game. Gerson Echeverry, who was named the Big East Offensive Player of the Year, scored the goal. Fifteen minutes later, the Cats just missed scoring the game-tying goal when a shot by Chris Hogan hit the crossbar. The Pirates capitalized on Villanova's missed opportunities when Echeverry scored again just three minutes later. Echeverry's shot reversed the momentum of the game as Seton Hall overpowered the Cats to score two more goals in the eventual win.

Despite the setback, Villanova overcame the preseason loss of Ken Santos, a member of the 1990 All-Big East team who missed the entire season with a knee injury, to improve on last year's record.

Prior to the tournament, sophomore Joe Roy was named a first-team All-Big East selection. Roy led Villanova with 27 points this season, making him the third-leading scorer in the conference.

In addition to Roy's nine goals and nine assists, another leading scorer for Villanova was Scott Aimetti (five goals, eight assists). The rest of a balanced offensive attack included three Villanova players who scored 10 points this season, Rich Maue (four goals and two assists), Tim Gannon (three goals and four assists) and Eric Hinds (four goals and two assists).

'Nova drills Oil

By CHRIS ABELES
Sports Editor

The Wildcats opened play this year with an 82-76 exhibition win against the Big East touring squad Marathon Oil. Marathon Oil, comprised of past college players, was no threat to 'Nova, which led most of the game.

Coming off an impressive showing in last year's NCCA tournament, the Cats are looking to improve on last season's record.

The Cats were led by senior Greg Woodard, who led all scorers with 25 points. Woodard, heralded for his three-point ability, hit four from beyond the three-point stripe in addition to shooting 8 for 14 from the floor. Point guard Chris Walker, also noted for his three-point abilities, nailed two treys en route to scoring 11 for the Wildcats. The team also received 12 points from Lance Miller, the team's leading scorer last season.

Villanova, which controlled the game from the opening tip, worked its way to a 42-37 halftime lead with strong play from Woodard and forward Aaron Bain, both of whom scored eight. The boards were controlled by 'Nova forward Marc Dowdell and center Anthony Pelle, who both grabbed five rebounds in the first half. Rebounding, one of the team's five main objectives this year, was a strong point in this game as the Cats outrebounded Marathon Oil 48-35.

'Nova shot 43.8 percent from the floor and 45 percent from behind the three-point line.

"This game gave us a chance to see some people," said head coach Rollie Massimino, who insisted that his starting lineup consists of eight players.

The Cats played the Canadian National Team last night and will prepare for their season opener Nov. 23 in Houston. The team then travels to Atlanta, Ga. to face the Georgia Tech Yellow Jackets in the ACC-Big East Challenge, before opening its tough Big East Conference schedule Jan. 2 against powerhouse St. John's.

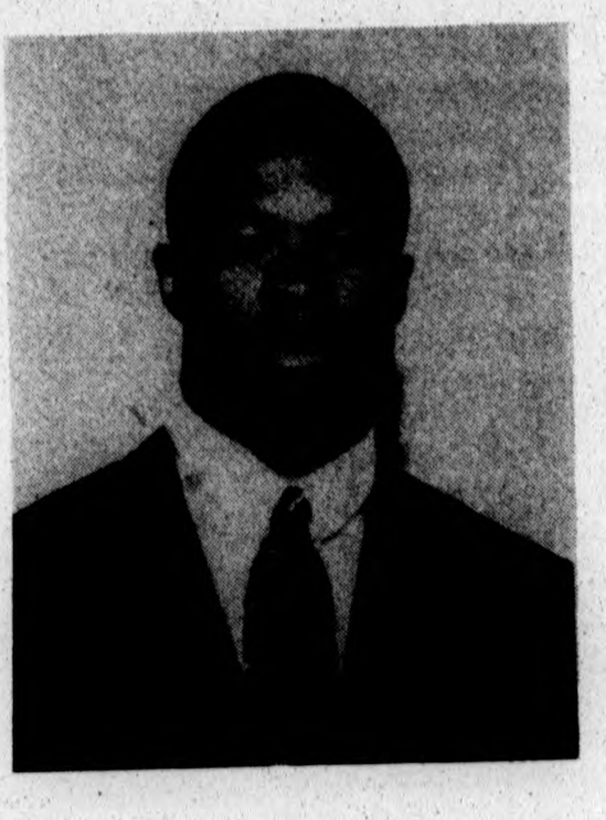
ATHLETE OF THE WEEK



VERN SMITH

This week's Villanovan Athlete of the Week is running back Vern Smith. In his first career start, Smith replaced the injured Pat Kennedy and amassed 135 yards on 28 carries and one touchdown. The sophomore tailback improved his season totals to 446 rushing yards and 139 receiving yards after contributing three catches for the Cats' offense in their 33-7 victory over the University of New Hampshire.

'Nova finishes in second place

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Assistant Editor

All good things must come to an end. Such was the case for the volleyball team's sensational winning streak, which was snapped at 21 matches last weekend. The Cats went 2-2 for the week and ran their overall record to 28-4.

'Nova began the week on a high note, scoring an impressive victory over crosstown rival Temple (15-13, 14-16, 15-10, 15-9). The win gave the Cats the city series title by virtue of their 3-0 mark in the Big Five tournament.

The Wildcats rode this momentum into Morgantown, West Virginia, where they defeated the host Mountaineers in three straight games (16-14, 15-4, 15-8). West Virginia was regionally ranked at the time of the match.

Later that same day, the Cats traveled up to Pittsburgh and played a talented Akron squad. The team fought hard physically to stay in the contest, but they eventually lost the tiring match in three close games (12-15, 13-15, 10-15).

"We just weren't quite in sync," said head coach David Barkley. He also said that Akron played "a very good match" and committed fewer turnovers than 'Nova did.

Still weary from the previous day's double-header, Villanova faced Pittsburgh to determine the Big East Conference regular season championship. The host Panthers roared out of the gate early and cruised to an 8-0 lead in the first frame. Pitt never looked back, sweeping the Cats (1-15, 8-15, 8-15) to claim the top seed in the conference tournament.

"They played a superb match. They executed very well," said Barkley. He said that although not yet nationally ranked, Pitt is "definitely a Top 20 team."

> We are just very, very flat. Part of the reason we lost is very simply that we haven't played enough top-twenty teams this season.
> Head Coach David Barkley

"We were just very, very flat. Part of the reason we lost is very simply that we haven't played enough Top 20 teams this season. And what they did to beat us, we couldn't adjust too quickly to."

The Cats will attempt to get back on the winning track this weekend, when they will host the Asics Autumn Classic at the Jake Nevin Field House. The team's goal is to win the tournament and regain some momentum for the upcoming Big East tournament in which they will open against Connecticut.

But Barkley is not looking past this weekend's matches. He describes St. Bonaventure as a "scrappy" team. In addition, Fairleigh Dickinson and Providence will be motivated because of losses to the Cats earlier in the season. If 'Nova plays well, however, it should add yet another trophy to its already impressive collection.

The St. Bonaventure match will have special meaning to one player in particular. It will be the final home match for senior Jennifer Neville. The co-captain will be honored before the contest for the many contributions she has made during the past four years.

"Jennifer was my very first recruit when I came here," said Barkley. "She has been the backbone of our program while she's been here." The Cats will attempt to make Neville's final home match a winning one. Should the Cats prevail, they will have little time to celebrate as the conference tournament begins next weekend.

Ice Cats off to rough start

By PETER MORRICE
Staff Reporter

Sometimes in the world of sports a superior team effort is thwarted by the outstanding performance of a single player.

Such was the case as the Wildcat ice hockey team dropped two ECAC South games to St. Michael's College this past weekend at the Skatium in Havertown.

The Cats outshot St. Michael's 42-40 Saturday in a disappointing 9-5 loss. Sunday proved even more frustrating, as 'Nova recorded 54 shots on goal compared to 34 by their opponents, who escaped with a 4-3 victory.

"We got good shot production in both games. We just ran up against a hot goaltender," said head coach Pat Ferrill.

In Saturday's contest, Hugh Maginnis led the Wildcat attack with two goals and an assist. Dennis Mastriano, Marc Guertin and Tony Lomanto also posted scores for 'Nova.

The game was deadlocked at 2-2 through two periods before St. Michael's netted two goals in the final period to claim a 4-3 victory Nov. 10. Bill Palisak, Dennis Mastriano and Steve Flynn each notched a goal for the Icecats who fell to 1-3 in the ECA South and 1-5 overall.

Coach Ferrill felt that the team played well enough to win both games, attributing the losses to the superb goaltending exhibited by St. Michael's.

"We've started slowly in terms of a win/loss record, but we're playing well. We've been in every game," said Ferrill.

Unfortunately, the Icecats have lost several key team members to injury, including two top returning players and two promising freshmen.

"This team is overcoming a lot of adversity," said Ferrill, who characterizes the squad as "a good mix of returning players and freshmen who have made an immediate impact."

The Wildcats will host Iona University Sunday at the Skatium in Havertown as they try to avenge a tough 4-2 ECAC South loss that Iona dealt them Nov. 2.

Junior QB Walt Norton had a stellar day as he threw for 362 yards on 21 of 34 passing. He connected with Scott Mallory nine times for 186 yards and two touchdowns.

RHODE ISLAND 49, NORTHEASTERN 20

The tandem of QB Tony Squitieri and tailback Chris Pierce each scored two times as URI turned back Northeastern.

MASSACHUSETTS AT VILLANOVA
Tomorrow, 1:30 p.m. at Villanova Stadium
Radio: WXVU, 89.1 FM
Records: UMass 4-5, 'Nova 8-1

This week, the Cats take on the defending Yankee Conference champions, the Massachusetts Minutemen. UMass, considered one of the preseason favorites in the Yankee, is coming off an impressive 42-14 victory over Richmond but has struggled this year and is currently 3-3 in the Yankee.

Nevertheless, the Minutemen are a team not to be taken lightly. They return 10 starters on defense but the major reason for the poor season has to be due to the loss of starting quarterback Gary Wilkos, who went down with an injury during the preseason. But a victory over the first-place Cats would make the UMass season.

As for Villanova, the team needs a win to keep its playoff hopes alive and remain in first place along with Delaware. The fact that 'Nova lost to UMass last season 3-0 will work as a revenge factor for this game. Coming off their biggest win of the season, the Cats must prevent a letdown and the way to do that is to prepare for this game as if it is their season, which it is.

Offensively, the Cats will again be without the services of leading rusher Pat Kennedy. Therefore, the position is in the hands of the sophomore Vern Smith, who proved last week that he can get the job done with 135 rushing yards.

So far this year, the Cats have soundly defeated every team that they should have. There have been no letdowns. Hopefully this will not be the one but there is no reason to think that this should be. Coach Talley has been extremely impressed with the squad's aggressiveness and zest for the game. The team is on a mission to advance to the playoffs and a team like UMass is just another one that stands in its way.

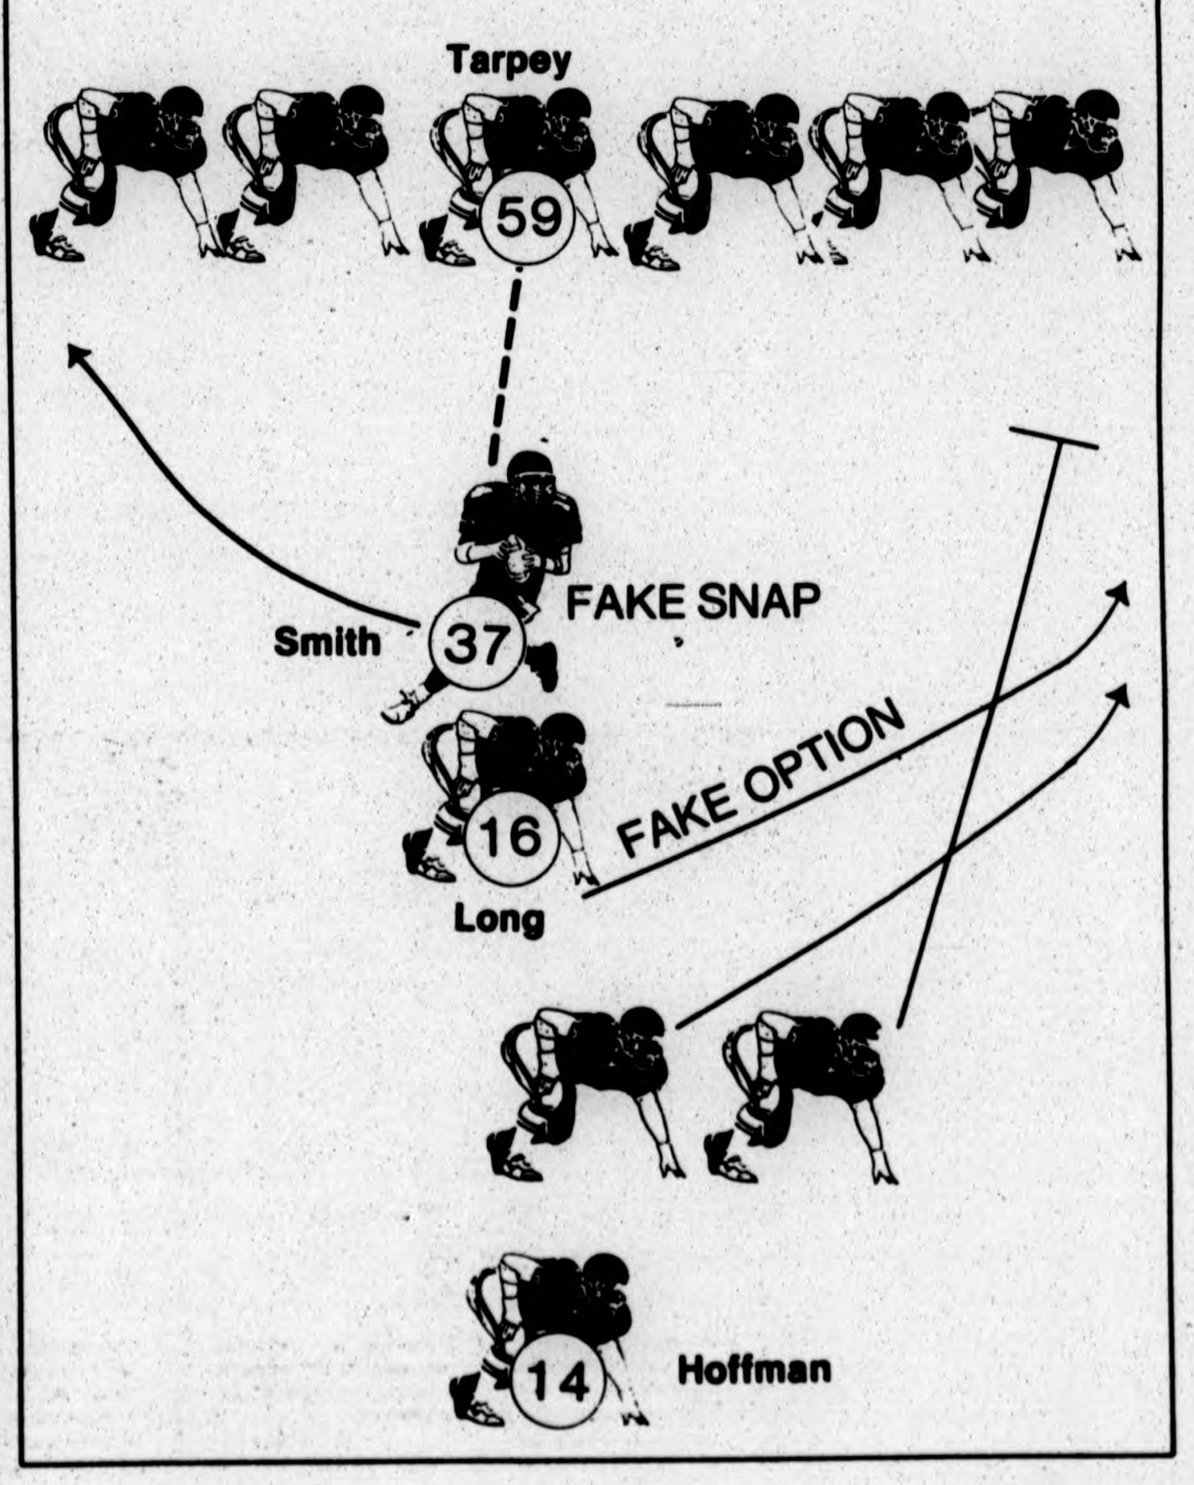
The Fake Punt

"Talley ho and away we go."



SPORTS

Cats crush UNH, move into first

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

The buzz on the Villanova campus after 'Nova's dominating 33-7 Homecoming victory over New Hampshire was the "Talley ho and away we go."

Forget the fact that the win puts the No. 7 ranked Cats into a tie for first place. Forget that running back Vern Smith replaced Pat Kennedy admirably with 135 rushing yards. Even forget the fact that the victory puts the Cats two games away from the playoffs.

Forget all that because the play that caught everyone's attention was the fake punt that occurred in the third quarter. It was so amazing that hardly anyone knew who had the ball or where the ball was. The fake punt made both ESPN and ABC yet no one really knew what happened. Here is an attempt to put the "Talley ho and away we go" into words.

With the Cats leading UNH 17-7 in the third quarter, they faced a 4th and 14 on the UNH 38-yard line. The Cats lined up in an awkward formation for a punt. The ball was snapped to reserve fullback Pat Smith, who pretended to re-snap the ball to Kevin Long. Long, in turn, proceeded to roll to his right as if he were running the option with a lead blocker at his side.

Smith, who never handed off the ball, had to count one one-thousand, two one-thousand, and three one-thousand before taking off with the ball to the left side. Meanwhile, three UNH defenders brushed right by Smith, thinking Long had the ball. They began chasing Long to the right. Smith broke one tackle and rolled straight into the end zone for his first career touchdown.

"We drew it up ourselves," said coach Andy Talley. "We put it in practice two weeks ago but nobody thought we would ever use it. It's either feast or famine. But we needed a big lift and even if it didn't work, they [UNH] had to drive 50 yards and earn it."

"Pat is the key to the play. it takes discipline to hold the ball in your crotch for three seconds and being from the Naval Academy, that's why we picked him," said Talley.

> This was the biggest victory we have ever had.
> Head Coach Andy Talley

If the game were still in doubt, that sealed it. Kicker William Hoffman missed the extra-point but the Cats held an insurmountable 23-7 lead. But if anyone were most responsible for this victory, it had to be the fired up defense.

Safeties Kevin Long and Barry Alvis were all over the field. Each snagged two interceptions and came up and stopped UNH's leading rusher, Barry Bourassa. Alvis made pulverizing hits all day, forced a fumble, caught one interception between his legs, and even made a tackle on special teams.

"We constantly kept in pursuit. We have a motto, 'together we go' and I think we did that," said Alvis. Long also credited the front four, who constantly pressured UNH quarterback Matt Griffin, and called the win a "total team effort."

The defense really deserved the shutout. With time running out in the first half, Griffin somehow scrambled to his right and heaved the ball downfield to an open Bourassa in the back of the end zone. Besides that, the Cats totally dominated the UNH offense.

As for the Cat offense, quarterback Tommy Colombo overcame a slow start to throw for 147 yards on 17 of 38 attempts. But the show stopper Saturday was running back Vern Smith, who made fans forget about the injured Pat Kennedy with 135 yards rushing. His play also impressed Talley, who said that Smith "is on his way to being the best back in the league."

Fullback Jeff Johnson also deserves a lot of credit with a 50-yard kickoff return to start the game which helped set up 'Nova's first TD and an excellent performance of both running and blocking.

"This was the biggest victory we have ever had," said Talley. "There's been talk that we're a finesse team but I think we proved today that we are harder and tougher."

Notes: The Homecoming game surprisingly was not a sellout with a paid crowd of 10,416. A lot of the fans were in the parking lots still tailgating ... In attendance was a scout from the Los Angeles Raiders. He was looking at 'Nova tight end Scott Donald, the Cat secondary and UNH running back Bourassa. According to another writer, he was not overly impressed

Sticksters end year at 9-9-1

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

The Wildcat field hockey team was ousted from the first round of the Big East tournament by the UConn Huskies 2-0 Nov. 9. The game capped a season in which Villanova went 9-9-1 (2-4 Big East) amidst lengthy winning and losing streaks.

The Wildcats arrived at Boston College's Alumni Field hoping they could repeat last year's upset victory. The Huskies had different ideas, controlling the pace of the game and assaulting Villanova's defensive unit. Red-hot 'Nova senior Monika Pedano and leading goal-scorer Barbara King were able to keep pressure on the UConn net. However, the 'Nova offensive threats were not enough to register any points for the Cats, who found themselves down 1-0 at halftime.

A second-half insurance goal by the Huskies assured UConn of an appearance in the tournament finals. The final score was 2-0, the second time the Huskies have beaten Villanova this season.

> 'Nova can afford to look to next season with optimism after the performance of many of its younger players.

Co-captain Missy Paolantonio playing in her final Villanova game, led the team with 12 points (six goals and six assists). 'Nova's squad also will lose Pedano (five goals) and Kate Flynn.

Despite the senior losses, 'Nova can afford to look to next season with optimism after the performance of many of its younger players. Co-captain Melissa Rea (one goal, eight assists, nine points) will be back along with King (seven goals, two assists, nine points) and Bree Hawthorne (four goals, one assist, five points). On defense, sophomores Marianne Connelly and Kate McKee were standouts throughout the season. As for the defensive line, goalie Chrissy Thomas had a strong freshman season (1.3 GAA) and looks to be a key factor in the Wildcats' future.

EXTRA POINTS

Cats two games away from playoffs

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

With a record of 8-1 overall and 6-1 in the Yankee Conference, the Cats are well on their way to the Division 1-AA playoffs which begin Nov. 30. They have only two games remaining, Massachusetts (4-5) and Fordham (2-6), and if they win both the Cats will be in the playoffs.

The postseason structure in Div. I-AA is very different from the bowl system of Division I-A. In Div. I-AA, the selection committee chooses the top 16 teams in the nation and places them in a single-elimination tournament. The games are played with a home team and a visitor until the championship game, which will be played at Georgia Southern Dec. 21.

The Cats are currently in a two-way tie for first in the Yankee Conference with Delaware at 6-1. New Hampshire is one-half game behind at 5-1. It is most probable that the three will end the regular season in a three-way tie at 7-1. That means only one of the three will receive the Yankee Conference automatic bid, and it is unclear which team that may be.

'Nova defeated UNH but lost to Delaware. Delaware beat Villanova but lost to UNH. New Hampshire beat Delaware but lost to Villanova. It is obvious that the situation is complex, and no team has a distinct advantage.

The selection committee will consider strength of schedule and how many seats fill a school's stadium. This gives Delaware the edge since it has a 23,000 seat stadium. The committee will consider the possible revenue and give the Blue Hens a first-round home game.

So where does that leave Villanova? Well, the Cats certainly will receive a bid because of their No. 7 ranking. However, the chances are slim of ever playing in Villanova Stadium due to the 12,000-seat capacity. Division 1-AA is very concerned with making money and the way to do that is to play the games in large stadiums with full crowds. Villanova has neither.

The way to draw big crowds is by scheduling two opponents who have somewhat of a rivalry and will attract a large crowd. A very real possibility, therefore, is for the Cats to open at Delaware. This would be a rematch of the Oct. 19 game at Delaware, where the Cats suffered their only loss 38-28. That way, the game would be a sellout. The Div. 1-AA hierarchy will be happy, and a Yankee Conference team would be eliminated.

Remember, the only given right now is that the Cats control their own destiny. With wins over UMass and Fordham, the Cats will be back in the playoffs for the first time since 1989, when they lost in the first round at Georgia Southern 52-36. After that, Villanova will have to wait and see.

OPENING TIP

Cats time is now with five returning starters

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

Ever since the basketball class of 1993 walked on to the campus three years ago, greatness has been expected of the Villanova basketball team. Rated in the Top 10 in recruiting rankings, this was supposed to be the unit that took Coach Rollie Massimino back to the NCAA Final Four. If you combined the class with the previous year's group, rated in the Top 20, the general consensus would be the preparation for a return to the elite and the elevation of 'Nova to recognition as a national power.

But two years later, the track record proves unspectacular. Sure, the Cats made the tournament in both seasons. But both times, the Wildcats have been on the proverbial bubble and just eked its way somehow, someway into the NCAA Tournament. First in 1989-90, the Cats survived 13 wins and landed in the tournament before losing to LSU. Not enough experience, said the fans.

Then last year, the Cats gave fans the roller-coaster ride of a lifetime, ending the regular season with three losses, then pulling off miracle wins at the Big East Tournament over Boston College and Syracuse, the latter a game 'Nova trailed by 16 points with eight minutes left. With a 16-14 record, 'Nova made the NCAA field thanks to a difficult schedule. Too young for the tough Big East, fans said.

And so begins the 1991-92 season, a year in which Cats' troubles cannot be attributed to inexperience. All five starters and three top bench players return to a team often on the brink of excellence, but somehow falling short. If 'Nova is to win, if 'Nova is to establish itself as a power, this is the year.

And indications are that this team may finally gel and put it all together. The senior triumvirate of Marc Dowdell, Chris Walker and Greg Woodard has been starting together for three years and all appear more confident than a year ago, particularly Woodard.

Add to that the junior class of Lance Miller, Calvin Byrd, Arron Bain and James Bryson, and the Cats may be headed back to the mid-1980 glory years. Miller, a splendid talent, may develop into the complete player Head Coach Rollie Massimino wants him to be. Bain and Byrd have improved each year under the coaching staff's tutelage, and both are much stronger and confident than two years ago. Bryson, inconsistent his first two seasons, has a chance to start at center.

The unknown factor is Anthony Pelle, a promising sophomore who could be the missing link that makes 'Nova a contender instead of a pretender. The pieces to the puzzle are in place. ABC commentator Dick Vitale picks the Cats as his sleeper team. Many experts think 'Nova could finish in the top three in the Big East. Time will tell, but the time is now.

No longer can the Cats' inconsistencies be attributed to youth and inexperience. The 1991 squad is deep, talented and has a nice blend of slashers, shooters and bangers. All that is left is to go out and prove it on the floor.

Woodard improves game, prepares for banner year

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

When the name of Greg Woodard comes to mind, most people think three-point specialist. But this season Woodard hopes to gain recognition as an all-around player.

The senior from Rochester, N.Y. worked on driving to the basket and getting himself open for that deadly three-point shot during the off-season. And if the first exhibition game against Marathon Oil is any indication, fans will see a new and improved Woodard this year.

Woodard grabbed the ball off the opening tip, saw an open path to the hoop, and exploded to the basket looking to jam the ball home. He got fouled on the way up but he had made his point. Greg Woodard is going all out in his final year.

"I have definitely been looking to drive to the basket more this year if there is an opening," said Woodard. "We have a lot of experience this year and this is our last chance to prove ourselves. We have just as much talent as any other year since I've been here.

In fact, the career of Woodard greatly parallels that of the Wildcats as a team. The Cats failed to make the NCAA tournament in 1989, Woodard's freshman year. When Woodard was a sophomore, the club lost in the first round of the NCAA's to LSU. And then last year, the Cats advanced to the second round before falling to North Carolina.

Individually, Woodard has made similar progress. He has increased his points per game average every season, going from 2.7 to 11.9 to 13.6 last year. His 47.5 percent shooting from beyond the three-point stripe led the Big East and he was third in three-point field goals with an average of 2.4 per game.

But teams this year are going to key on stopping Woodard and that's when Woodard's offseason work will return dividends. If teams put a man right in his face, Woodard can drive to the basket. If teams stay back to prevent the penetration, Woodard will drill the three. There will be no sure way of stopping him, unlike in previous years when Woodard could not get open and would not score.

> We have a lot of experience this year and this is our last chance to prove ourselves.
> Greg Woodard

"I have been very impressed with Woodard," said Coach Rollie Massimino. "He is driving better and taking it to the hole more."

As a team, the squad is "running well and playing good defense" according to Massimino but "needs to rebound better."

According to Woodard, there are five objectives that the coaching staff is stressing. They are 1) to push the ball up the court after getting the ball off the boards, 2) cut down on turning the ball over, 3) rebounding, 4) pushing the ball inside and 5) defense.

Both Woodard and the Wildcats have made slow but steady progress each year and Woodard realizes that this is the year to put it all together along with fellow seniors Chris Walker and Marc Dowdell. The expectations are fairly high, as they should be. The Cats have the talent to compete against any team in the Big East and they should be in every game.

As for Woodard, fast starts are nothing new. Last year he was named Most Valuable Player in the team's opening upset win over LSU when he scored 28 points and hit for a career-high of 33 points against La Salle. But he must maintain that consistency over the whole season. The way to do that is by playing a more rounded game that does not depend solely on the outside shot.

If 'Nova is to reach its potential, Marc Dowdell and the Cat frontline must hold their own on the boards.

Wildcats look to return to Big East's elite in 1991

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

For the 'Nova seniors the time is now. After three years of inconsistent play and unfulfilled expectations, the starting triumvirate of Chris Walker, Marc Dowdell and Greg Woodard hope to end their careers on the note it began, when they were freshman billed to lead 'Nova back to the Final Four.

But the results have been mixed. For the past two years the Wildcats have struggled to gain a berth in the NCAA Tournament after losing 13 and 14 games in '89 and '90. The furthest the team has gotten is last year's second round loss in the East Region to North Carolina.

> The Wildcats return all five starters from a year ago, including all-league candidate Lance Miller.

Individually, Walker has been a brilliant clutch player, Woodard a splendid outside shooter and Dowdell a solid power forward. But the pieces have yet to be put together. If 'Nova is to regain a spot in the Big East's upper echelon, though, this is the year.

"We have eight key players we consider starters," Coach Rollie Massimino said. "Our character is very positive and we are running well."

The Wildcats return all five starters from a year ago, including all-league candidate Lance Miller. The only player not returning is point guard Lloyd Mumford, who gave 'Nova an added dimension of speed but was kicked off the team during the summer and transferred to UC-Irvine.

Miller, an excellent all-around performer who led the team in scoring and rebounding while usually guarding the opposition's best player, should continue to make strides as he enters his junior year. A slasher and penetrator with savvy, the only Miller weakness is his outside game, as he converted only 22 percent of his three-point shots a year ago. If Miller can consistently hit the 18-footer, he will be recognized as one of the east's top players.

The other forward, Arron Bain, provides 'Nova with its best inside option due to his tremendous low-post skills. Able to use either hand from within eight feet, Bain improved significantly a year ago and averaged over 10 ppg. Much bigger and stronger than last year, Bain has been impressive in fall practice with improved rebounding and outside shooting.

Calvin Byrd will provide quality depth behind the starting forwards. Blessed with tremendous athletic ability, Byrd plays a style similar to former Cat Gary Massey, who won the Big East Defensive Player of the Year Award in 1988. Byrd, the team's most tenacious defender, also possesses strong driving ability.

The center position is the key area of concern for the Cats. Out-rebounded by over two boards a game last year, one of the coaching staff's points of emphasis is fundamental rebounding. In order to do so in the rugged Big East, both Anthony Pelle and James Bryson must step up and take pressure off Dowdell, a natural power forward relegated to center duty much of last year.

"We definitely need to rebound better," Massimino said.

Pelle, who grew three inches and added muscle since last year is the most intriguing possibility, with the physical skills to develop into a quality big man at 7-feet-2-inches and 250 pounts. A tremendous shotblocker, he is undoubtedly a defensive dominator but is still raw offensively. If he can average between 8-10 points and rebounds a game, 'Nova would improve drastically.

Bryson is potentially solid but often suffers from turnover problems and inconsistency. If he can alleviate the mental mistakes, Bryson could give Massimino an answer at the pivot position.

If neither Pelle nor Bryson get the job done, Dowdell will get the call due to his experience and consistency. A good defender and strong rebounder at 6-feet-9-inches, the senior tri-captain provides the Cats with stability and size. If the young centers improve as expected, that would free up Dowdell to move to his more natural forward position.

While the pivot position remains a preseason question mark, the backcourt provides no such problems. Both Walker and Woodard have started for two years and apparently are ready for banner senior years. Walker, the unquestioned team leader, plays well in big games and works his counterpart hard defensively. Sixth in the Big East last year with five assists per outing, he is an excellent floor general and competitor.

But with the loss of Mumford, depth at the position is a concern. Senior David Miller has been solid in limited duty over the past three years, but his brother, Lance, will also play some at the point when the Cats decide to go big.

Woodard, the Big East three-point field goal leader at 48 percent last year, is deadly when left open by opponents. The 6-foot-6-inch guard has worked extensively over the summer to improve his driving and ball handling skills, a weakness last year. If Woodard can create his own shot, it could be a great year for him.

"We'll be a good team this year," Massimino said. "The kids look forward to going to the gym and we're excited."

The schedule is unforgiving and ranked the toughest in the nation by the NCAA. Besides 18 conference games, the Cats face North Carolina, Temple, LaSalle, Houston and Georgia Tech, all of which could be Top 40 teams nationally. For the Cats, the road will be tough but the time is now.

Malik Sealy, St. John's

Sealy and Buchanan lead senior laden Redmen

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Staff Reporter

St. John's is loaded with veteran talent and is primed for a run at the Big East Championship. With four returning starters, the Redmen have the experience necessary to compete in the rugged conference race.

Coach Lou Carnesecca is aware of the potential powerhouse on his hands. But the venerable instructor has downplayed the preseason hoopla surrounding his squad.

"Under normal circumstances, this could be a year for great, great optimism," he said. "But then, there's always the 'but.' That's always there. I mean how many teams supposed to win the Big East actually won it?"

Nevertheless, St. John's should improve upon last season's impressive 10-6 conference mark, good enough for a second-place finish in the regular season. The Redmen also posted a 23-9 overall record and advanced to the fourth round of the NCAA Tournament before falling to eventuaal champion Duke.

This season, the standards are even higher. Malik Sealy, a flashy 6-foot-8-inch forward, expressed the team's confidence. "A lot of teams just want to reach the Final Four. Our goal is to win the national championship. Aim for the moon and if you fail you'll be among the stars. For us, the national championship is the moon."

In order to achieve such success, the Redmen will need major contributions from Sealy, center Robert Werdann and point guard Jason Buchanan. The senior trio proved to be the key for St. John's last year and each is starting for his third consecutive season. When grouped with senior guard Chucky Sproling and sophomore power-forward Shawnelle Scott, the five form a starting unit capable of competing with anyone.

> We're really close this season as a team. I think everyone knows what it takes to win, especially the young guys.
> Forward Malik Sealy

Offensively, the Redmen will look to Sealy and his smooth, slashing moves. He averaged 21.1 ppg and 7.7 rpg last season. Werdann is a big target down low who has demonstrated scoring ability (11.3 ppg, 7.1 rpg).

The key to point production, however, will be the perimeter game. Buchanan, Sproling and fellow swingman Terrence Mullin must consistently hit from the outside to free the big men underneath. Otherwise, collapsing defenses could make inside scoring a difficult task for St. John's.

Said Carnesecca, "We've got to improve our shooting, our offensive point production, and we've got to cut down on turnovers. I think it's important for us to come up with eight new kids that are going to make sizeable contributions. We've got to make sure that their own individual happiness doesn't interfere with what our goals are going to be."

The Redmen should not have much trouble filling out their rotation. In addition to Mullin, the St. John's bench includes guard/forward Sergio Luyk, junior forward Lamont Middleton and forward Mitchell Foster, a junior college transfer. Another newcomer, freshman Derek Brown, could contribute depth at guard.

Defensively, St. John's should pressure foes into many turnovers. Buchanan and Sealy are good individual defenders, while the team as a whole possesses enough quickness and experience to help limit opponents from easy shot opportunities. While St. John's normally enjoys working from the half-court set, turnovers could enable the Redmen to enjoy an effective transition game.

> We've got to improve our shooting, our offensive point production, and we've got to cut down on turnovers.
> Head Coach Lou Carnesecca

The preseason polls are high on St. John's. The Redmen are ranked in the Top 10 in several polls and are a favorite, along with Connecticut and Seton Hall, to win the Big East crown.

St. John's should find out early just how good it really is. The team is scheduled to play Duke as part of the ACC-Big East Challenge. The Redmen will later play host to Indiana Dec. 21. Both teams are favored to win their respective conferences and challenge for the NCAA Championship.

Sealy thinks the Redman are up to the challenge. "We're really close this season as a team," he said. "I think everyone knows what it takes to win, especially the young guys. They played during the summer, before classes, and did a lot of the little things on their own, without people telling them. They've got it instilled in (them)."

If the Redmen consistently play to their potential, they should finish in the top two in the Big East and challenge for a Final Four spot.

Dehere heads Pirate charge for Big East title

By BOB TRAVISANO
Staff Reporter

After many years of being just another stepping stone for the better Big East teams, Seton Hall has put together a legitimate powerhouse in what many consider the toughest conference in the country. With outstanding recruiting and an innovative young coach in P.J. Carlesimo, the Hall's horizons look to be even broader than just a conference contender in 1991.

> With outstanding recruiting and an innovative young coach in P.J. Carlesimo, the Hall's horizons look to be even broader than just a conference contender.

Ever since their ill-fated stint in the NCAA Finals in 1989, the Pirates seemed to be building for sweet revenge against all the teams in the NCAA. Anthony Avent, only a sophomore in 1989, provided the Pirates with a strong inside game for the last three years enroute to making himself a first-round NBA draft choice last June. Although Avent is gone, Seton Hall has more than compensated with the arrival of 7-foot-2-inch center Luther Wright. Wright was a standout for Elizabeth High in N.J. as he led his team to a state title win in 1989. Last season he was forced to sit out the season as a redshirt because of low SAT marks.

Playing beside Wright will be 6-foot-7-inch forward Gordon Winchester, the team's defensive stopper, and 6-foot-8-inch Arturis Karnishovas, who bulked up to 215 pounds over the off-season. Both averaged 7.3 ppg and 4.6 rpg last season. Jerry Walker will provide valuable playing time and will likely start later in the season. Walker, a product of renown St. Anthony's high school, a redshirt in his freshman year, proved to be the catalyst in last year's stretch drive in the NCAA's with clutch rebounding and hustle.

There are many possibilities for backups at the two forward positions. Leahy, who was on the verge of starting last year until he broke his foot, should see significant time. Darrell Mims and Chris Davis, a pair of 6-foot-8-inch sophomores, will provide depth.

The Pirates' backcourt is one of the strongest in their history as well as one of the strongest in the league. Terry Dehere, a high school teammate of Walker, is back for his junior year. The premier guard ignited the Pirates' offense on the way to achieving some personal records. Last season he averaged 19.8 ppg as well as setting the school records for three-pointers made (105) attempted (245) and for the highest three-point shooting percentage (42.9). His compliment at the point is Bryan Caver, who after a tumultuous year of adjustment, has finally settled into the scheme of the Pirates' offense. In limited action, Caver averaged 4.6 ppg and 1.7 rpg as a substitute for departed Oliver Taylor. Backing up Caver will be junior Darryl Crist.

> If he [Wright] doesn't work hard, he won't play. It's that simple. I don't think it's going to be a problem.
> Head Coach P.J. Carlesimo

The Hall added some insurance at the guard positions by landing the ninth-rated recruit in the Big East, Danny Hurley. The sharp shooting Hurley, yet another St. Anthony's product, put up great numbers as a senior while like Wright, leading his team to a state title.

The Pirates have all the tools to go all the way this year, but the question lies with Wright. Will his year absence from basketball take a toll on his play? Carlesimo believes it won't be a problem. "If he doesn't work hard, he won't play," he said. "It's that simple. I don't think it's going to be a problem. I think Luther realized how much he missed playing last year."

Huskies revamp, look to return to 1989-90 form

By ED WASIELSWSKI
Staff Reporter

The University of Connecticut made all the right moves to land in the position it is in presently. Coming off back-to-back Sweet 16 appearances in the NCAA Tournament and loaded with an impressive freshman class, the 11th-ranked Huskies are ready to make more national noise in the 1991-92 season.

Coach Jim Calhoun, who has led UConn to a NIT title, consecutive NCAA tourney appearances and a Big East Conference crown, strives to build upon the success he has created at Connecticut. And with the roster he has stockpiled, led by senior sensation Chris Smith, Calhoun has the fans buzzing.

After the dream season of two years ago, when the Huskies made the Final Eight, Calhoun and his ace recruiters Howie Dickenman and Dave Leitao kept themselves busy scouting the nation in search of talent. This year, the dividends will be reaped. When McDonald's all-America Donyell Marshall committed to UConn, Calhoun and his staff put the finishing touches on the school's finest recruiting class ever. The other top-flight prospects include Brian Fair, a probable starter in the backcourt, and Californian Kevin Ollie, the Huskies' heir apparent to Smith.

While UConn has put itself in an enviable position, the key to the season will be how Calhoun is able to use all this talent at one time. Unlike last season when the Huskies had to slow down the tempo and play halfcourt basketball, the 1991-92 version of the UConn Huskies should return to its upbeat style of basketball.

"The system we use allows us to play ten people comfortably," Calhoun said. "We think we'll be pretty deep and that should help us wear down other teams."

> We think we'll be pretty deep and that should help us wear down other teams.
> Head Coach Jim Calhoun

If the Huskies are to achieve any success, it will have to be directed by senior co-captain Smith. Since his freshman season, Smith has been a wizard with the ball and an exceptional defensive player. Also, Smith has led UConn in scoring for the past two years, including an impressive 18.9 ppg average last season.

With the departure of John Gwynn and graduate student Steve Pikell, the Huskies lose their top sixth-man (12.5 ppg last season) and their steady point guard. Replacing Gwynn and Pikell will be freshmen Ollie, Fair and Richie Ashmeade. Fair and Ollie are UConn's backcourt of the future and certainly fit the mold of the typical UConn player during the Calhoun era — sleek, quick and defensive-minded. In addition, Ashmeade gives UConn a combination guard who can play both backcourt positions. Senior Gilad Katz, a 6-foot-3-inch Israeli, will be looking to pry minutes away from this trio of outstanding rookies.

While the backcourt responsibilities fall heavily on the shoulders of Smith, the frontcourt returns all three starters. Junior forwards Scott Burrell and Toraino Walker and senior co-captain Rod Sellers provide the Husky attack with leadership and tourney-hardened poise. With Sellers at center, the Huskies have a worker who averaged 11.7 ppg and 8.0 rpg last season. Burrell, who was second in the nation with 112 steals, is the team's best athlete. The small forward improved his numbers to 12.6 ppg and 7.5 rpg after a solid rookie year. With the muscular Walker at power forward and 7-footer Dan Cyrulik as the top reserve, the Huskies have a solid, physical front line.

> UConn has already achieved national respect. Now it's time for the Huskies to take it one step further.

The frontcourt newcomers are led by Donyell Marshall, a do-it-all player who gives the Huskies their first bonafide blue-chipper since Calhoun landed in-state prep star Smith. Marshall can stick the three-pointer, run the baseline or grab rebounds. Rudy Johnson provides additional depth at the small forward position.

Despite the tremendous freshman class, which is ranked third nationally, and the returning nucleus, Calhoun faces another challenging year. With all the right pieces in place, UConn could emerge as a big winner this season. Yet, the Huskies must cash in on the opportunity.

"I don't think blending will be a problem," Calhoun said. "They all end up hating me, anyway. It gives them something in common.

UConn has already achieved national respect. Now it's time for the Huskies to take it one step further.

Hoya sophomore Robert Churchwell is expected to improve greatly after garnering All-Freshman honors last year.

Mourning moves back to center, anchors Hoyas

By BOB TRAVISAND
Staff Reporter

They are the bad boys of the Big East. They're the NCAA's answer to NBA's Detroit Pistons. For those fans that don't get the hint, the juggernaut described is the Georgetown Hoyas. Dominant centers, tough inside play, and a tenacious defense have been hallmarks of their game.

In recent years, the Hoyas have overrun opposing teams with the powerful frontline of Alonzo Mourning and Dikembe Mutombo.

> For the first time since 1980-81, the Hoyas lost 10 or more games.

These two produced an explosive scoring, rebounding and shot blocking tandem, but last year Mourning went down early in the season with an injury and missed nine games. When he returned he never did regain his previous form. Mutombo managed to play magnificently, but the Hoyas still had their worst year in a decade. For the first time since 1980-81, they lost 10 or more games and dropped out of the top 25 for the first time in three years.

Some may think that losing Mutombo may put Georgetown deeper in a hole this season. Jim Calhoun, the UConn Huskies coach, had this to say about the Hoyas big men: "It was Mutombo's team a little bit more (last year) because Alonzo was missing. But handling Alonzo alone is going to be tough enough. I think he is going to pick the team up on his shoulders."

Mourning remains the key to the Hoyas, because after a lackluster season in 1990-91, he must redeem himself if he wants to go to the NBA as a lottery pick. Marty Blake, NBA scout, had this to say about the center. "I think Alonzo Mourning is certainly a lottery pick if he plays well. What happened last year does not mean anything . . . Short of being hit by a truck, he'll be a high NBA draft pick."

Alonzo is not the only element to a budding Hoyas team. A trio of sophomores, who were thrown to the Big East last year, should improve this season. The best of the three is forward Robert Churchwell, who averaged 8.4 points and 4.8 rebounds last season and was unanimously selected to the Big East all-freshman team. He has the potential to become a great scorer and defender in the mold of former Hoya great Reggie Williams. "That third guard-forward type shooter has been the difference (in the Big East)," Calhoun said.

The backcourt will be under the control of fellow sophomores Joey Brown and off-guard Charles Harrison. Although the two shot only 35 percent from the floor, both now have a year of Big East experience. Harrison's efforts last season (11.7 ppg) earned him all-league freshman honors along with Churchwell.

Another player who put in solid minutes was senior hustler Brian Kelly. Although he only averaged 2.6 ppg and 1.6 rpg, he was nonetheless known for his tough physical play.

Providing that they polish their skills a little more, two sophomores that could provide needed inside help are center Pascual Fleury and the Yugoslavian import Vladimir Bosanac. Ronny Thompson, the coache's son, could lose some playing time with the arrival of several freshman.

Georgetown's recruiting class was average at best, although some freshmen may play key roles this season. The cream of the crop is guard John Jacques, who has point guard ability and a fine shooting touch. He averaged 22 ppg, seven rpg, and eight apg in high school last year. Irvin Church, a guard out of Maryland, may provide long distance relief for the Hoyas. Last year he made 40 percent of his shots from three-point range. The sleeper in this pack may prove to be the mobile Derrick Patterson who comes from a great basketball school in Chicago's Dunbar High. Also, swingman Kevin Millen may provide needed help at the small forward for Churchwell.

The final piece of the puzzle is coach John Thompson, who enters his 21st year with an impressive 422-155 record during his tenure. Thompson once again assumes the role of supreme motivator to get the sophomores to realize their game potential and to get Mourning to play like an NBA big man. The Hoyas have the ability to go far if all the pieces fall into place. This year there will be no middle of the road for the Hoyas. Either look for them to win big, or if the younger players don't materialize, to flounder.

Dave Johnson, an all-league candidate, should follow Billy Owens as the next Orangeman superstar.

Orangeman rebuild with Johnson and Autry

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

The Syracuse Orangemen may find themselves in an unfamiliar position this year — in the middle of the Big East standings. Coach Jim Boheim will have to deal with the loss of two of his best players from last season, Billy Owens and LeRon Ellis. But don't count the Orange out just yet. As always, Syracuse landed severeal prize recruits who figure to contribute almost immediately and several key players from last season's 26-6 team return.

Syracuse will have to rely on 6-foot-6-inch forward Dave Johnson to become the team leader this season.

Boeheim does not have high expectations for this year's team. "I'd guess that most people would pick us fifth, maybe even sixth," Bonheim said. "I don't really like that. I'd like to be picked first or second."

Filling the hole that opened up when Owens departed for the NBA will be difficult because he could do so many things on the court — he averaged 23.3 points and 11.6 rebounds last year. Owens also had the ability to intimidate the opponent and electrify the huge Carrier Dome crowds with his sensational dunks.

Boeheim thinks that his team will have to make some adjustments to compensatae. "I think we'll struggle," he said. "We'll have to rely on the three-point shot a lot more and we're going to have to integrate a lot of the freshmen right away."

Syracuse will have to rely on 6-foot-6-inch forward Dave Johnson to become the team leader this season. Johnson certainly has the ability — he averaged 19.4 points and 6.3 rebounds last year. But some critics question Johnson's ability to score if Owens isn't there to complement him. This year, defenders will be paying more attention.

Last year's backup center, 6-foot-10-inch junior Conrad McRae, also will have to contribute if the Orangemen are to survive the Big East's physical style of play. McRae will have to provide the rebounding strength that the team lost with the departure of Owens and Ellis, both strong rebounders. In order to be effective, McRae must avoid making the mistakes that he often made last year, mostly committing silly fouls and goaltending violations.

In the backcourt, the leader will be sophomore guard Adrian Autry. Autry had a promising freshman season as he was the team's fourth-leading scorer (9.7 ppg) and averaged over five apg. However, he must work on several aspects of his game if he is to become a premier point guard in the league. His shooting was sometimes suspect (40 percent fgp.) and he turned the ball over too often. His defense needs improvement as well, but Autry has the tools to be a great player.

Joining Autry in the backcourt will be junior Michael Edwards. Edwards was hampered by a sprained ankle last year and never really recovered.

The Orangemen will have to rely upon unproven but highly touted freshmen to contribute right away at many positions. Among the best of Syracuse's recruits are guard Anthony Harris, a sharpshooter who can drive to the basket; Lazarus Sims, an outstanding passer; and Luke Jackson, a tremendous leaper who has the potential to ignite Carrier Dome crowds with his dunking ability. Someone in this young group must step forward and contribute if Syracuse wants to continue its winning ways.

Syracuse will not be the dominant force that it was last year in the Big East when it won the season title. The Orangemen just lost too much leadership, scoring and rebounding ability from Owens and Ellis. But don't expect them to be cellar dwellers with Miami. Syracuse is still a very good team without Owens because players like Autry and Johnson have shown that they can become dominant players. If Autry and Johnson can perform up to their potential, if McRae can solidify the low post and if the newcomers can step in and contribute, the Orangemen can realistically finish anywhere from second to sixth place in the Big East this year. But don't underestimate Syracuse — it always seems to win even after it loses key players. Don't be surprised if Syracuse finishes near the top of the Big East standings come March.

Malcolm Huckaby is the leader of an excellent sophomore class that hopes to guide the Eagles back to the top of the Big East.

Sophomore class brings hope to Chestnut Hill

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

Not long ago, Boston College was a perennial basketball power. In the early years of the Big East conference, the Eagles were always strong contenders for the league title. However, the fortunes of the team have taken a turn for the worse in recent years. BC has not had a winning season since 1987-88, and since then has assumed the role of the Big East's doormat. Last season was the second consecutive year in which the Eagles finished with a 1-15 conference record.

He [Billy Curley] is going to become one of the better players that will have played in this conference.
Head Coach Jim O'Brien

In spite of all the grim facts facing the Eagles, the 1991-92 team has plenty of reason to look forward to the upcoming season. "I'm very optimistic," said head coach Jim O'Brien. "I think that we have a chance to be a much better team."

A good deal of this optimism stems from sophomore forward Billy Curley. Three other sophomores also figure to play pivotal roles for BC in point guard Howard Eisley and shooting guards Malcolm Huckaby and Gerrod Abram. After seeing plenty of playing time in their freshman season, the experience that these four have gained will likely improve the Eagles' level of play for this year.

One year ago, Curley came to Chestnut Hill with great expectations and began living up to them immediately. He led the team in points (12.6), rebounds (6.9) and field goal percentage (54.2). Though his play was erratic at times, his streaks of brilliance were enough to win him Big East Freshman of the Year honors. With a year's experience under his belt, Curley will likely display more consistency the second time around. "He is going to become one of the better players that will have played in this conference," O'Brien said of the future star.

Eisley, Huckaby, and Abram should receive most of the playing time at their respective guard positions. Like Curley, these three had the benefit of many minutes on the floor during their freshman years. Though Eisley was the sole proprietor of the point last season, the pressure is now on him to produce better numbers. He shot only 36 percent from the floor his freshman year, and the Eagles are now counting on him to execute some much-needed outside shooting. Abram should have a slight edge over Huckaby for playing time at off-guard.

If the Eagles are to substantially improve upon their disappointing conference record, they will need a strong season from center David Hinton. After a promising freshman season, he was unable to follow it up last year. An ankle injury and the death of his father clearly took their toll on Hinton and his performance was sub-par throughout the 1990-91 season. His return as both a scorer and rebounder is essential to BC's overall team performance.

The remaining forward role opened up when Doug Able graduated. Seniors Willy Foley and Corey Jackson will likely see some playing time at the position.

Unfortunately for BC, none of this year's recruits look as though they will be able to match the monumental impact of last year's acquisitions. The most likely contributor from this year's class is Marc Molinsky, a point guard from Ohio. Molinsky is a dangerous shooter and may see some playing time if Eisley is unable to improve his shooting abilities.

I'm very optimistic. I think that we have a chance to be a much better team.
Head Coach Jim O'Brien

With virtually everything in place for a solid 1991-92 season, the pressure is on O'Brien to lead his troops to victory. The addition of Miami to the conference should save BC from the league cellar, but the Eagles have higher aspirations for themselves. With an increasingly experienced core of talent, this year's team is looking to return to contention in the Big East.

Muscular forward Marquees Bragg is the leader of a strong and deep frontline.

Friars turn to frontline without Murdock

By ALEX SCOFIELD
Staff Reporter

Can a Big East team lose the league's leading scorer, an eventual first-round draft pick, and actually expect to improve the following year? The Providence College Friars should be able to do just that for the 1991-92 season. The key loss is Eric Murdock, who went on to be taken in the first round by the Utah Jazz during last spring's NBA draft. Though nobody questions the impact Murdock had on the Friars, he was unable to lead them to an NCAA Tournament spot last year as Providence became one of only two Big East teams that failed to claim a spot among the sixty-four team field.

P.C. instead chooses to look forward to a team that will be substantially improved with more experienced upperclassmen and several key arrivals. The Friars led the Big East in rebounds last season and an immense frontline featuring Marques Bragg and Dickey Simpkins insures that their success on the boards will continue. Sophomores Michael Smith and Robert Phelps are both prepared to play key roles for Providence after their tenure as Proposition 48 freshmen.

Bragg's senior year should find him as the key player on a frontline loaded with talent and depth. Weighing in at 220 pounds, Bragg shows authority in every aspect of the game. He was the team leader in rebounds last year (280), is the leading scorer (12.2 ppg) among the returning Friars, and a dominant presence on defense as well.

Bragg is far from being alone in terms of talent. Smith should be a force to be reckoned with immediately. He was highly touted as a high school recruit, showing exceptional ability off the boards and possessing intimidating dunk kills.

Simpkins was an impact player all through his freshman season last year, second only to Bragg on the team for rebounds.

Though the Friars' front line is in better shape than ever, serious question marks remain concerning their two guard positions.

Though the Friars' frontline is in better shape than ever, serious question marks remain concerning their two guard positions. Holes exist after the versatile Murdock packed his bags for Salt Lake City. Phelps, highly regarded as a prep, hopes he can step right in at off-guard despite his absence last year. His outside shooting ability is an attribute which makes him a very attractive option for coach Rick Barnes. Incumbent junior point guard Trent Forbes was prone to inconsistency last season, but will most likely get one more chance to prove himself as a starter. Should he fail to come through, senior Corey Floyd and freshman Matt Alosa are waiting in the wings for their chance.

But make no mistake, the Friars will win games up front. "In [the Big East], you've got to be strong and physical up front," says Barnes. Last year's edition could rebound with the best of them, and in all probability, will be even more dominant in the paint this year. If Phelps and Forbes are able to adequately play the guard roles, P.C. will be legitimate contenders in the quest for a strong Big East finish. And after last year's narrow miss, there is no reason to believe that the Friars will not be able to muscle their way to the 1992 NCAA Tournament.

Sean Miller, Pitt's only returning starter, must lead the Panthers if they are to reestablish themselves after a disappointing year.

Miller plays leader on youthful Panthers

By MIKE AGOLINO
Staff Reporter

The University of Pittsburgh will be entering the Big East this season having lost four key players to graduation, Jason Matthews, Brian Shorter, Darelle Porter and Bobby Martin. Only Sean Miller remains from a group of players who never really lived up to the expectations of Pittsburgh hoops fans. As a result, Pitt is an unknown team this season as its performance will depend upon how well its new players can adjust to the Big East's style of play and whether or not Miller will be able to carry the team on his shoulders if the Panthers struggle.

Miller will anchor the backcourt at point guard. He should provide the Panthers with much needed leadership and outside shooting ability.

Pitt has been picked to finish as low as seventh place in the league this season. The only player who has considerable experience is Miller, who enters his fifth season due to an ankle injury that sidelined him two years ago.

Coach Paul Evans is trying to stress a positive attitude with his players. "You don't like the kids to believe it [seventh place] themselves, because then they'd start playing to that level. All you'd have to do is win the first four games, though. Then, all that stuff would be forgotten."

Pitt's center this season will be untested Eric Mobley, who did not play last year because he failed to meet the Proposition 48 requirements for eligibility. Mobley is a very physical player at 7-feet, 245 pounds, but undoubtedly will be rusty. Joining Mobley on the frontline will be junior Chris McNeal. McNeal, a power forward who is a strong inside scorer and rebounder, may see some action at center if Mobley is not ready to play in the low post. Six-foot-11-inch Darren Morningstar, primarily a backup last year, will see considerable time at forward and center.

Several inexperienced players will be competing for the small forward spot in the lineup. Sophomores Gandhi Jordan and Antoine Jones figure to have the best shot because they have a bit more playing time under their belts than the other contenders.

Miller will anchor the backcourt at point guard. He should provide the Panthers with much needed leadership and outside shooting ability. Sophomore Ahmad Shareef will start at shooting guard. Shareef has great speed and leaping ability but must become a more consistent outside shooter.

Tim Glover and Jordan also will see time at the position. In addition, look for freshman Jerry McCullough to see some time at point guard if Evans wishes to take advantage of Miller's shooting range by occasionally moving him to shooting guard.

Besides McCullough, a key newcomer for Pitt will be Orlando Antigua, a small forward with excellent ability. Joining him will be power forward Chris Bennett, an improving player who will have to fight for playing time.

In order for Pitt to contend this year, they must see improvement from its promising sophomores. Shareef, Jordan, Morgan and Glover all had their moments last season, but no one played consistently. It will be interesting to see how these players can adjust to their increased time in the spotlight since they were primarily bench players last year who were not subjected to Coach Evans' demanding style on a regular basis.

Mobley must become an effective scoring and rebounding force in the middle if Pitt is to compete in the defensive-minded Big East. In addition, Miller must be able to score more often this year to compensate for Pitt's lack of offensive firepower. He must provide leadership, something that he was criticized for not doing last year. Miller will have to be the glue that holds the team's pieces together. It will not be an easy task because inexperience is often difficult to overcome in the Big East. Overall, this does not figure to be one of Pitt's better years. Better days lie ahead once the Panthers' young talent has a chance to develop.

Jake Morton leads a Hurricane squad outmanned in their inaugural Big East campaign.

'Canes face stiff challenge in inaugural season

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Staff Reporter

The Big East Conference is a fraternity of outstanding basketball teams. Every year, nine teams battle neck-and-neck for the rights to wear the Big East crown. And every year, the Big East plays a dominant role in the outcome of the NCAA Tournament. This season, the Big East welcomes the University of Miami.

The Hurricanes enter their inaugural season with a much-heralded freshmen class, an experienced backcourt and a plethora of question marks. Leading the way, Head Coach Leonard Hamilton hopes to improve on last season's 9-19 record and bring all the pieces together before Jan. 2, UM's conference opener at UConn.

Renown for their prowess on the gridiron, the Hurricanes will face stif competition every game in the Big East.

Renown for their prowess on the gridiron, the Hurricans will face stiff competition every game in the physical Big East. With the departure of last year's leading scorer and rebounder Joe Wylie to the NBA, Hamilton must somehow find people to compensate for his 18.4 points and 10.0 rebound average. Also, the 1991-92 Hurricans need to blend the new talent with the old veterans in order to maximize the team's potential in the nation's fiercest, most grueling basketball conference.

"We want to be the best team we can be," said Hamilton, now in his second season at the helm. "We're not putting as much emphasis on how many games we win as much as on how much we improve. I have to be realistic about where we are and what we have to do to reach our goal."

And despite the loss of the 6-foot-9-inch Wylie and the lack of a Big East-caliber frontline, the 'Canes are not without bright spots. For starters, prized rookies Ochiel Swaby and Constantin Popa highlight a spectacular recruiting coup orchestrated by Hamilton and the UM coaching staff. In addition, Hamilton has a stacked backcourt with three veterans, Jerome Scott, Trevor Burton and Jake Morton, forming a nice rotation.

The return of the 6-foot-2-inch junior Morton, who missed last season with an injury, enables Hamilton to slide Scott back to the shooting guard position. After spending the 1990-91 season at the point where he dished out a team-high 111 assists, the 6-foot-3-inch Scott can now concentrate on raising his 13.3 points per game average from last season. Burton is the second leading returning scorer (11.2) who can play capably either in the backcourt or up front.

In addition, Hamilton inked highly-touted point guard Michael Gardner. The 5-foot-10-inch Gardner is an all-around backcourt player capable of sticking the outside shot, penetrating to the hoop or distributing the ball. With this added depth, the Hurricane guards will be able to hold their own come Big East time.

The frontline situation is completely different where Hamilton has many concerns. Who will be able to keep the muscle men like Alonzo Mourning and Robert Werdann off the glass? Who will be able to keep up with acrobatic athletes like Scott Burrell and Malik Sealy? And, who is going to contribute offensively? These concerns keep the 'Canes from contending in the league.

The frontcourt returners did not post spectacular numbers last season. But with the incoming freshmen, a trio of junior forwards might not have to carry the brunt of the load. Samarr Logan is coming off a solid sophomore year in which he averaged 9.5 ppg and has the inside track on the starting small forward spot. Justin Caldwell and Hammie Ward must improve their overall games if they intend to take minutes away from the talented freshmen.

The two frontcourt flashes expected to lift Miami are Swaby and Popa. Around these two rookies Hamilton will build Miami's future. The 6-foot-7-inch Swaby is a scoring juggernaut whose 47 ppg clip last season led the nation. Popa, a slender center at 7-foot-3-inches, 220 pounds, must give the Hurricanes quality minutes plugging the middle. The final member of the incoming class is forward Pat Lawrence, who might surprise in the Big East with his solid all-around game.

Despite the tremendous freshmen class (ranked third amongst Big East schools) and the talented backcourt, Miami will have trouble adjusting to the physical play of the Big East without interior strength. Despite the negatives, Hamilton prefers to maintain a positive attitude.

"I like the challenge," he said. "But we have to be realistic and look at the process other schools went through when they joined the Big East. We have to do the best job teaching that we can, every day. We have a quality school, a quality program and quality exposure. We have to feel it's just a matter of time before we can compete."

Miami needs time to compete in Big East

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

There will be a new face in the Big East Conference this year, specifically one wearing green and orange and getting pounded regularly.

For now, that description fits the Miami Hurricanes.

The 'Canes, known for one of the most successful football teams in the 1980's, made the jump to the Big East to upgrade its basketball program to hopefully reach the same level as its football team.

The Big East is the conference in which this goal can be realized. One of the premier conferences in the country, it admitted Miami mainly to keep the conference together. Syracuse, Boston College, and Pittsburgh all have top football teams, but since the Big East did not have a football conference, those teams missed out on a lot of revenue which conferences divide among its members for appearing in a bowl game. These schools, therefore, were thinking seriously about moving into another conference and, if they did, their basketball programs would follow and that would be the end of the Big East.

So Big East commissioner Mike Tranghese enticed Miami into the Big East to solidify the Big East by adding a football league. Tranghese admitted Temple, West Virginia, Rutgers, and Virginia Tech for football only to form a strong football conference of eight that includes Miami.

Although the decision greatly upgrades the conference in football, the basketball conference is not strengthened with the addition of a 9-19 team that loses its leading scorer and rebounder and adds four freshmen. Right now, most Big East teams will travel to Miami for an easy win and a day at the beach. But can the 'Canes build a legitimate team in the extremely competitive Big East in the near future?

"It's so unfair and difficult to put a timetable on it [Miami's expected rise]. The scenario has never existed and the only one that may have is at Georgia Tech," said coach Leonard Hamilton.

Hamilton also considers the Northeast as a prime recruiting area, even more so than nearby North Carolina and Virginia. "We were hoping it would be the Big East over the Atlantic Coast Conference (ACC). The ACC would be tremendous but the Big East gives us more of a recruiting area. The ACC consists of a lot of state universities that attract a lot of their in-state recruits."

It's so unfair and difficult to put a timetable on it [Miami's expected rise]. The scenario has never existed and the only one that may have is at Georgia Tech.
Head Coach Leonard Hamilton

The lure of warm weather year-round is a recruiting tool that Miami has over the rest of the Big East. Add that to the opportunity that new players will have in playing immediately and Miami has potential. But the roadblocks outnumber the possibilities.

Miami is a football school. The student body and alumni live and die for the football team. It's very hard to keep that intensity and enthusiasm up for another three months, especially for a team that will lose a lot of basketball games. Examples of one-sport schools are Duke, Notre Dame, UNLV, Clemson, North Carolina and Florida State. No matter how successful the 'other' program becomes, it never will match the established one.

Miami averaged 2,000 fans last year. That should increase this year. However, the 'Canes must play all their home games in downtown Miami, away from campus. This is a major concern of Hamilton's and it is one that the University must study if it wants to establish a basketball power.

Jim O'Brien, head coach of the 0-16 Boston College Eagles, offers this bit of advice to Miami followers. "People have to understand that they must be patient," O'Brien said. "In the Big East, there are no breathers. There are 18 games of facing intensity night after night. You don't realize how hard you're playing until you play a team outside of the Big East. But be patient. Hamilton knows what it's all about."

The Miami players, though, are really looking forward to competing in the Big East.

"There is no defeated attitude here. Our approach is not to stay up mentally, but go into every game to win it," said point guard Jake Morton.

"What better opportunity could there be than playing in the Big East?", said Morton. "There are five or six teams in the Top 20 and we as a team and program are taking it as a great challenge."

Hamilton has instilled in his players the proper attitude going into a very difficult situation. Time will tell if that will hold up through the lean years, but success will come with hard work and a whole lot of patience. The potential at Miami is extremely great, but it could take five years before Miami is competitive in the Big East.

"Hopefully we can get lucky with a breakthrough of players. We intend to stay focused and build the program step-by-step and have a solid foundation for a long time. Everyone is excited. We're right where we want to be," said Hamilton.

Duke and North Carolina remain teams to beat

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

The Atlantic Coast Conference enters the 1991 college basketball season with marquee teams and players. The preseason consensus as the nation's toughtest league, the ACC includes six teams with strong chances for NCAA bids. But while the league is strong from top to bottom, the top two teams, Duke and North Carolina, are the traditional powers and should once again battle each other for the conference crown. Here's a capsule look at the nine teams in predicted order of finish:

1. DUKE

What will the Blue Devils, the 1991 NCAA champions, do for an encore? Most likely, they will return to the Final Four for the fifth straight year and sixth in seven years under coach Mike Kryzewski. The only question mark is outside shooting with the loss of Billy McCaffery, who transferred to Vanderbilt. The glue is center Christian Laettner (19.8 ppg, 8.7 rpg) and point guard Bobby Hurley (11.3 ppg, 7.4 apg), both among the best at their positions. Add to that the "Hill brothers," Grant and Thomas, and Duke has one of the most dangerous quartets in the country. Grant Hill has boundless potential, while Thomas Hill is a quick and athletic swingman in the Marc Macon mold. Due to top recruiting, depth will not be a concern. Brian Davis, who outplayed Stacey Augmon in the NCAA's, and sophomore Antonio Lang give the Devils even more options with their athleticism. Also, look for prize recruit Cherokee Parks, a Laettner look alike and play alike, to get major minutes come March. The beat goes on in Durham.

If Hurley continues to improve and Grant Hill makes good on his tremendous potential, Duke could be better than last year and run away with national honors.

2. NORTH CAROLINA

Last year: 10-4 (second in conference)

Returning starters: two

With the graduation of Rick Fox, Pete Chilcutt and King Rice, the Tar Heels will suffer through some growing pains. But the cupboard is not bare in Chapel Hill. Senior guard Hubert Davis (13.3 ppg) and junior forward George Lynch (12.5 ppg, 7.4 rpg) are all-league candidates, and sophomores Eric Montross, Derrick Phelps and Brian Reese have a year's experience after coming in as part of one of the most hailed classes in history. One from the fabulous freshman class, 6-foot-11-inch Clifford Rozier, transferred despite displaying star potential. That loss thinned an already inexperienced frontline. But Lynch, a high school teammate of Villanova's Arron Bain, and Montross (4.2 rpg) should provide solid inside play. Phelps should be adequate and potentially excellent at the point if his weak knees hold up and Davis is an NBA prospect with long-range shooting abilities. While it will be difficult to return to the Final Four, coach Dean Smith and his Heels will play a big role come tourney time.

3. GEORGIA TECH

Last year: 6-8 (tied fifth in conference)

Returning starters: four

How can the yellow jackets be better without all-America guard Kenny Anderson, taken third in the NBA? Easy, GTU returns four starters from last year and recruited two of the top ten players in high school last year, including a point guard who may be better suited for the team than Anderson, who thought shot before pass. Freshman Travis Best, like Anderson, is lefthanded and a brilliant penetrator, could be the nation's impact newcomer like his predecessor two years before. Off guard John Barry (15.9 ppg), the son of former NBA great Rick Barry, was a pleasant surprise as a junior college transfer last year and should continue to improve. The frontline is huge and talented with 7-footers Malcolm Mackey (15.3 ppg, 10.7 rpg) and Matt Geiger (11.4 ppg). Mackey, one of the nation's top rebounders, is the most underrated player in the conference. Freshman James Forrest, a Larry Johnson type force, could also impact on the frontline. GTU may be the nation's sleeper.

4. WAKE FOREST

Last Year: 19-11, 8-6 (tied third in conference)

Returning Starters: Four

Sure, there aren't many Demon Deacons around. But there also aren't a lot of Rodney Rogers' in college basketball. Rogers (16.3 ppg, 7.9 rpg), the nation's best freshman a year ago, came into Wake Forest heralded as its best ever and did not disappoint, immediately turning an enigmatic team into a contender and NCAA team. Along with Rogers, center Chris King (15.11 ppg) and Anthony Tucker (11.1 ppg) form one of the conference's best frontlines. The backcourt is solid with senior Derrick McQueen (4.9 apg) and another freshman sensation Randolph Childress (14 ppg), who must overcome serious knee surgery.

But while the league is strong from top to bottom, the top two teams, Duke and North Carolina, are the traditional powers and should once again battle for the conference crown.

5. VIRGINIA

The Cavaliers will have a new look this year without graduated point guard John Crotty and the possibility of starting two freshmen. Fortunately, the recruiting class ranked second in the nation and UVA will still have the services of All-ACC pick Bryant Stith. Coach Jeff Jones has his hands full, but the talent level may be higher than last year's 19-11 team. If the newcomers live up to expectations, UVA could be the sleeper team in the conference.

6. FLORIDA STATE

In its first year in the conference, FSU could contend for its second consecutive NCAA berth with the return of three starters. Junior Douglas Edwards, who averaged 16.4 points last year, heads a strong frontline while Charlie Ward, a quarterback on the football team, exceeded expectations as a freshman point guard last year. The starting five is among the ACC's best, and the Seminoles play strong defense for coach Pat Kennedy. Whether or not FSU can handle the balanced ACC is uncertain, but the team has excellent athletic ability and plenty of experience.

7. MARYLAND

Last year it was Walt Williams and the other four. Unfortunately, this season may be no different. Williams, a 6-foot-8-inch point guard, does it all for the Terrapins (18.7 ppg, 5.1 rpg, 5.4 apg). But coach Gary Williams must find players to take the load off his superstar. The best of the bench are Garfield Smith and Kevin McClinton. Both are returning starters who play consistently but unspectacularly. Often compared to Magic Johnson, Williams will have to play like him to keep the Terrapins respectable.

8. CLEMSON

The Tigers lose first-round NBA pick Dale Davis from a poor 11-17 team. Although three other starters return, Clemson is left with severe problems in the middle without Davis, a rebounding monster. David Young, an outstanding outside shooter, leads a guard oriented team that should remain among the conference's lower teams all season long. A sixth-place finish would be a miracle.

Sure, there aren't many Demon Deacons around. But there also aren't a lot of Rodney Rogers' in college basketball.

9. NORTH CAROLINA STATE

With the graduation of Chris Corchiani and Rodney Monroe, so go the Wolfpack's chances at postseason play. One of the nation's best backcourts in the past decade, Corchiani and Monroe leave the team devoid of any experienced backcourt talent. N.C. St. may start two freshmen in a rugged conference. Also, the frontcourt received a severe blow when Bryant Feggins was kicked off the team for academic reasons. The only saving grace is All-ACC candidate Tom Gugliotta, who must do it all for the depleted Wolfpack.

Jimmy Jackson, Ohio State

Indiana and Ohio St. dominate despite balance

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Assistant Sports Editor

Although many teams in the Big Ten are primed for improvement in 1991, the conference champion will once again come down to either Indiana or Ohio State.

The two heavyweights of a year ago remain head-and-shoulders above the rest of the competition. Indiana returns all five starters and the Buckeyes return all-America Jimmy Jackson plus an experienced senior backcourt of Mark Baker and Jamaal Brown.

After the top two, the conference can be split into two distinct divisions. The first one includes Michigan St., Iowa, Purdue, Michigan and Illinois. All these teams are closely matched and each has the potential to beat Indiana or Ohio St., but, nevertheless, they are all a notch below the leaders.

Below them comes three teams who could have very long, not to mention cold, winters. Northwestern, Minnesota, and Wisconsin all will be rebuilding this year and counting on freshmen and sophomores to carry the load.

Here is a team-by-team breakdown of the Big Ten:

Even without Smith, the Spartans will continue to win and a return trip to the NCAA's is in the cards.

1. INDIANA

The Hoosiers are definitely the team to beat this year in the Big Ten. The conference co-champs of a year ago have basically the same team, but with a year's more experience. Junior forward Calbert Cheaney has emerged as one of the top forwards in the country.

Indiana probably has the best depth at the guard position in the country with Jamal Meeks, Damon Bailey, Pat Graham, Greg Graham and Chris Reynolds. Coach Bobby Knight will have a hard time settling on two starting guards and probably will give all five considerable minutes.

The only real question mark on this team is the inside play. Senior center Eric Anderson will be looked upon by Knight to set up his post moves and establish himself on the boards. With the guards extending the defense, Anderson will be free to maneuver in the post and should get a lot of easy baskets.

There is no question that IU has the talent to win the national championship. Anderson and Cheaney are both two of the best at their positions in the country. Although the Hoosiers are young, the team is very well coached and should have the experience that was missing last year.

2. OHIO STATE

Jimmy Jackson.

Enough said.

The do-it-all junior is back again for a Buckeye team that will look to regain the dominance it exhibited during the regular season before running out of gas in March. Jackson, arguably the best player in the country, is fully recovered from a stress fracture suffered over the summer at the Pan American Games and is ready to lead the Buckeyes to the national championship.

If any one player can do it, it's Jackson. But it won't be easy for coach Randy Ayers to replace both Treg Lee and Perry Carter, two forwards who dominated the boards a year ago. Center Bill Robinson is a big key for the Buckeyes in the middle. The erratic senior must step up if the Buckeyes are to have a legitimate inside game.

Ohio St. is set in the backcourt with the underrated tandem of Mark Baker and Jamaal Brown. Scrappy forward Chris Jent is back again and will continue to lead the team with his hustle and spirit for the game.

3. MICHIGAN ST.

The Spartans definitely underachieved last year, finishing a disappointing 11-7 in the conference. The expectations were so high that anything less than the conference championship was considered a disappointment. Without Steve Smith, the Spartans are back in the middle of the pack, right where coach Jud Heatchcote likes it.

MSU returns four starters, all of whom are ready to step out of the shadow left by Smith. It seemed last year that the Spartans counted so heavily on Smith that everyone else's game suffered. This year, the team could be the surprise of the country with an inside duo of Mike Peplowski and Matt Steigenga. Senior point guard Mark Montgomery leads the Spartans and must look for his shot now that Smith has departed.

Michigan St. will have the time to develop in a conference that does not have much depth. The squad is very strong in the middle and that is a big advantage in a conference dominated by the guards. Even without Smith, the Spartans will continue to win and a return trip to the NCAA's is in the cards.

4. IOWA

The Hawkeyes were the surprise of the conference last year, finishing 9-9 in the Big Ten after being picked for last. Can the Hawkeyes put it together again?

Coach Tom Davis' club does not lose a single player from last year when everything gelled for Davis. The youngsters are not as inexperienced this year and know what it takes to win.

The major reason for the success last year can be attributed to the emergence of 6-foot-10-inch center Acie Earl. The junior tied a league record for blocked shots and averaged 16.3 ppg. This year, teams will be ready for Earl and make adjustments to take away this effectiveness. If they are successful, Iowa has nobody to turn to inside. The next tallest player on the squad is untested 6-foot-8-inch sophomore Chris Street.

5. PURDUE

The NCAA tournament team of last season loses its two best players, Jimmy Oliver (19.9 ppg) and Chuckie White (13.4 ppg, 8.5 rpg), but has the pieces to make a return trip with the coaching of Gene Keady.

The Boilermakers are young and inexperienced but will look to develop under senior guard Woody Austin, who has been readmitted to school after being ineligible last season. Keady has the makings of a solid frontcourt with Craig Riley (6.4 ppg), Cornelius McNary (3.8 ppg), and Ian Stanback (5.8 ppg). Purdue is shaky at guard with Austin as the only certainty right now.

6. MICHIGAN

The fans in Ann Arbor cannot wait to see the 1992 Wolverines. In fact, the whole country is looking forward to seeing just how good the recruiting class, consisting of Juwan Howard, Chris Webber, Jimmy King, Ray Jackson, and Jalen Rose actually is.

The talented freshmen join a group of four returning starters who led Michigan to the NIT. Only center Eric Riley (10.6 ppg, 8.6 rpg) and guard Michael Talley (11 ppg) could be starting at the end of the season, however.

Even with an extremely talented freshmen class, Michigan will have a hard time winning consistently. Freshmen in the Big Ten usually need a year to get their feet wet before contributing regularly and the supporting cast is questionable. Michigan should make the NIT again with a solid, young club that is on the rise.

Michigan should make the NIT again with a solid, young club that is on the rise.

7. ILLINOIS

The good news for the Illini is that they are off probation. The bad news is that it probably won't matter for a club that is a couple of players away from making the NCAA's.

Illinois received a tremendous blow a few weeks ago when 21-point scorer Andy Kaufmann was declared ineligible due to poor grades. The senior was to be counted on heavily by coach Lou Henson to lead the young and inexperienced Illini and his loss will really be felt.

Illinois will have a hard time replacing the scoring of Kaufmann but are set at point guard and power forward with Rennie Clemons (8.5 ppg, 3.1 apg) and Deon Thomas (15.1 ppg, 6.8 rpg). Both newscomers a year ago, Clemons and Thomas had tremendous seasons and should even be better in 1992.

After rounding out the starting five, depth will be a problem. The Illini do not have a senior on the roster and will have to turn to freshmen and sophomores with no experience. They are talented, though, and by midseason, Henson will have his club fighting for a postseason bid.

8. NORTHWESTERN

With four returning starters, hopes are somewhat high in Evanston, IL, for the Wildcats. This is a team that went 0-18 in the conference last year playing with mostly freshmen and sophomores.

The Cats have a solid nucleus behind guards Pat Baldwin (13.2 ppg, 3.2 apg), and Todd Leslie (14 ppg). Baldwin led the Big Ten in steals, with 36 more than runner-up Jimmy Jackson and Leslie shot an astounding 51 percent from behind the three-point line.

Kevin Rankin (11.4 ppg, 7.4 rpg) was a pleasant surprise for coach Bill Foster. The center will be counted on this year to lead an inexperienced frontcourt.

9. MINNESOTA

Talk about a team relying on youth. The Golden Gophers only have three upperclassmen on the roster and no one who averaged more than 10 ppg last season. Coach Clem Haskins has a handful of first-year players who look promising but obviously lack experience.

The frontcourt has the size to match up with anyone. Dana Jackson and Randy Carter are both 6-foot-8-inch forwards who are improving. Center Bob Martin, the only senior, could be a surprise and open up opportunities for the guards and Carter to excel.

Haskins brought in six new players to a team that is already very new. Chalk up to 1992 as the year that the Gophers grow.

10. WISCONSIN

Wisconsin will have a totally different look this year with five new starters and an assortment of redshirts, transfers and recruits. Seventy-six percent of the scoring and seventy percent of the rebounding was lost to graduation from a team that went to the NIT.

Coach Steve Yoder is using his Chicago connections to form his backcourt. Tracy Webster, who sat out last season due to Proposition 48, has the talent to become a top point guard in the Big Ten. Freshman Michael Finley should also see considerable time.

O'Neal and Day highlight athletic conference

By CHRIS ABELES
Sports Editor

Talk about off-season work, the Southeastern Conference (SEC) did a little work on the conference over the past few months, adding basketball powerhouses Arkansas and South Carolina.

In a move originally made to bolster the football strength of the conference, the SEC was split into two divisions, Eastern and Western. The irony of the situation is the basketball programs may benefit more than the football programs: The West division will receive Arkansas, a team ranked second behind UNLV going into the NCAA tournament last year. The East division will receive South Carolina, a strong team that upset North Carolina and was ranked in the nation's Top 25 through January.

This could be the year that the SEC, an NCAA tournament disappointment, the last few years has a team reach the Final Four. In Arkansas, Louisiana State, Alabama and Kentucky, the SEC has a group of teams that can play with anybody.

WEST

1. ARKANSAS

A team which last year was proclaimed as the only team with a legitimate chance of defeating almighty UNLV returns three starters in Lee Mayberry, Todd Day and Oliver Miller. These three seniors, all of whom were named to the SWC first-team a year ago, will try and make up for their team's characteristic second half letdowns witnessed last year. The team will look to Miller at center to provide them with his steady offensive production and fierce defense. The 6-foot-9-inch Miller, who is regarded as one of the premier centers in the nation, makes up for his apparent lack of height with his versatility. He can shoot the ball from the floor or pass off to an open teammate. The Razorbacks will look to Mayberry to control the backcourt as he did a year ago. Mayberry, who is projected as an NBA first-round pick, had 100 steals last season in addition to averaging 13.2 ppg. The final cog in this machine is swingman Day, who averaged 20.7 ppg last year and is a potent force at both the guard and forward positions.

To be successful this year, Arkansas has to eliminate the second quarter letdowns and overcome off-court problems. Seven Razorbacks will be on suspension until January.

2. LOUISIANA STATE

The "Shaq" is back. The most dominating force in all the NCAA, Shaquille O'Neal is back and hungry to avenge last season's disappointing loss to Connecticut in the first round of the NCAA tournament. O'Neal, an SEC first-team selection last season, will be in the center of things again this year as he tries to improve upon his league-leading 27.6 ppg and 14.7 rpp. An obvious NBA first-round selection, O'Neal stunned many people with his decision to stay at LSU instead of leave for the NBA draft. O'Neal plans to play out his remaining eligibility at LSU.

For LSU to be a legitimate Final Four contender, O'Neal will have to play to his potential and the rest of the team must come up with outside support.

The major difference in this year's LSU team is the perimeter shooting. A huge liability last year, the lack of perimeter shooting allowed other teams to collapse their defenses on O'Neal and effectively shut down the LSU offense. This season coach Dale Brown will rely on guard Mike Hansen and former prop 48 guard Jamie Brandon. In addition to those two, recruits Justin Anderson and Paul Marshall will help with the offensive production.

For LSU to be a legitimate Final Four contender, O'Neal will have to play to his potential and the rest of the team must come up with outside support.

3. ALABAMA

Another team that fell short of its billing last year was Alabama. Ranked in the preseason Top 5, the Crimson Tide started the season badly and never got on track. Although they had a decent tournament performance before bowing out to Arkansas in the Southeast region semifinal, the Tide could not live up to the preseason hype. This year, 'Bama's strength lies in its frontcourt with Robert Horry. Horry, a 6-foot-9-inch forward, is a good rebounder who can play on the inside as well as the outside. In the backcourt, James Robinson will be called on to jump into the shooting guard position. The only weak point on this team is the point guard position. Coach Wimp Sanderson will probably go to either Elliot Washington or, Dennis Miller both junior college transfers.

4. AUBURN

Auburn, a team that lacked leadership, strength and pure athleticism last year, hopes to return this year a little older and more experienced. The strong point of the Tigers is their perimeter shooting. The trio of Ronnie Battle, Reggie Gallon and Wesley Person combined for 174 three-pointers last year. In addition to this excellent, outside shooting, coach Tommy Joe Eagles picked up junior college transfer Rodney Dent. The 6-foot-10-inch center will be a much needed addition to this perimeter offensive team.

5. MISSISSIPPI

A team that ended up last in the conference a year ago will set out to prove they can do better. The team will look to Joe Harvel (17.4 ppg, 45 three-pt FG's) to stir things up on offense. Coach Ed Murphy has done away with his traditional man-to-man defense and inserted a zone press in order to create a fast break offense.

6. MISSISSIPPI STATE

The biggest turnaround in the conference this year will be Mississippi State's tumble from first to worst. Coming off a quick exit in the tournament's first round, the Bulldogs look to rebuild a team that lost most of its experience.

EAST

1. KENTUCKY

Probation has finally ended for the Kentucky Wildcats. The two-year sentence has been lifted, and the 'Cats are prepared to make up for lost time. Kentucky sports four returning starters in addition to Missouri transfer Travis Ford in the quest to return to the Final Four.

The only weak point on this team is the lack of a true center. The team lost 6-foot-8-inch center Reggie Hanson to graduation and the team will look to a few options to compensate for his loss. But what is lost in manpower is made up for in experience. Three of the four returning starters are seniors and the other starters Jamal Mashburn, an incredibly talented frontcourt player who might be filling the void left by Hanson. For Rick Pitino's team to return to postseason play, Kentucky must continue to improve with every game played.

2. TENNESSEE

For a team that finished in a tie for eighth in the conference last year, a second-place ranking may seem out of the question, but it is not. Led by SEC first-team player Allan Houston, the Volunteers started the season last year dismally but came around toward season's end and were one win away from an NCAA Tournament berth. In addition to Houston, the Vols will look to juniors Carlus Groves and Lang Wiseman to pick up some of the offensive slack. This team might start the season off a little rocky but will get together and make a run for the NCAA tournament.

3. SOUTH CAROLINA

One of the two new faces in the conference this year, South Carolina looks to make a good first impression. The Gamecocks, which showed flashes of excellent play in the beginning of the season with a win over North Carolina, proceeded to lose eight of their final ten games. But with four starters returning, the team should begin the climb back up to the Top 25.

4. VANDERBILT

Vanderbilt, a team that likes to defy the critics, could be at it again. Too bad it will not be this year. The Commodores return center Todd Milholland, guard Kevin Anglin and forward Bruce Elder all averaged around 11 ppg last season. But this team is one that will be coming around in a year or two.

5. GEORGIA

Another team hit hard by graduation, Georgia, loses three of athletic starters. Although young, Georgia has the makings of a decent team anchored by SEC first-team player Litterial Green, a 6-foot-1-inch guard who averaged 20.6 ppg last season. The question now lies with who will be his supporting cast. The Bulldogs will try to wear their opponents down with good defense from Shaun Golden and Arlando Bennett (32 blocks) and then put the ball in the hands of Green.

6. FLORIDA

A team which was once great has now fallen to the depths of the conference. Coach Lou Kruger will have his hands full trying to find a combination of players that will win him a few games. The only bright spot on a team with no standouts is guard Craig Brown, who made the SEC All-freshman team last year. Expect this team to be in the cellar for a few years to come.

Conference improves overall talent, balance

By JOHN OGLE
Staff Reporter

1. ARIZONA

Coach Lute Olson's squad may be better than they were last season, even though underclassman Brian Williams bolted to the NBA. This defection will mean more minutes for 6-foot-10-inch Sean Rooks and 7-footer Ed Stokes. The pair of big men and returning leading scorer Chris Mills form one of the most formidable frontlines in the nation. Khalid Reeves, Matt Othick and Wayne Womack round out the regular lineup.

The general opinion is that the Wildcats are among the top five teams in Division I. There is not much depth after the first six players. However, Reeves scares opponents with his potential to overtake a game. If Mills develops his immense scoring ability, the Final Four is within reach.

2. UCLA

Going into the season, the health of Ed O'Bannon appears to be the big question mark for the Bruins. O'Bannon, a redshirt freshman, regarded as one of the nation's top prospects, had another operation earlier this month on his reconstructed left knee. While UCLA is a talented team without O'Bannon, its inside game is quite suspect without him. The 6-foot-8-inch forward makes the squad a Top 10 pick in the national rankings.

Darrick Martin, a senior point guard, will need to take his game to another level if UCLA plans to go beyond the first round of the NCAA Tournament. Six-foot-10-inch forward Don MacLean has to show the maturity of a senior and dispel comparisons to Bill Laimbeer by toning down his outbursts.

Coach Jim Harrick, feeling the heat of high expectations, hopes the Bruins can regain the respect of a national power this year.

3. ARIZONA STATE

Coach Bill Frieder is on the verge of making the matchup against Arizona one of the most exciting intra-state rivalries year in and year out.

Sophomores Jamal Faulkner and Dwayne Fontant are a strong forward tandem. Frieder added a group of four freshmen that is rated among the top ten recruiting classes among Division I schools. Led by big man Mario Bennett of Denton, TX, the young Sun Devils will have some early growing pains. However, there is a bright future for the hoopsters in Tempe.

4. CALIFORNIA

Are there happier fans than those in Berkeley this year? First, the football team rises to the nation's Top 10. Basketball coach Lou Campanelli then receives an oral commitment from the best prep player in 6-foot-4-inch point guard Jason Kidd. Now, the Golden Bears are looking forward to a winning season and a possible NCAA bid.

There is good reason for such optimism this winter. Junior forward Brian Hendrick is one of college's best frontcourt players. He is a future NBA first round draft pick. Campanelli has provided a great supporting cast of freshmen who will, in time, develop into the pride of the Pac-10. K.J. Roberts, the prize of the recruits, reminds many of another Golden Bear alumnus, Kevin Johnson of the Phoenix Suns.

Darrick Martin, a senior point guard, will need to take his game to another level if UCLA plans to go beyond the first round of the NCAA Tournament.

The golden sun is shining down on Berkeley, indeed.

5. USC

Remember how Michael Jordan used to beg for some help from his fellow Bulls? Now it is Harold Miner, Southern Cal's best player, who needs support. Coach George Raveling must find an inside presence to complement Miner, who is often compared to Jordan, and his crazed three-point bombers.

Fans will be demanding a bid to NCAA Tournament as long as Miner is on campus. With 10 underclassmen developing, USC could be either a big surprise or a major disappointment.

6. STANFORD

Coach Mike Montgomery is in the same boat as Raveling. Losing four starters makes it difficult for the Cardinal to surpass its achievement of the NIT Championship. Adam Keefe is the only returning starter, but he was the star of last year's squad. Keefe, a 6-foot-9-inch power forward, is a projected NBA first-rounder and a qualified leader for what is otherwise a young team. Look out for new starting point guard Marcus Lollie, a junior whose quickness will set the tone for Stanford's game plan.

7. OREGON STATE

The Beavers could be on the verge of having their foundation collapse. Earnest Killum is a talented scoring guard whose health is a major question mark. He takes a blood-thinning medication to prevent clots from forming. Only a sophomore, many feel Killum will become a force if he does not have any more problems.

Rounding out a solid backcourt are point guard Charles McKinney and Brent Barry, former NBA great Rick Barry's son. One of the big men will need to step forward or else Oregon St.'s season will be over early.

Coach Lute Olson's squad may be better than they were last season, even though underclassman Brian Williams bolted to the NBA.

8. WASHINGTON STATE

This squad will definitely finish in the bottom half of the pack. Coach Kelvin Sampson was the main reason the Cougars went from 7-22 in the 1988-90 season to 16-12 last year. Sampson needs quality recruits to develop a program that will challenge other Pac-10 opponents.

All of the starters return, but none are even close to meriting national attention. With such a soft non-conference schedule filled with Oklahoma Baptists and Alcorn States, the postseason tournament selection committees will once again shun Washington State.

9. WASHINGTON

Coach Lynn Nance's crew will be going through some growing pains. All of these new faces need time to get better acquainted with the system. However, the time spent now will pay off next year.

Rich Manning, a 6-10 transfer from Syracuse, leads a group of nine newcomers and will step into a starting slot immediately. Nance also recruited a couple of players that may provide some luck on their side. One is Bond, Jason Bond. The other is Mark Pope. The Huskies may have a few tricks up their sleeves.

10. OREGON

Coach Don Monson never expected junior Terrell Brandon to go for the NBA money and prestige a year early. Unfortunately, it happened. The Ducks waddled to a 13-15 record last season and will not be able to accomplish even that without their star point guard.

With a young team and no true leader, the Ducks will probably fall to their weak non-conference opponents. By the time a new leader steps forward, Monson's squad may hit a brick wall known as the Pac-10 schedule. Any momentum it gains will be crushed in games against Arizona and UCLA.

Brent Price of Oklahoma and Adonis Jordan of Kansas

Top three teams will battle for conference crown

By CHRIS ABELES
Sports Editor

In a conference marked by wild home crowds and rough inside play, the Big Eight will offer much of the same this year minus the rough inside game. With insiders Doug Smith, Rich King, Shaun Vandiver, Mark Randall and Victor Alexander gone, the only legitimate threat in the middle this year is All-Big Eight selection Byron Houston of Oklahoma State. Out with the big men and in with the shooters. Whether this transition to perimeter shooting will make the Big Eight a more competitive conference has yet to be seen, but if it lands it another team in the championship game (Kansas made it last year), the change will be for the better.

1. OKLAHOMA STATE

The Cowboys received the first-place nod over national runner-up Kansas due to the man in the center, Houston. The 6-foot-7 inch Houston has what it takes to dominate a game, inside scoring ability coupled with an imposing presence on defense. The senior averaged 22.7 ppg. last season in addition to pulling down 10.5 rpg. Also returning for the Cowboys are senior guards Sean Sutton and Darwyn Alexander, who will provide invaluable leadership in the backcourt. The only recognizable weakness on this team that made it to the East Region Semifinals last season is its lack of a true frontcourt. Coach Eddie Sutton saw this problem in the off-season and hopes to strengthen the inside game with the additions of junior college transfers Randy Davis, Jonathon Triplett and Sean Walker.

With the experience in the backcourt and the strong inside play of Houston in a league that is abandoning inside rough stuff, expect Oklahoma State to go far with just a little help at the forward position.

2. KANSAS

Coming off an incredible season that saw the Hawks defeat the two, three and four seeds in last year's tournament and almost winning their second title in three years, the Jayhawks look to regroup and make another run.

In addition to these seasoned veterans, Coach Roy Williams has bolstered his team with one of the ten best recruiting classes in the nation.

Although graduation snatched a talented frontcourt in Mark Randall and Mike Maddox, Kansas has point guard Adonis Jordan and small forward Alonzo Jamison to fall back on. In addition to these seasoned veterans, Coach Roy Williams has bolstered his team with one of the ten best recruiting classes in the nation. With the loss of frontcourt power, Williams has recruited big men Ben Davis, Greg Gurley and Greg Ostertag who stand ready to fill the void left by Randall and Maddox.

Another high point for the Jayhawks is Northwestern transfer Rex Walters, who has excellent three-point range and good passing ability. His presence will add to the already potent backcourt.

A bid to the tournament seems likely, but Kansas will have to develop a stronger inside game in order to challenge Oklahoma State for the Big Eight Conference title.

3. OKLAHOMA

For a team that has nine new faces, a third-place finish in such an elite conference is amazing. But Billy Tubbs, who has amassed a 277-98 record at OU, will have his Sooners in playing condition come game time.

The Sooners will look to senior Brent Price and sophomore Jeff Webster who scored 17.5 and 18.3 ppg, respectively. The team will also look to all the new faces brought in. Tubbs recruited six junior college transfers this year all of them having forward capabilities and none of them standing over 6-foot-8-inches.

Last season this team lost to Stanford in the Championship Game in the NIT, but expects to be back in the NCAA's this year. With such an easy non-conference schedule, look for this team to make the tourney on its record alone.

4. MISSOURI

The Tigers return to the hope of postseason play this year as they come off probation. This team would have been an NCAA lock barring the exit of Doug Smith to the NBA. Smith averaged 23.6 ppg. for the Tigers while grabbing 10.4 rpg. In his place, the team will call on the forward tandem of Jevon Crudup and Jamal Coleman in addition to the sensational guard Anthony Peeler.

The recruiting class was limited to a single player this season, so the core of production will have to come from the upperclass, mainly the four returning starters Peeler, Crudup, Coleman and Melvin Booker.

For a team to maintain such a high standard of play despite being on probation is incredible. Look for the Tigers to make a run at the tournament. The 59-3 home record over the past four seasons will not hurt, either.

5. NEBRASKA

For a team that finished the regular season ranked in the Top 10, a fifth-place finish in the Big Eight seems hard to fathom. Believe it. Where as Missouri returned four of its more important players, Nebraska lost four of its very important players.

In a conference marked by wild home crowds and rough inside play, the Big Eight will offer much of the same this year minus the rough inside game.

Remaining is forward Carl Hayes, who shot for an average of 13.5 points and also stole the ball 54 times from opponents. Others who will contribute are Eric Piatlowski, who has three-point ability, and Prop. 48 player Jamar Johnson. Piatkowski will take on the forward position while Johnson will step into the backcourt with Hayes.

The Huskers need others step up and fill in where graduation left holes if this team is to repeat last year's success.

6. KANSAS STATE

Thank God for junior college is a slogan that will run through the mind of Coach Dana Altman as his team enters this season. Finishing eighth last year was enough to prompt Altman to find immediate help for his team through the Juco ranks.

Joining the team this year will be Aaron Collier, Vincent Jackson, Gaylon Nickerson and Trasel Rone. Both Rone and Nickerson averaged over 20 ppg last season in JC and hope to repeat much of the same this year for Kansas State. The only returning starter is senior Wylie Howard, who will most probably start at power forward for the Cats.

For the most improved team in the Big Eight, success will come with an effective meshing of the recruits and Coach Altman's style of up-tempo play.

7. IOWA STATE CYCLONES

Talk about losing big, the Iowa State Cyclones lost roughly two-thirds of their scoring and rebounding from last season.

In fact the only bright spot the Cyclones have is the fact that Johnny Orr's recruiting class was rated in the Top 20 in the nation. The team returns one player, Justus Thigpen, who will have his hands full trying to lead such a young team. But with such a competitive league, don't expect the Cyclones to do much more than try and rebuild.

8. COLORADO BUFFALOES

The Buffaloes like the Cyclones lost most of their offensive production and have very little to replace the loss. But unlike Iowa State, the recruiting class was nothing special. Look for the Buffaloes to start the long drive back to respectability with guards James Hunter and Billy Law.

Temple heads pack; UMASS not far behind

By PAT MEILER
Staff Reporter

The Atlantic 10 Conference enters its 16th season of play with high hopes. The 1990-1991 campaign was easily the conference's best year ever with six teams qualifying for postseason play. Temple, Rutgers and the departed Penn State went to the NCAA's, while West Virginia, George Washington and Massachusetts played in the NIT.

Penn State, in a football related move, departed to the Big 10 following last year. It will begin conference play in 1992-1993.

The A-10 fared well in receiving postseason bids because of its collective non-conference record of 63-43, its best record in four years. The Atlantic 10's success in both the regular and postseasons enabled it to be ranked eighth out of the 34 collegiate conferences by the Sagarin/USA Today final poll.

The general talent level of the conference is better and more balanced than in past years because of the infusion of young, eager coaches in the programs of UMass, St. Joe's, George Washington, Rutgers and Duquesne. Temple and West Virginia, the conference's most successful teams, are directed by John Chaney and Gale Catlett.

Looking at the "Atlantic 9" in 1991-1992, Temple and UMass will battle it out for conference supremacy, with West Virginia, St. Joseph's, George Washington and Duquesne on the second tier. It will be a rebuilding year for Rutgers, while Rhode Island and St. Bonaventure round out the conference in 1991-1992.

1. TEMPLE

Last season, senior guard Mark Macon led the Owls to a Final Eight appearance in the NCAA Tournament, while junior Donald Hodge anchored the post for Chaney's team. With Macon graduating and Hodge declaring eligibility for the NBA Draft, one might think that Temple will fall from supremacy in the A-10. Yet despite losses of the big two as well as backup point guard Mike Harden and backup center Chris Lovelace, Chaney returns three starters Mike Kilgore, Mark Strickland and point guard Vic Carstarphen. Temple also welcomes three newcomers with impact potential. Eric Brunson is the best high school guard to come to Temple since Macon. He poured in 32 ppg. as a senior and earned MVP Honors of the McDonald's All-America Game. Brunson, a lefty, will probably earn the starting two-guard spot. The likely starter in the pivot will be 6-foot-11-inch Frazier Johnson. Johnson was among the top five centers in junior college last year. Aaron McKie, a Prop 48 victim a year ago, will contribute at the shooting guard and wing position in 1991-92.

2. MASSACHUSETTS

UMass is the team on the rise in the Atlantic 10. Reasons for this statement include: a) five starters return from a 20-13 NIT Final Four team, b) among those five starters is leader Jim McCoy, the school's all-time leading scorer, c) graduation losses are very minimal, d) Calipari has seen his team improve from 10 to 17 to 20 wins in the last three seasons, e) a top 20 recruiting class of six players headed by bluechip power forward Louis Roe and f) a rowdy student body termed "Duke fans of the Northeast" by the Boston Globe.

Calipari has shown that he can turn a program around. UMass was a sub-500 team in the 1980's before he arrived. Now, the phrase "NCAA's" is a word people can hopefully look to on the Amherst, MA, campus. UMass expert Will White said "hopes are very high on campus for our first NCAA bid since 1962." With a solid cast of performers, which includes the Atlantic 10's best frontcourt in center Harper Williams, power forward Tony Barbee and small forward William Herndon, UMass should achieve its goal in 1991.

Chaney will have to blend the newcomers in with the veterans for the Owls to take conference honors.

3. WEST VIRGINIA

West Virginia returns four starters from a 17-14 NIT team. Three played, the fourth sat out. Guard Mike Boyd, guard/forward Chris Leonard, and power forward Pervires Green all averaged over 10 ppg. for the Mountaineers. The other player is guard Tracy Shelton, who missed last year because of a wrist injury. He averaged 17.8 ppg. two years ago. A key to 1991-1992 will be the play of sophomore forward Ricky Robinson and junior center Jeremy Bodkin. They must help fill the loss of two double-figure scorers of last year. A freshman of influence for West Virginia may be 6-foot-10-inch freshman Wilfred Kirkaldy. He may be inserted into the lineup come midseason. West Virginia is another Atlantic 10 team with a strong home court advantage.

4. ST. JOSEPH'S

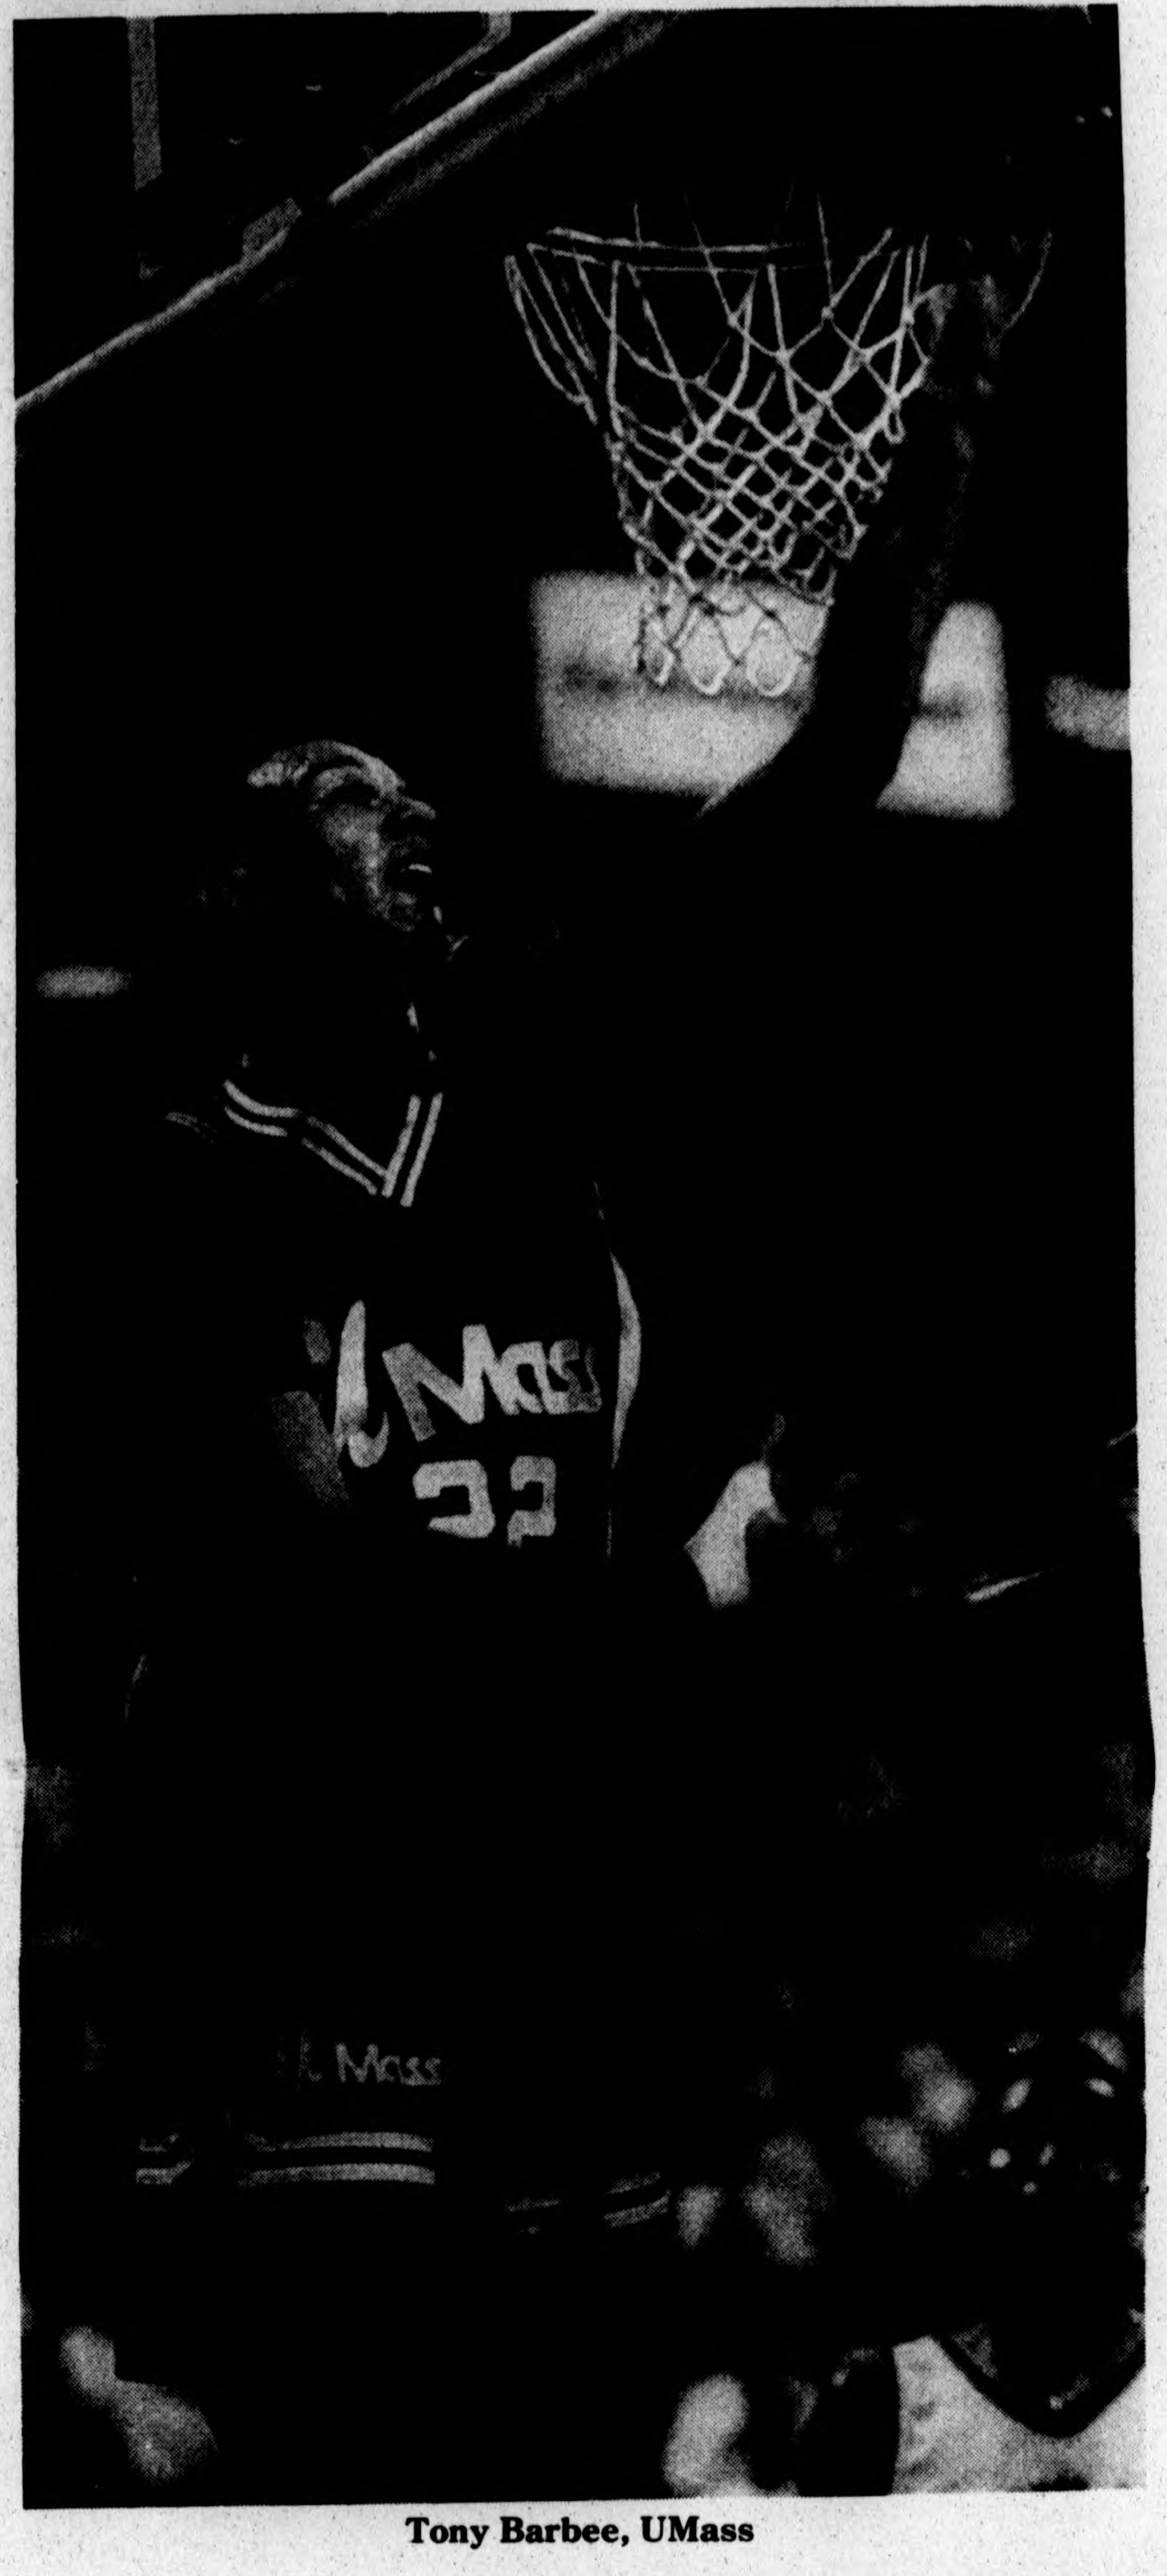
Second-year coach John Griffin has his team and the school excited about 1991-1992. The Hawks started out 2-9 last year, but finished the season with an 11-8 mark. The key reason for this performance was the emergence of two star freshmen. St. Joe's started Rap Curry and Bernard Blunt. They struggled early but finished strong as the season ended. The two combined for 32 ppg. in '90-91. With one year under their belts, they have the experience to prosper in 91-92. This pair may be considered the A-10's premier backcourt. Joining them is 6-foot-7-inch senior Craig Amos. He is the team's leader, scoring 16 ppg in his junior campaign. Carlin Warley, a Prop 48 victim from last year, finally brings his talents to Hawk Hill. The pivot will be occupied by Matt Goukas, a solid performer who will not provide much scoring punch.

5. GEORGE WASHINGTON

GW was a conference surprise last year as it posted its first winning record in conference since 1983-1984 and made the school's first postseason appearance (NIT) since the early 1960's. The prime reason for the team's success is coach Mike Jarvis who took his first team to the A-10 championship game and the NIT. The backcourt returns intact with Dirk Surles and Alvin Pearsall. Frontcourt starters Sonni Holland and J.J. Hodock will be joined by newcomers Bill Brigham and Robert Hammons. GW is another team that will rely on its backcourt for production and leadership. Coach Jarvis must rely on seven newcomers in reserve roles. One freshman, Daryl Collette, may start in the post.

6. DUQUESNE

The other conference surprise in '90-91 was the Duquesne Dukes. Duquesne had its best season ever in the conference with a 10-8 mark. John Carrol was named the Conference Coach of the Year in 1990-91, but the Dukes may not fare as well this season as a result of the graduation of their starting backcourt. The frontcourt of shotblocking center Derrick Alston, Mark Gilbert and Alan Watkins combined for over 30 ppg. last year. Effram Whitehead, a reserve who scored 9.4 ppg. will be inserted into the lineup at guard. Redshirt freshman Ganon Baker will assume playmaker duties for Carrol.



Tony Barbee, UMass

7. RUTGERS

An NCAA team a year ago, the Scarlet Knights will be hard pressed to make the NIT in 1991-92. Rutgers loses over 55 ppg to graduation, over two-thirds of its point total. Rutgers loses Keith Hughes, Earl Duncan, Brent Dabbs and Craig Carter from a 19-10 team that finished 14-4 in the A-10. Coach Bob Wentzel must look to remaining starters Mike Jones and Daryl Smith to carry the team. The only returnee to average over a point a game other than Jones and Smith is forward Donnell Lumpkin (5.2ppg). Two junor college recruits will be relied upon heavily by Wentzel.

They are 6-foot-4-inch Steve Worthy and 6-foot-5-inch Alvin Rich.

8. RHODE ISLAND

The good news for URI fans is that the team returns four starters. The bad news is that the other starter was Eric Leslie, the go-to-guy who averaged 23 ppg in 1989-90 and 18 ppg in 1990-91. In addition, the other four starters who return are not extremely talented. The team leader will be 6-foot-9-inch center Jeff Kent, the conference's leading returning rebounder. Coach Al Skinner will play Mike Brown and Andre Samuel at the forward positions, while backcourt duties will be assumed by Carlos Easterling and Carlos Cofield. URI is not progressing as many people thought it would, not having done much since Tom Penders left for Texas three years ago. Skinner may find himself looking for a job come April.

9. ST. BONAVENTURE

The Bonnies finished 0-18 in the conference in 1990-91 and lose three starters, including their backcourt. Candidates for the backcourt positions include Chris Meadows, Jim Ogle, Nelson Richards and Shawn Abercrombie. The frontcourt is the strength for St. Bonaventure.

Cats, Owls and Hawks battle for title in new alignment

By JUSTIN KESTNER
Staff Reporter

The Big Five will feature a new look this season, but with the same familiar faces.

Out is the four-game round-robin tournament. In is a two-game schedule for each team with all contests to be played at the Spectrum (Villanova will play Temple and La Salle). Out are superstars Mark Macon and Doug Overton. In are improved St. Joe's and Penn squads. In any event, the city series will certainly be interesting and highly competitive.

Temple

Temple must somehow try to replace the legacy left behind by Macon, a four-year starter who holds several school records. Also gone is center Donald Hodge, a solid performer in the paint. Guiding the Owls once again is John Chaney, now in his 10th season. "We have to consider the 1991-92 season as a rebuilding one," said Chaney. "We have lost some very important people in terms of leadership."

Senior Mik Kilgore will be counted on heavily to fill the void. The 6-foot-8-inch forward averaged 14 points and 5.8 rebounds last season.

"Mik could be our 'go-to' player," said Chaney. "He has the size and the mobility and came into his own during the NCAA Tournament."

The Owls are coming off a 24-10 season in which they reached the Eastern Regional Final. Returning from that squad are Kilgore and fellow starters Mark Strickland (7.7 ppg, 6.9 rpg) and Vic Carstarphen (10.4 ppg). Also back is sophomore forward James Spears.

"Strickland needs to be more of an offensive player, Chaney said." "His quickness should enable him to dominate around the basket." Chaney described Spears as showing "great promise" and said he will be able to develop his athletic ability.

Point guard Carstarphen will be joined in the backcourt by freshman Eric Brunson, a high school All-American who averaged over 32 points. Other newcomers include guard Aaron McKie and forward Eddie Jones, both Proposition 48 casualties last year. Junior college transfer Frazier Johnson should provide depth up front at 6-foot-11-inches, 250 pounds.

Offensively, the Owls must compliment their always tough matchup zone with good shot selection to be successful.

> We have to consider the 1991-92 season as a rebuilding one. We have lost some very important people in terms of leadership.
> Head Coach John Chaney

Chaney views his team as being youthful and inexperienced. "Our weakness is that we will have a young team," he said. "We will have several new faces and we will have to quickly overcome their lack of experience."

If they do not, it could be a long season for Temple.

St. Joseph's

St. Joseph's, meanwhile, is returning four starters from last season's squad which won 11 of their last 19 games to finish at 13-17. The Hawks also claimed a share of the Big Five title.

Leading the way is the dynamic guard duo of Rap Curry and Bernard Blunt. The pair of 6-foot-3-inch sophomores forms one of the most talented backcourts around. Curry averaged 13.5 points, 5.4 boards, and 5.7 assists while Blunt (18.4 ppg, 6.5 rpg, 2.6 apg) was named the Atlantic 10 Freshman of the Year.

Coach John Griffin returns for his second season at the helm at Hawk Hill. "Both Blunt and Curry made rapid progress in their freshman season," he said. "They know what to expect in the A-10, and I would expect them to be even more consistent and play even better together."

Craig Amos, a 6-foot-7-inch senior forward, leads the way for the Hawks up front. He was second on the team in scoring (16.0 ppg) behind Blunt. Center Matt Guokas adds strong rebounding and inside scoring.

St. Joseph's also features many talented inside players. Sophomore Carlin Warley is expected to start and contribute steady rebounding. The 6-foot-7-inch forward is supported underneath by his brother, Jason, and Bernard Jones, both 6-foot-5-inch freshmen, and by Demetrius Poles. All are from the Delaware Valley.

The Hawks will employ an up-tempo game featuring pressure and man-to-man defenses. An athletic group, the team should be able to improve significantly from last season and break the .500 mark.

La Salle

The La Salle Explorers are returning three starters from last season's 19-10 squad. Among them is guard Randy Woods, a long-distance marksman also capable of putting it on the floor.

Coach William "Speedy" Morris will attempt to guide his team to the Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference title and back to the NCAA Tournament. La Salle had to settle for a first-round loss in the NIT last year.

Woods should increase his average output of 21.6 points and 4.6 rebounds with the departure of backcourt mate Doug Overton to the NBA. Expect La Salle to put the ball in his hands as much as possible.

Other returning starters are Jack Hurd and 6-foot-9-inch center Milko Lieverst. Hurd, a 6-foot-6-inch senior guard/forward, possesses a soft outside touch which helped him average 15.9 ppg. Lieverst, a Dutch import, led the team in rebounding, collecting eight boards per contest.

Also back from last season are big men Bron Holland and Lamont Carter. The 6-foot-8-inch Holland is a tough inside defender and rebounder. Carter, a 6-foot-9-inch sophomore, showed flashes of talent last season, averaging 3.2 points in just six minutes per game.

La Salle was able to secure a pair of top recruits last year. Kareem Townes, a 6-foot-3-inch do-it-all guard, shattered many of Lionel Simmons' old high school records at Philadelphia's Southern High and should make an immediate contribution this season. Another guard, 6-foot-2-inch Paul Burke, should provide backcourt depth.

What it lacks in size La Salle makes up for in quickness and tenacity. With good outside shooting, the Explorers should be able to stay in practically every game.

> I would expect them [sophomore guards Blunt and Curry] to be even more consistent and play even better together.
> Head Coach John Griffin

Penn

The University of Pennsylvania should challenge Princeton, Columbia, and Cornell for the Ivy League crown. Penn should also improve upon its 9-17 mark from last season.

Third-year coach Fran Dumphy's team is a blend of young talent and experienced players. Its strength lies in its backcourt.

Leading the way is point guard Paul Chambers. The 5-foot-10-inch senior shot 50 percent from three-point range and led the team in assists. He is flanked by sophomore Will McAllister, the Ivy League Rookie of the Year a season ago, and sharpshooter Ken Graf. Graf connected on a school-record 57 treys and averaged 10.8 ppg last season.

Up front, the Quakers will rely heavily upon senior Vince Curran. He must raise his numbers (7.0 ppg, 6.6 rpg) and supply the team with much-needed inside scoring. Helping Curran to clean the glass will be senior Mike Milobsky and sophomore Barry Pierce.

Penn could receive an immediate boost from freshman Jerome Allen. A highly talented guard, Allen is a good all-around player. His scoring and ball-handling abilities should be a big plus. Other newcomers include Jerry Berzanski and Andy Baratta, a pair of 6-foot-8-inch transfers.

Penn's guard rotation will make them a smaller, quicker group. This could prove to be an advantage for the Quakers. If they are able to hit from the outside, they could draw their opponents' big men away from the basket. This could open things up for Curran underneath and for McAllister and Allen driving to the hoop.

If the seniors step up to the challenge and Allen makes his presence felt, Penn should be very competitive in the Ivy.

Your Guide to Wildcat Basketball

Villanovan's Top 25

By TOM COLLINS
Sports Editor

Unlike last year, when UNLV dominated the regular season and the polls, the 1991 campaign presents a cast of many excellent and potentially dominant teams. But the talent of the top 15 teams in the nation verifies that there is indeed parity in college basketball. Any number of teams could be No. 1 at the end of the year, but the preseason choice has to be defending national champion Duke, which returns four starters, two top reserves and welcomes an excellent recruiting class. After the Blue Devils, the Top 25 presents a mixture of traditional powers and up-and-coming programs. Here's a close-up look at the preseason rankings:

1. DUKE

The Blue Devils overcame one of the best teams in college basketball history when they defeated UNLV in last year's Final Four contest. After leading Duke to a national championship, coach Mike Kryzewski finally got the monkey off his back after leading the Blue Devils to four Final Four's without a win. There is no reason to believe he cannot do it again, welcoming back Christian Laettner, Grant Hill and Bobby Hurley, all of whom are potential all-Americans. Grant Hill and guard Thomas Hill provide the flash, Laettner the scoring and rebounding and Hurley the leadership. The only question mark is perimeter shooting since NCAA tourney star Billy McCaffery took his three-point skills to Vanderbilt. But if Hurley continues to improve and Grant Hill makes good on his tremendous potential, Duke could be better than last year and run away with national honors.

2. INDIANA

Bobby Knight is loaded and may be blessed with his most athletic team. Young, experienced, talented and deep, the Hoosiers return all five starters from last year's team, including All-Big 10 player Calbert Cheaney, who may be Knight's best pro prospect ever. But it doesn't end there. Sensation Damon Bailey returns for his sophomore year and is headed for certain stardom. The only question is rebounding and interior defense since the Hoosiers lack a true center. But highly-touted freshman Alan Henderson, a 6-foot-10-inch force who averaged 27 points and 15 rebounds as a high school senior, should fill the void and help the Hoosiers to the Big 10 title and a possible Final Four appearance.

3. ARKANSAS

The time is now for the Razorbacks. Their magnificent senior triumvirate of Todd Day, Lee Mayberry and Oliver Miller, all first round NBA prospects, could be the best combination in the nation. Arkansas' athletic ability should allow it to dominate in its first season in the SEC. The only question for them is mental attitude, with Day and Miller known enigmas. Day and six others will not play until January for disciplinary reasons and Miller has a history of weight problems and lackadaisical play.

4. ST. JOHN'S

A typical Lou Carnasecca team, the Redmen emphasize consistency, ferocious defense and a controlled passing offense. Malik Sealy and Jason Buchanan, both seniors, are the heart and soul of an experienced and tough squad. Sealy is a possible first-team all-America and Buchanan plays perfectly in Lou Carnesecca's low-turnover, strong defense scheme.

But the key for St. John's will be upfront, where Robert Werdann, much improved last year but still inconsistent, and Shawnelle Scott, a promising sophomore prospect, must play well. The Redmen are a solid pick to win the Big East and could go further than that. Carnesecca has done more with less.

5. LSU

The Tigers return four starters and their top reserve from an underachieving team of a year ago. Of course, any team with Shaquille O'Neal should be considered underachievers if it does not make the Final Four. O'Neal, the nation's premier player and the best college center since David Robinson, surprised many when he decided to come back to LSU despite being projected as the NBA's No. 1 draft pick.

If things are to improve this year, the Tigers must get more consistency from guards T.J. Pugh and Mike Hansen, a talented scorer who moves to off-guard this year after playing at the point last year. Senior forward Vernel Singelton, a defensive demon, may be the nation's most underrated player. But the key player could be Jamie Brandon, who sat out last year because of Prop 48. Brandon, a 6-foot-4-inch slasher, was one of the nation's most highly-touted preps in 1989.

6. ARIZONA

Few teams go 28-7, win two games in the NCAA's and place a first-rounder in the draft and are considered overrated. But the Wildcats, inconsistent throughout the year despite talent parallel to any program, were just that in 1990. Fortunately for coach Lute Olson, UA can offset the loss of NBA-bound Brian Williams with potential stars Chris Mills, Sean Rooks and Khalid Reeves. Mills, who appeared uncomfortable in his first season with the Cats after transferring from Kentucky, may be ready to provide the Cats with leadership, something they lacked last year.

Olson expects Mills to develop into the same type player former Cat Sean Elliot is. With Rooks, Mills, Ed Stokes and Wayne Womack, all rebounding factors upfront, the only question mark is the guard play. Reeves, impressive as a freshman, appears solid and potentially spectacular at off-guard. Point guard Matt Othick, a pesky defender but week offensively, must step up if the Wildcats are to reach their potential.

7. KENTUCKY

Rick Pitino's resurrection of the Wildcat program is nothing short of phenomenal. On the brink of disaster after probation just two years ago, Pitino has transformed KU into a frenetic and tenacious unit due to excellent recruiting and his up-tempo style. The Cats welcome back four starters from last year's Top 20 unit, but lose Reggie Hanson, the team's leading rebounder. Freshman sensation Jamal Mashburn should continue to develop along with classmate Gimel Martinez. Also, incoming recruits Andre Riddick and Aminu Timberlake should help in rebounding, a category the Cats led in only 10 games last season.

The backcourt and small forward positions boast experienced and talented shooters that play Pitino's run-and-gun style to perfection. Point guard Sean Woods, who averaged six assists last year, will continue to set up John Pelphrey (62 three-pointers) and Richie Farmer (46 three-pointers) from long range. Missouri transfer Travis Ford lends depth to the corps. After being on probation for the last two years, the Cats will be eligible for post-season play, which doesn't bode well for the nation.

8. SETON HALL

The 1990 Pirate squad, picked to finish seventh in the Big East during preseason, surprised everyone by winning the Big East Tournament and ending the season as one of the nation's ten best teams. Despite losing center Anthony Avent and point guard Oliver Taylor, SHU could be even better due to tremendous young talent and possibly the nation's best defense (opponents shot 40.6 percent last year). Preseason all-America Terry Dehere and sophomore phenom Bryan Caver will man the backcourt while Arturas Karnishovas, Jerry Walker and Gordon Winchester return at the forwards. The only question mark is center, but Luther Wright, a Prop. 48 victim last year, is expected to provide solid play in the middle to offset Avent's loss. The Pirates are young, but P.J. Carlesimo has the tools to build his best team as they attempt to return to the Final Four.

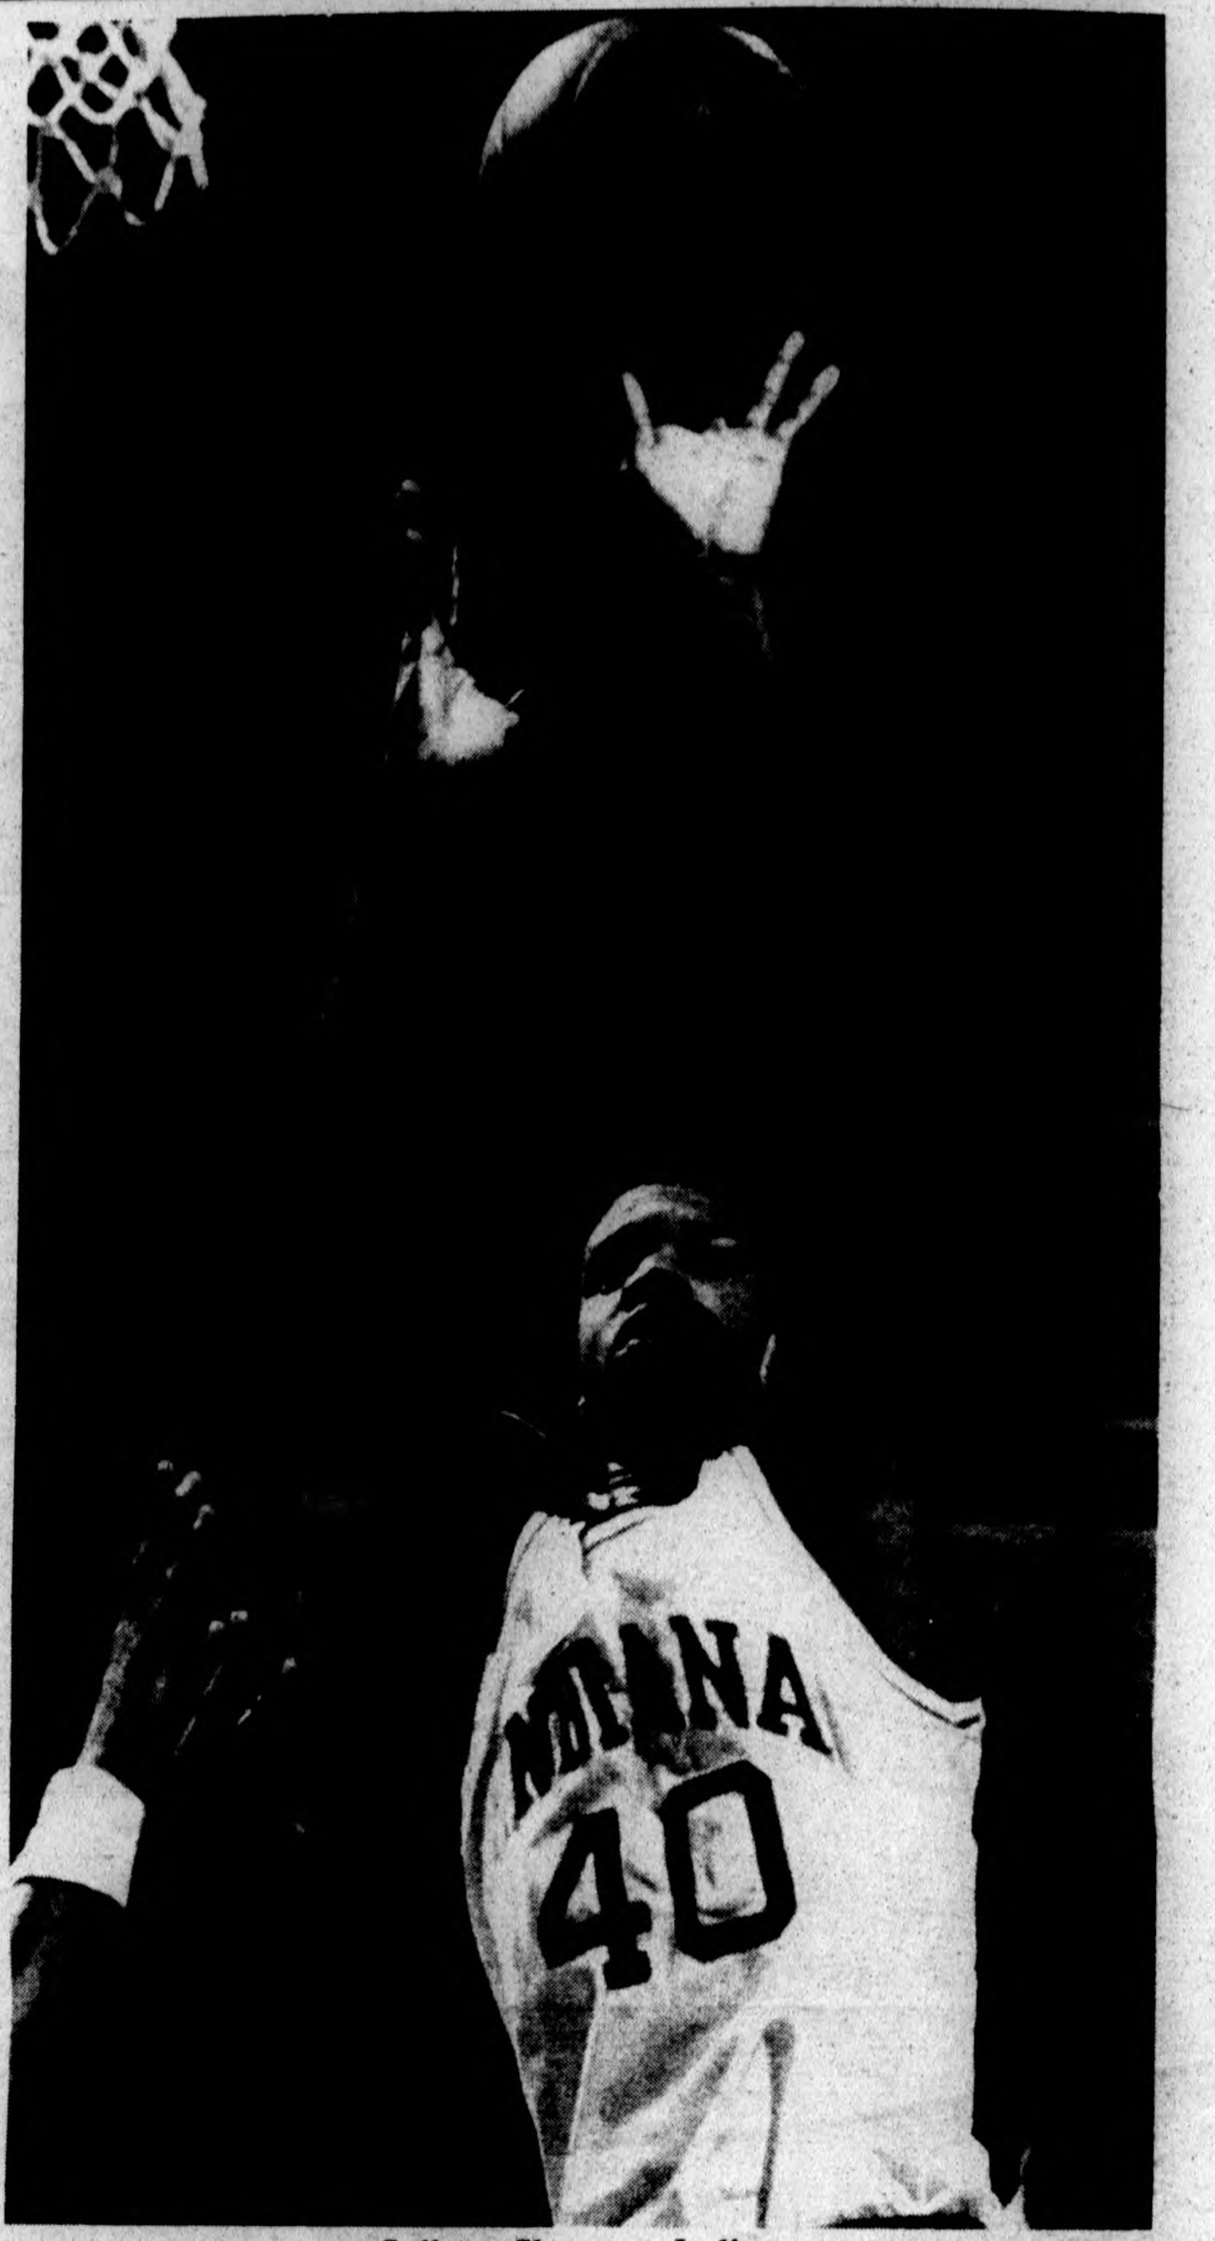
9. KANSAS

The Jayhawks were the best team in a talent laden Big Eight Conference last year as it impressively marched through Indiana, Arkansas and North Carolina in the NCAA's. The dream ended in the Finals to Duke, but the parts are in place for another run at the title. Roy Williams, possibly the game's best young coach, has implemented a motion offense almost unstoppable when the Jayhawks are on their game.

While losing Mark Randall and two other starters, KU returns Adonis Jordan, one of the nation's best point guards, and Alonzo Jamison, their most complete player. One of the nation's best recruiting classes will keep the Jayhawks well-equipped to run Williams' system. The earlygoing may be tough for the young Hawks, but they will be a factor come March.

10. OKLAHOMA STATE

Another Big Eight power, Oklahoma State is one of the nation's rising programs due to the talents of Byron Houston. Houston, a Charles Barkley-type player, is the preseason favorite for conference player of the year honors. But Houston will not do it alone. Point guard Sean Sutton, Coach Eddie sutton's son, and Darwyn Alexander make up an explosive backcourt while Corey Williams and Cornell Hatcher provide spark off the bench. The center position is still up in the air, but with Houston's ability on the boards, rebounding should not be a problem.



Calbert Cheaney, Indiana

THE NEXT FIFTEEN:

11. CONNECTICUT — Point guard Chris Smith could lead the Huskies back to their 1989-1990 form, when they took the Big East by storm and made the NCAA Final Eight Rod Sellers, Scott Burrell and the finest recruiting class in school history won't hurt either.

12. UCLA — If the Bruins are ever going to reestablish themselves as one of the nation's powers, this is the year. Experienced and deep, UCLA has all the tools to be a Top 5 team, but are often knocked off by lesser teams and too often falter in the big games.

13. OHIO STATE — Any team with Jimmy Jackson is dangerous. But the Buckeyes also have an excellent backcourt combo of Mark Baker and Jamal Brown and a potential star in Indiana transfer Lawrence Funderburke.

14. NORTH CAROLINA — UNC will most likely step down from its 1990-91 Final Four form. But the Tar Heels return George Lynch, Hubert Davis and a very talented sophomore class, although it did not live up to expectations last year.

15. OKLAHOMA — Billy Tubbs is never at a loss for words or athletes. And this year is no different. The Sooners are loaded with Brent Price, Damon Patterson and Jeff Webster leading a deep and superbly talented group.

16. GEORGETOWN — With the graduation of Dikembe Mutumbo, it is showtime for Alonzo Mourning as he returns to his natural center position. Mourning, apparently prepared for a monster year, is aided by sophomores Joey Brown, Charles Harrison and Robert Churchwell, all battle tested after starting last year.

17. DEPAUL — The Blue Demons could return to their early 1980's form when they were among the nation's top teams year in and year out. David Booth and Stephen Howard key a small but athletic group.

18. ALABAMA — A typical SEC team, the Crimson Tide will rely on a fast-paced attack suited to a corps of talented athletes. Robert Horry and James Robinson are stars, but the Tide must find an answer to their point guard problems.

19. MICHIGAN — This rating is based mainly on potential. If the freshman class, which some say is the best ever, lives up to its potential, the Wolverines may be the nation's sleeper.

20. GEORGIA TECH — Sure, the Yellow Jackets lose all-world point guard Kenny Anderson. But in comes another flashy lead guard in freshman Travis Best, who once scored 83 points in a high school game. Malcolm Mackey and John Barry are potential all-league performers in the ACC, perhaps the nation's toughest conference.

21. FLORIDA STATE — In a few years, the basketball program at FSU may parallel the football team. Young and deep, the Seminoles move into the ACC boasting one of the nation's top sophomore duos in Douglas Edwards and Charlie Ward.

22. WAKE FOREST — This ranking may be a little low for the Demon Deacons, who have emerged as a force in the ACC. And the leader of the pack is sophomore Rodney Rogers, a 6-foot-7-inch, 240-pound monster who adds new meaning to the term physical presence.

23. VIRGINIA — The Cavaliers return Bryant Stith, a tremendous shooter and inside player. He alone makes UVA a contender. But add a tremendous recruiting class and the Cavaliers will be the ACC's sleeper.

24. SYRACUSE — Every year people say the 'Cuse cannot offset the loss of its star. First it was Rony Seikaly, then Sherman Douglas and Derrick Coleman and now Billy Owens. Next year, it will be Dave Johnson.

25. UTAH — The Utes only lost four games last year and return Josh Grant, a possible NBA first-rounder.

Dobbin discusses strategic plan

By JENNIFER CASTELLI
News Editor

The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., University president, gave his annual State of the University Address at the University Senate meeting in the Villanova Room of Connelly Center Nov. 15.

Dobbin summarized the strategic plan proposed by the Strategic Planning Committee (SPC) of the University Board of Trustees.

"The only way to success is to think in a genuinely strategic manner," Dobbin said.

The SPC plan would decrease student population by 10 percent "for an average undergraduate enrollment of 5,700 students," according to a summary of the Strategic Plan. This "right-sizing," would enable the University to grow down into our campus over a five-year period, said Dobbin.

More students would be attracted to the University if they were guaranteed on-campus housing for four years, Dobbin said. To attract these students, West Campus would be developed with the addition of a 500-bed, apartment-style facility, he said.

We are only beginning to capitalize on the national reputation of Villanova.

Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin,
University president

"The lack of student housing here denies us the residential atmosphere that a good quality University should provide," Dobbin said.

The proposed plan would also use "aggressive budgeting" to increase the endowment, said Dobbin. The University has an endowment of between $30 and $33 million, compared to $130 million for Boston College, he said.

"Endowment is the cushion that enables an institution to be less tuition-dependent," added Dobbin.

Increased endowment would also increase financial aid offered by the University and faculty salaries, he said.

The plan was designed to compare the University to other schools, said Dobbin. Seven schools were determined to be comparable to Villanova in the number of cross-admitted students (students admitted to both schools), he said. This "peer group" consisted of Boston, Holy Cross and Providence colleges and Bucknell, Fairfield, Fordham and Lafayette universities, said Dobbin.

The SPC said that the University should rank in the middle of the peer group in all aspects except endowment within the next five years, Dobbin added.

"It is our hope that we can do this without skipping a beat in this very difficult time," Dobbin said.

The reputation of the University will be a beneficial tool in helping to attain these goals, Dobbin said. Strong student and faculty relationships will be a key factor in attracting qualified students, he said.

"We are only beginning to capitalize on the national reputation of Villanova," said Dobbin.

Area schools to exchange ideas on academics, activities

By PATRICK WHITE
Staff Reporter

A roundtable meeting of student representatives from local colleges will be held in the Radnor and St. David rooms of Connelly Center Nov. 23 from 11 a.m.-4 p.m.

Presidents, vice presidents and other student officers from area colleges will assemble to gather ideas from the colleges.

Representatives from Villanova, Temple, LaSalle and St. Joseph's universities and the University of Pennsylvania, among others, will discuss such topics as financial aid, student newspapers, student government and turnout at student government elections. The students will deal with fund raising and student conference information. Each school also will bring their own list of concerns.

The goal of each school is to find out how things are being done at its neighbor colleges and to discover different approaches which might improve policies.

The idea for this roundtable meeting was conceived by Student Government President Mark O'Rourke, who organized the gathering and offered to host it at Villanova. This meeting will "venture into uncharted territory in order to plant seeds for the future," said O'Rourke. LaSalle will host a similar meeting this spring.

Several key members of the Villanova community will host the meeting, including University President Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., Vice President of Admnistration Rev. Patrick J. Rice, O.S.A., Vice President of Student Life Richard Neville and Assistant Dean of Students Kathleen Byrnes.

Multiculturalism questioned

By MATTHEW J. BRENNAN
Senior Reporter

Students and faculty members erupted in debate on multicultural curricula Nov. 21 after the Villanova College Republicans sponsored a speaker on the topic.

Joseph Sobran, critic at large for the National Review magazine, addressed approximately 100 people in the East Lounge of Dougherty Hall on the politicizing of multiculturalism.

Sobran cited a passage from the College of Arts and Sciences' Proposed Core Curriculum Report as making him "uneasy."

The diversity component of the proposed core would require one course in two areas. An international component consisting of courses with a contemporary focus on non-Western cultures and a multicultural component with a contemporary focus on either ethnic, minority and women's experiences and history.

"A study of cultures in social groups different from one's own is a powerful anecdote for ethnocentrism, racism and sexism," states the Core Report.

Sobran questioned the meaning of racism, sexism and ethnocentrism. He defined racism as "a very Western belief that human dignity doesn't depend on race."

This view is not universally held because other societies believe their cultures are superior, he added, citing the Chinese, Japanese and the Ancient Greeks as evidence.

Sobran referred to sexism as a "new fangled Western word," and he didn't "know of a single non-Western culture that isn't what liberals and feminists would call sexist."

He established that sexism must be defined within the context of a culture by comparing the freedom of Western women to their treatment in non-Western cultures.

"... The most ethnocentric assumption we can make is that other cultures are just like us in heart with only superficial and colorful differences", said Sobran.

Audience debates curriculum

Students and faculty members posed questions to Sobran concerning the diversity component within the core report; an advertisement in the Villanovan; and an anonymous letter distributed on Homecoming weekend Nov. 8.

The letter, signed "Concerned Students of Villanova," stated "reservations" about the possibility of courses within the diversity component "rationalizing homosexuality and abortion, as well as breaching the principles upon which Villanova University was founded."

An advertisement, purchased by the College Republicans in the Nov. 15 issue of the Villanovan, questioned whether students "should be forced" to take classes that "legitimize gay rights and abortion," and offered an open forum on the topic, Nov. 21.

Sobran admitted his unfamiliarity with the conflict over the core report and had no knowledge of the letter or advertisement circulated. He did encourage open discussion on the issues.

The College Republicans were involved in drafting the letter, said Mark Thomas, chairman of the College Republicans. He based Fraternity loses campus charter

By LARISA EPATKO

Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity suspended the charter of its Epsilon Omicron Chapter located at the University Nov. 7 due to "the chapter's chronic inability to fulfill its financial and reporting obligations to the general fraternity," according to the Pi Kappa Phi Fraternity Administrative Office in Charlotte, N.C.

Members of the fraternity are now on alumni status, which means that they are no longer active and cannot participate in any activities with the student chapter, said Gary H. Bonas Jr., assistant director of Student Activities.

"We did fulfill our financial and reporting obligations," said Craig Norton, vice president of Pi Kappa Phi at the University. "Over a period of time we had various things that were late. As soon as we paid a large sum of money, the national chapter hit us with [the suspension]," he said.

The fraternity had worked out a payment plan for its outstanding debt with the national chapter. "We had until Oct. 31 to pay the debt, which we did," Norton said, adding that the fraternity did not owe anything to the national chapter.

Members of the chapter may be admitted to the reorganized Epsilon Omicron Chapter if 10 or more present members present a petition to the Charlotte office, according to the fraternity Administrative Office.

The weekend after Thanksgiving break, staff members from Pi Kappa Phi headquarters will receive applications submitted by members interested in rejoining the fraternity, said Bonas.

If not enough members show interest in restarting the chapter on campus, the charter suspension will be made permanent by the fraternity's National Council.

San Salvador, El Salvador

At the beginning of a unilateral cease-fire between the leftist rebels and the right wing government in El Savador's civil war, there could be a prelude to peace since no immediate reports of fighting were reported.

The cease-fire began on the second anniversary of the murders of six Jesuit priests, their housekeeper and her 15-year-old daughter by the members of the Salvadoran Army.

At a torchlight march Nov. 15 and a memorial Mass, several thousand Salvadorans and Americans honored the "martyrs for peace" as some of the marchers' banners read. Their objective is to construct peace in El Salvador.

During the memorial mass, two Salvadorans who were ordained as Jesuit priests were given jars labeled with the names of the slain priests. The jars contained blood-stained dirt taken from the yard where the bodies had been found.

The ideas of the priests were preserved during the march and Mass. The march was organized by the Permanent Committee for National Debate, an organization of social groups formed a few years ago to try to open Salvadoran society to more than free expression.

China

Secretary of State James A. Baker held a series of meetings with top Chinese leaders but had no visible success in persuading them to make changes concerning China's human rights, trade or arms-export policies.

The meetings were tougher than the talks with Arab and Israeli leaders held earlier this year which led to the Mideast peace conference, according to a senior state department official.

The official suggested that if Baker comes up empty on this trip, relations between the United States and China, which have been chilly since the regime's bloody repression of the 1989 pro-democracy demonstrations in Tiananmen Square, may become worse.

The Chinese government was equally tough in its account of the talks. A spokesman for the Chinese Foreign Ministry stressed the theme of Chinese nationalism, saying that Chinese nationalism did not intend to be intimidated. Baker is asking China to make some changes in its human rights policies. He is asking China to release some political prisoners from jail or change the conditions of their confinement.

Atlanta, Ga.

The Center for Disease Control (CDC) has prepared an expanded official definition of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) that adds about 160,000 infected Americans to the count of patients with the disease.

The new definition proposed Nov. 14, would double the United States patients count, which stands at 195,718 not including the one million Americans believed to be infected with HIV, the virus that causes the disease.

Activists said the expanded definition would allow more people to qualify for disability payments, but they warned that more officially recognized patients could mean a bigger battle for treatment resources.

The current definiton, adopted by the CDC in 1987, is based on conditions that prey on HIV infected people, such as a rare pneumonia and a rare skin cancer. This expanded definition would add patients who are not necessarily sick, but whose immune systems are under severe attack by the virus.

Manhattan, N.Y.

There was a 120.31 point stock market plunge. Nov. 15 which triggered memories of the 1987 crash.

Though a few market watchers feared the worst, most pointed to differences in the economy, new safeguards in the market and the belief that a correction was just what the exchange needed.

Many investors sat tight, waiting to see what happened before placing buy or sell orders. Caution seemed to be the dominant mood.

The Dow's average of 30 leading companies, the stock market's main barometer, plummeted 120.31, or 3.9 percent, to 2,943.20, the biggest drop since the 190-point "mini crash."

In the two hours of trading prior to the closing bell, the total value of stocks fell by $132.5 billion, leading to the fifth worst market decline, measured in points on the Dow industrial average, for any single day in market history.

Alumni contributions aid in tuitions, scholarships

By ELIZABETH BARSZCZEWSKI
Assistant News Editor

Contributions to Villanova University reached $10.2 million for the 1990-91 fiscal year, up from $9.8 million given to the University in the form of gifts and grants the previous year. Although the amount donated by alumni increased over the past several years, it has not been able to completely eliminate the need for an increase in tuition, said John Elizandro, vice president for Development.

Endowment received from alumni, parents and friends by the University has an effect on the amount of funds which must be raised from traditional sources of revenue, including tuition, room and board and auxiliary enterprises, such as athletic events, said Elizandro.

Endowment is contributions to the University from alumni, parents and friends. The gifts support scholarships based on academic achievement, financial need, diversity issues and faculty positions, Elizandro said.

The main purpose of the funds raised through alumni contributions is to augment the University's traditional revenue sources. Some of the funds are allotted for other purposes such as faculty research, Elizandro said.

"Under the leadership of Fr. Dobbin, three million dollars in the last 15-18 months has been dedicated for student scholarships," Elizandro said. The scholarships resulted from concern which University President, The Rev. Edmund J. Dobbin, O.S.A., has for those in need of scholarships based on academic achievement and financial need.

Donor interest has been steadily increasing, said Elizandro. Alumni and friends show a definite interest in supporting the students' needs, he said. Student scholarships are the most attractive ways to contribute to most donors since they can identify with the need for such programs, he added.

Alumni are being given new opportunities to contribute. The Named Gift Opportunities are now available to donors. Contributors are presented with a gift-giving "menu" which allows them to dedicate gifts for specific purposes, Elizandro said. Contributors can see tangible results of their efforts, Elizandro added.

A raise in tuition is still in order due to inflation and the overall condition of the nation's economy, Elizandro said.

Augustine focus of lecture

By ANTHONY PALLADINO
Staff Reporter

James J. O'Donnell, professor of classical studies at the University of Pennsylvania, presented a lecture entitled "The Authority of Augustine" in the Connelly Center Cinema Nov. 13.

The significance of the date was that in 386 A.D., St. Augustine was born and after developed the ideas to start his first book, O'Donnell said.

O'Donnell analyzed how people think of the name and meaning of Augustine. As Augustine's works became more widely read, his ecclesiastical authority grew more respected, said O'Donnell. Some ignorance existed simultaneously with Augustine's reverence, he added.

President George Bush exemplified such misconceptions by referring to Augustine as St. Ambrose Augustine, said O'Donnell.

> St. Augustine moved from being a saint to a celebrity.
> James J. O'Donnell, University of Pennsylvania's Classical Studies Department

Much of Augustine's authority emerged from his profound writings and not his position as bishop, said O'Donnell. The texts which he wrote proved to be stimulating, helpful, orthodox and worth putting on a university's canon, he said.

St. Augustine "moved from being a saint to a celebrity," O'Donnell said.

In comparison to other contemporary religious authorities, people must realize that the sources Augustine used were limited, O'Donnell said. This does not take away from Augustine's authority, because he displayed a remarkable ability to approach the same issue from a different perspective, he added.

O'Donnell presented Augustine's idea that ecclesiastical authority is "part of a larger and more important experience of Christian freedom."

Sexual harassment forum held for student discussion

By CHRISTA MRUZ
Staff Reporter

The women's studies department, the honors' program and the communication arts department sponsored a seminar for students to discuss sexual harassment Nov. 17.

About 42 percent of females and 15 percent of males reported being sexually harassed, said Sheryl Bowen, a Villanova communication arts professor.

"Sexual harassment is a communication problem dealing with an exchange between two people," said Bowen. "It starts as sexual approach, followed by sexual avoidance and then with a continued approach."

Sexual harassment views sexuality as a source of reward for the aggressor and a source of threat for the victim. Bowen said that the act of harassment is a play for power over another person. "They believe that they have the right to empower another through conversation or off-color remarks, which leads to touching and then sometimes to sexual assault," she added.

Sexual harassment also comes from ideals that people are socialized to believe, said Bowen. "Women sometimes use their sexuality to gain attention because they are taught that is what men like. Yet, women find it dangerous when men try to take control of their sexuality. It is a double-edged sword," she said.

Students performed skits showing what could be construed as sexual harassment. The skits varied from classroom activities to scenes in the cafeteria to a board room scene where a female department head was harassed by a male teacher in her department.

Greeks sponsor Anchor Splash

The Delta Gamma National Fraternity held its fourth annual philanthropy fundraiser, Anchor Splash, at the duPont Pavilion pool Nov. 18. This year the event raised over $9,000.

Anchor Splash is a nationwide fundraiser for the blind held by Delta Gamma chapters around the country.

Anchor Splash includes a number of mock water-sport competitions between teams representing numerous fraternities and sororities of the University. All proceeds are donated to the Royer Greeves School for the Blind in Media, Pa., the Pennsylvania Association for Blind Athletes and the National Philanthropy Aid to the Blind.

The proceeds were raised through local business sponsors, parent and alumni contributions, supermarket canning, raffle ticket sales and donations at the door, said Anchor Splash Chairperson Cindy Corliss. The grand prize for the raffle tickets was two round-trip tickets to anywhere in the United States donated by Continental Airlines.

"When you go out in the community, it's surprising to see how many people really care. It's encouraging and heartwarming. You get the feeling that you actually did something for someone," said Corliss.

Anchor Splash consisted of two events, beginning with the "Pre-Splash Bash" Nov. 15 at Whiskey Joe's in Conshohocken and the actual competition held at the duPont Pavilion pool. The "Pre-Splash Bash" was open to all members of the University to increase awareness of Anchor Splash, said Corliss.

The events at the pool included a bathing beauty contest, a tube relay, sweatshirt relay, beachball relay and synchronized swimming presentation. The "bathing beauty" was awarded on the basis of originality and costume design. The winners were Julie Tragemann of Pi Beta Phi National Sorority and John McGovern of Delta Tau Delta National Fraternity.

The overall winners of Anchor Splash were Pi Beta Phi National Sorority and Pi Kappa Alpha National Fraternity. Winners of the events received trophies and plaques.

"It's great to see all Greeks come together, the whole University and the community support was received. Anchor Splash went over really well. Everyone was so spirited," Corliss said.

Africa, America, imperialism studied in Allen lecture

By JIM DOWNS
Staff Reporter

Dr. William C. Allen gave a lecture concerning the "New World Information Order: Africa, America and Cultural Imperialism" Nov. 14 in Tolentine Hall. The presentation was sponsored by the communication arts department, the Black Cultural Society and the peace and justice department.

"The presentation will provide cultural diversity for students. [Allen] represents government and media in Africa," said Dr. Ed Lourdon, communication arts.

Allen said his purpose for coming to the University was to speak about the New World Order. Allen said there must be more distinction on the geographic breakdown of the world. The North consists of Canada, the United States, Europe and the Soviet Union with the South encompassing the remaining countries.

The Southern region is not represented in the media, and, if it is represented, the news is about famine, death or some other crisis, Allen said. The Northern media has control of 80 percent of the news of the world, he said. In addition, the North has various information advances such as television, radios and satellites to broadcast.

The South does not have the technology to be represented, Allen said. It does not possess basic media tools such as books, newspapers and magazines to convey their coverage. Allen illustrated his point by providing statistics of journalistic abilities in developed countries versus the same abilities of less developed countries.

The cultural imperialism created by the North destroys culture and traditions, said Allen. Cultural Imperialism is the northern countries' attempt to dominate the cultures of southern countries, he added. An example of this is Chinese children playing an American game such as "cowboys and Indians," he said.

The way to solve the dilemma of the South is for the northern countries to help them advance technology in the media, Allen said. Through technology the people can make demographic decisions and deal with domestic issues, and not allow grounds for the Saddam Husseins and Adolf Hitlers of the world, Allen said.

The responsibility of establishing the New World Information Order is left to the North and the South, Allen said. The South must cooperate with various agencies for the people to be represented, he added.

"I take the view that the New World Information Order is sleeping. The issue of New World Information Order should be resurrected, communication of the everyday people should understand and relate to the economical and political order," Allen said.

Expert says frats, athletes often involved in rapes

By College Press Service

Bernice Sandler did not want to divulge too many details, but it did not matter; what she did say was quite enough.

As the national expert on gang rape lectured to counselors, students and others working in the field of sexual assault on college campuses, the audience could not help but groan in empathy and moan in disgust.

Sandler talked of gang rape victims locked out of rooms and left naked in fraternity house hallways, of men who videotaped the ordeal to show to friends later.

Sandler, with the Association of American Colleges, received her first call about a gang rape in November 1985. Since then, she has documented more than 100 cases of campus gang rape and has spent most of her time researching the phenomenon.

What she has found is that 90 percent occur at fraternity houses, with the rest happening by athletes. Alcohol or drugs are almost always involved and often the victim is selected ahead of time and deliberately given spiked drinks or drugs to incapacitate her. Often, the woman is not conscious during the rape. Often, people other than the men committing the rape know that it is occuring or about to occur.

"The men are stunned when their behavior is labeled as rape," Sandler said at a recent conference on sexual assault. "They say it is group sex, that it was a good time."

> The men are stunned when their behavior is labeled rape. They say it is group sex, that it was a good time.
> Bernice Sandler, national expert on gang rape

Sandler has found many differences between gang rape and one-on-one rape. In gang rapes, the men are raping for each other; they want to prove their manhood. She said usually every group has a leader, the one who initiates the rape.

The bond that the men participating in the rape feel for each other overrides their feelings for the victim, Sandler added.

She said fraternity members are the primary culprits because they have a strong ideology of brotherhood; fraternity men define themselves by drinking, sexual prowess and negative behavior toward women. Athletes, as a group, form similar bonds.

Sandler said additional problems caused by fraternities especially are that they sanction sexual abuse, that the brothers are trained to "cover" or lie for each other to keep them out of trouble, that they stereotype women and view "gang bangs" as part of their culture.

On the other side of the coin are women who believe they could never become victims of such a crime.

"There are so many women so frightened by the crime that they have to distance themselves," Sandler said. "They say, 'Well, everybody knows fraternity parties are dangerous.' They say, 'I'm not stupid, this will never happen to me.' "

The moderator will be Betsy Hearne, of The Bulletin of the Center for Children's Books. Other panelists will include Ilene Cooper, of Booklist; Ann A. Flowers, of The Horn Book Guide to Children's and Young Adult Books; Eden Ross Lipson, of The New York Times; Joanna Rudge Long, of Kirkus Reviews; and Annette S. Thorson, of The Book Report.

Participants are required to read specific children's books which will be discussed in small groups after the panel discussion.

The workshop is open to the public for a $25 fee. A buffet luncheon will be provided.

American Cancer Society's Great American Smokeout

University Press Release

The American Cancer Society sponsored the annual Great American Smokeout Nov. 21 to encourage smokers to take a break from their cigarettes for 24 hours. Dippers and chewers also were asked to drop their habits for the day.

Last year, approximately 7.4 million people, or 14.9 percent of the nation's smokers, gave up cigarettes for 24 hours. One to three days later, 4.9 million of those people were still not smoking.

At the University, the Infirmary staff coordinated the Smokeout. They provided survival kits, helpful tips and encouragement for all students, faculty and staff who participated. A contest was held for both smokers and nonsmokers. The winner received a Villanova sweatshirt.

Nonsmokers, especially former smokers, participated by adopting smokers and offering them support during the day. The smokers showed their friends who smoke their concern and willingness to lend support.

Smokeless tobacco users also were a part of the smokeout. Many people consider dipping snuff and chewing tobacco as safe alternatives to smoking, but that is a misconception, said the American Cancer Society.

A 1986 report by the Advisory Committee to the Surgeon General concludes that there is strong scientific evidence that the use of snuff causes cancer in humans. Oral cancer occurs several times more frequently among snuff dippers compared with non-tobacco users. The excess risk of cancer of the cheek and gum may be 50 times higher among long-term snuff users.

Other problems associated with habitual use include decreased senses of taste and smell as well as dental problems, such as receding gums and tooth decay.

Core debate continues the claims in the letter and advertisement on other college's multicultural requirements that teach about topics of homosexuality and abortion rights, as well as set political agendas.

Frank Morgan, co-chairman of the College Republican's Committee for a Liberal Education, said the letter's ambiguous signing resulted from their lack of an organization title. He said the group of people involved wanted to send an "apolitical and non-partisan" message with the letter.

Both Morgan and Thomas agreed that the diversity component has not been discussed adequately on campus. Thomas noted that there was only one copy of the core report available in the library for a student body in excess of 6,000.

Barbara E. Wall, OP, director for the center for peace and justice education, expressed outrage that the College Republicans would use a "smoke screen of faith and christianity" to disguise "hatred, bigotry and prejudice," with regard to the advertisement and letter.

Kristin Haas, có-chairwoman for the College Republican's Committee for a Liberal Education, alleged that there was a pro-choice agenda being taught in her Women's Studies class. Haas said she came to school for a "free exchange of ideas" not a political agenda, and that the claims in the letter and advertisement were accurate.

"The multicultural agenda, yes is political, . . . however your [College Republicans'] agenda is also political. The political nature of the multicultural agenda is the question of whether or not we are going to open and expand the format of the academy as it exists now," said Maghan Keita, history professor. "My culture is taught simply as being a slave . . . that is fundamentally where they [American history texts] begin. They don't talk about the great contributions that slaves made to this country."

Universities must decide whether they want to present subjects of inquiry or of advocacy. The "trendy sense of multiculturalism" is a prevalent pitfall of many universities, said Sobran.

"The whole world is not like Villanova. By opening yourself up to other cultures and other ways of thinking . . . you will learn how to deal with others in the world. What is wrong with that?" said Sherry Bowen, professor of communication arts.

The fraternity will then reestablish the Epsilon Omicron Chapter at a later date agreeable to the University, according to the Administrative Office.

"Response was pretty good" among the 65-member fraternity to reorganizing the University's Pi Kappa Phi chapter, said Norton.

The national chapter will devise a plan to reorganize the Epsilon Omicron Chapter, which will "foster a return to discipline, high standards and professionalism in chapter operations," said the Administrative Office.

"We think the national chapter is being unfair, but we will comply and make the best of it in order to save the chapter," Norton said.

Alcohol-related death

By College Press Service

For Larry K. Wooten, 21, a drinking challenge from his roommates proved fatal.

The University of Florida student died Nov. 5 after drinking 23 shots of alcohol, authorities said.

Wooten and his three roommates were at a local bar, The Mill, when Wooten's roommates challenged him to break a drinking record. Wooten downed 23 shots of various kinds of alcohol in one hour, Gainesville police said. The bar was offering a two-for-one special.

Wooten's roommates took him home shortly after he finished his last shot. He later started vomiting and passed out. An ambulance was called and he was taken to the hospital at about 2:15 a.m. Wooten was pronounced dead at 3:45 a.m.

Wooten's blood alcohol level was not immediately known, but police say blood alcohol levels that prove fatal are usually about 40 percent.

The Alachua County Sheriff's Department is investigating the overdose since it occurred at a bar located outside the city limits.

Blood donors deferred

American Red Cross Press Release

Last week, the Penn-Jersey Region of American Red Cross Blood Services, and other blood centers around the country, began deferring blood donations from all individuals who have traveled to or visited Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, Iraq, Oman, Yemen, Qatar, Bahrain or the United Arab Emirates on or after Aug. 1, 1990.

"When you come into a Red Cross drive, you are asked if you have traveled outside of the country in the last three years. Now, if you have been to any of those Persian Gulf countries, you will be deferred from giving blood until January of 1993," said Dr. Jay Herman, medical director of the Penn-Jersey Region of American Red Cross Blood Services.

The action was taken as a result of a discovery by military physicians that 22 servicemen who participated in Desert Storm have a parasite known as Leishmania, a disease known to cause skin infection, diarrhea, fever, chills, weight loss, anemia and can lead to liver damage.

"All indications are that the blood supply has always been and continues to be safe from this disease. There are no reported cases of Leishmaniasis passed by blood transfusion in the United States," said Herman. "However, Red Cross and other blood banks believe it is important to take every step possible to protect the blood supply."

The deferral does not apply to people who have emigrated from those Persian Gulf countries and are not believed to be affected by the parasite. It is believed that long-term exposure to this parasite builds up an immunity to it, said Herman.

"It is difficult to say precisely what affect the deferrals will have on local blood supplies," Herman said. "We will monitor the blood supply carefully because the additional loss of even a small percentage of donations can be a problem as we approach the winter holidays when blood donations typically decline. The ban could affect the supplies of blood available to us, if we need them, from other Red Cross blood centers."

Bartley study hours extended

By JEN BORDA
Staff Reporter

Study hours in Bartley Hall were extended Nov. 4 to 3 a.m. as a result of a request by Student Government. Previously, Bartley closed before midnight.

Student Government originally requested the University to accommodate students with a 24-hour study facility, but they settled for keeping the building open until 3 a.m. every night, said Mark O'Rourke, president of Student Government.

Trying to get more buildings open for study at night has been a concern of students for years, O'Rourke said.

"This year the Student Government just followed through on an idea that has been an issue since I was a freshman. We pursued all of the components involved and were able to achieve something that will make a positive impact on academics at Villanova," said O'Rourke.

In the past, the only building accessible for study after Falvey Memorial Library closed at 12 a.m. was Tolentine Hall. Student Government said that there was a need for additional study hours in a building more adequately equipped. Since Tolentine can only offer classrooms, it was not an ideal location for the extended hours, said O'Rourke.

> We found that Public Safety was the bureaucratic roadblock.
> Mark O'Rourke, president of Student Government

The main obstacle encountered in acquiring the extension was the University's proposal to install iron gates to block students from going upstairs, said O'Rourke. "We found that Public Safety was the bureaucratic roadblock. They were the ones who wanted the gates," O'Rourke said.

SCAAR speakers discuss tensions in South Africa

By MARY JANE MAHAN
Staff Reporter

The Student Coalition Against Apartheid and Racism (SCAAR). sponsored with two guest speakers at a lecture Nov. 14 in Tolentine Hall. Jerry Herman, a member of the American Friends Service Committee, and Godfrey Sithole, a local representative of the African National Congress (ANC), spoke on the political tensions of South Africa caused by apartheid.

The ANC was outlawed in 1959 and legalized with all other anti-apartheid groups after Nelson Mandela's release in 1990, said Stephen Smith, student coordinator of SCAAR. South Africa is now in a process of transition and is trying to work on a new constitution, he said.

Smith and Herman explained the United States' and South Africa's involvement in the 15-year war against Angola, an African country. The South Africans wanted to disable Angola because it felt threatened. The United States was involved because of Russian and Cuban influence in Angola, said Smith.

Herman said the reason the United States did not get out of Angola and allow it to solve its own problems was because the country is rich in diamonds and other precious minerals. "Do you kill people to get their resources?" Herman said.

Herman said the United States stood right beside the apartheid government of South Africa. Over a million people were killed in the war and Angola is now the amputee capital of the world because of the mines the United States help put there, he said.

The United States and South Africa practice policies that keep nations like Angola and Mozambique decentralized in government until they reshape their economy and make it a free market "so the U.S. can buy materials cheap," said Herman. "Something is wrong with killing people until they do what you want them to do."

Talks will begin soon for the preliminary process of making a new constitution, said Smith. The most serious issue in South Africa may be the land issue, said Herman. If the results of the negotiations end with no land given to the African population, the situation could be explosive.

He said the United States should initiate discussion on the land issue and convince academics to write on it.

Researchers also should investigate the number of weapons sent to South Africa from the United States, Herman said. Recently 17 people were indicted in Lancaster, Pa. for selling arms to South Africa, said Herman.

Although public relations officials of the United States said people can "go back to sleep on South Africa," it is still an important and explosive issues, Herman said.

Bloodshed continues and the government is behind it, Herman said. Over 3,000 people were killed in 1991, and not one conviction was made, he added.

Sithole said the ANC is now operating because of the hard work of the people inside the country.

the Senate Budget Committee. The Student Life Committee also submitted a recommendation for tuition which was compiled by taking into account "the recession, the rate of inflation and the increase in financial aid in proportion to the tuition increase," said Mark O'Rourke, Student Government president.

The Planning and Priorities Committee also submitted a report which recommended priorities for the 1992-93 fiscal year, said Senator Ken Batchelor of the College of Arts and Sciences. This recommendation was passed by the Senate, he said.

The Social Action Committee submitted a resolution by Engineering Senator Don Zasada, said Batchelor. The resolution encouraged "language which does not perpetuate stereotypes or unfairly characterize any individuals on the basis of group identification," according to the written resolution statement.

The Senate unanimously passed a recommendation for Dobbin to adopt this resolution, said Batchelor.

Education: sharing ideas

Why has the debate over the proposed Liberal Arts Core Curriculum diversity requirement suddenly turned into a circus? From the right, a faceless group with the vague title "Concerned Students of Villanova" circulated a letter manipulating deep-rooted fears of difference. And from the left, a few self-righteous liberals are criticizing the Villanovan for its decision to run the College Republicans controversial advertisement. What happened to tree speech? What happened to true academic debate? Beware Villanova: the politics of David Duke and Political Correctness have arrived on the same train.

The identification "Concerned Students of Villanova" belongs to students who exercise sound intellectual judgement, not to the anonymous group that distributed the letter printed below. With their misleading, unsubstantiated and reactionary claims, they light fires of hate and fear that threaten to poison our academic atmosphere. Voicing ignorant and preconceived notions, the originators of this letter distort the aims of the proposed curriculum.

The letter states that multiculturalism "rationalizes homosexuality and abortion" and breaches the principles upon which the University was founded. Get real! Read the University Mission Statement ("Villanova ... concerns itself with all value systems") before spewing veiled threats. Could it be that you "concerned students" have a hidden political agenda?

The diversity recommendation would institute two new course requirements for Liberal Arts students only, a Multicultural Component and an International Component. The multicultural requirement would provide a contemporary focus on studies emphasizing ethnic, minority and women's experiences in history. The international requirement would focus on societies and nations other than those of Western Europe and North America. To say such additions to a liberal arts education would rationalize controversial issues is both ludicrous and hypocritical.

The goal of a university is to provide a forum for debate. We decided to print the College Republicans' advertisement because we offer a public forum. The organization made its statement and opened the topic to debate. Hopefully, the people offended by its implications were there to challenge its validity.

To neglect the teachings of other cultures or points of view not only promotes ignorance but denies the student the freedom to decide for one's self.

Dear friends of Villanova,

As you may or may not know, the Villanova administration is in the process of approving a new curriculum called Multiculturalism. We have reservations about the content noted in these courses. Multiculturalism is not directed at the understandings of other cultures. Rather, it rationalizes homosexuality and abortion, as well as breaching the principles upon which Villanova University was founded.

If you would like to see Villanova continue to foster the Catholic ideals which made it the highly respected institution it is today, then we strongly urge you to help defeat the new, soon-to-be required curriculum of multiculturalism by contacting Father Dobbin or other members of the Villanova administration.

The Concerned Students of Villanova

Who is really "concerned?"

To the Editor:

Last weekend, Homecoming Weekend, was probably one of the best times I have had here at Villanova. Yet, somehow, someone was able to mar it. I am referring to the "Concerned Students of Villanova" who plastered the alumni cars with their infamous letter about the "multiculturalism" curriculum.

First of all, who are these students? Am I now labeled an "unconcerned student" whose morals are corrupt or questioned? Do I approve of a new cirriculum that will "rationalize homosexuality and abortion?" No. Do I fight for desecrating and dishonoring the "principles upon which Villanova University was founded?" Not in the least.

Also, who says that the "Villanova administration is in the process of approving" this new curriculum? (Which by the way, is for Liberal Arts majors only, not for Biology, Business, Engineering or any others!) There has been some mention of making some of the already existing Liberal Arts courses into a requirement that deals in areas such as Mid-Eastern studies, women in today's society, Afro-American culturalism, and many others. There is nothing included to make it MANDATORY that one will have to learn about the "topics" these "concerned students" mentioned. In fact, out of the 120 credits that one must take in the Liberal Arts cirriculum, only six credits must be in any of these multi-cultural areas.

So open your eyes, not to mention your minds, "Concerned Students," and see what the world is like out there. You often here about how the students here want to be treated as adults and allowed to live their own lives. Well, learning about what really happens in life is part of being an adult, being mature and well educated. I know most people came to Villanova because of the exceptional Catholic education that it is renowned for, and I don't think that knowledge of these other cultures will ruin this reputation at all.

My advice to these "Concerned Students" is to get their facts straight and do a little more research before erroneously speaking out for the majority of the students.

Tom DeSanto

To the Editor:

A letter was distributed at the Homecoming Game by a group calling itself "The Concerned Students of Villanova." The letter stated that a new curriculum, Multiculturalism was being considered by the Villanova administration. The "Concerned Students" feel that this curriculum may corrupt the traditional values of Villanova.

However, I do not think that learning about the diverse cultures and important issues of our time will harm Catholic ideals.

I feel that as a member of a progressive university in 1991, I have a right to learn of these contemporary moral issues that the "Concerned Students" blatantly oppose. Sheltering us from these issues will not make them disappear.

Maybe the "Concerned Students" of Villanova should take a look at the not-so-pleasing aspects of our society and realize that they are a reality whether traditional or not.

Headline clarified

To the Editor:

This letter is addressed to the student body and the Editorial Staff of the Villanovan. One headline on the front page of last week's issue caught me by surprise, it read: "Student Government proposes tuition increase."

As Student Body President, I would like to set the record straight: Student Government is not ultimately responsible for a tuition increase — we are simply one part of the process that develops a tuition proposal. In fact, the proposal process occurs under the auspices of the University Senate, not the Student Government. Each year, the Student Life Committee of the University Senate develops a proposal.

I am especially sensitive to the concerns and interests of the undergraduate student body. In this light, I recognize the fact that the tuition issue is of great concern to students. As a member of the Student Life Committee, I have expressed serious reservations about the possibility of raising tuition above the rate of inflation.

I hope this letter will help to enlighten anyone who has misunderstood Student Government's role in this process.

Advisor speaks out after 15 years

By JUNE LYTEL-MURPHY

After 15 years as moderator-advisor to the Villanovan, I believe it is time to acknowledge all the advice, commentary and directions I have been given about the quality of the newspaper and the inclusion and exclusion of material from my sister- and brother-faculty members.

> I think it may be helpful for me to clarify the role of a newspaper in a democratic republic which operates on the theory of "social responsibility."

I think it may be helpful for me to clarify the role of a newspaper in a democratic republic which operates on the theory of "social responsibility," stipulated in the First Amendment of the Constitution. The newspaper is a public forum, representing diverse ideas and points of view. The owner and publisher of the Villanovan is Villanova University, and the University exerts the ultimate control over what does and does not appear in the newspaper. It intervenes in the operations of the publication only rarely (although, occasionally, dramatically) when it judges the publication of certain material or views to run counter to its Mission Statement.

This may not be utopian journalism, but it does represent journalistic reality: The publisher of any newspaper, ranging from The New York Times through the Hartford Courant to the National Enquirer, may determine editorial policy and content.

But beyond this potential restriction shared by every publication, the Villanovan is free to exert its responsibilities as the University newspaper of record.

It has always seemed very strange to me that those who would characterize themselves as the most liberal and fair-minded seem to be the first to attack the newspaper and its staff for printing notions and ideas which diverge from their own. I, too, am often appalled and distressed at many of the ideas and opinions expressed, but I recognize the rights of others to express them. That is, after all, part of the democratic process.

Freedom of speech and freedom of the press are guaranteed; what is not guaranteed is that the press will print only what pleases each of us or what we agree with.

The founding fathers never promised us that democracy would be easy. Freedom of the press not only allows us to express our own notions, but absolutely requires that we grit our teeth and open our eyes and ears to the entirely wrongheaded opinions of the other side.

COMMENTARY

Multiculturism is a moral and Christian imperative

By MICHAEL E. BURKE

Debate over the merits of the diversity requirement in the proposed revisions to the Arts and Sciences Core Curriculum has been refreshing in its implicit acknowledgement that what happens in the classroom really matters. Unfortunately, some opponents of "multiculturalism" have drawn upon notorious, if not always validated, events at other institutions that have nothing to do with what is proposed at Villanova. To dismiss multiculturalism because of apparent excesses elsewhere makes as much sense as abolishing intercollegiate basketball because other institutions have tolerated recruiting abuses. Most recently, anonymous members of the paranoid right have asserted that a diversity requirement is a euphemism for abortion and homosexuality. I think it is time for a reality check!

The proposed requirement is a modest one: students must take one course whose focus is women's studies, or an American racial or ethnic minority; and one course whose focus is international, excluding North America and Europe. In other words 2.5 percent of a student's courses must address content flowing from the experience of one-third of the population of the United States (even excluding women's studies); and another 2.5 percent must address the vast majority of the population of the world.

On the most pragmatic level, Villanova would be negligent if its graduates remain ignorant of the majority of the world's population. After all, we are facing a future in which a majority of employers, workers, and consumers will be people of color. The economic prospects for enterprises that deal only with white suburban Catholics are limited. Major universities will treat our graduates as a joke if their cultural literacy is restricted to white, male America.

> The essence of a liberal education is to liberate students from the parochialism inherent in the limited experiences of any single individual life.

An argument for a multicultural dimension to our curriculum would be dificient, however, if it rested only on such practical considerations.

The essence of a liberal education is to liberate students from the parochialism inherent in the limited experiences of any single individual life. History exposes us to other times; literature allows us to share in the experiences and dilemmas of other life situations. No one would claim to be educated if her or his intellectual experience was restricted to the Main Line since 1970. In the same way, the educated man or woman of the 21st century must know something about the culture of peoples who are neither white or of European descent.

A multicultural education does not require one to deny the values of one's own background or traditions. It does reject the arrogance implicit in the assumption that "we" have it right and "they" have it wrong; or that "they" can learn from us but that "we" have nothing to learn from "them."

Multiculturalism is not total relativism. By studying cultures and "ways of knowing" different from our own, we become more capable of distinguishing between what reflects an enduring truth and what is superficial and temporal. Surely no one argues that one must agree with every character or point of view encountered in course.

Some contend that to focus on diversity promotes antagonisms among individuals of different backgrounds and frustrates the possibility of community. This is true only if community is taken to mean total conformity (mediocrity?), where any deviance from accepted behavior means alienation. (Parents who attempt to clone their children rather than let them develop their individual personalities are considered dysfunctional.) True community requires not only tolerance of differences; we also must come to celebrate these differences, because every member of a true community is better off because its other members are not his or her clones.

Christianity has survived, in part, because it has recognized the distinction between cultural absolutism and universal truths. Its theology absorbed the insights of Plato and Aristotle; its popular culture absorbed first the practices of the Germanic tribes, then, in Latin America, the traditions of American indigenous cultures. Christianity appreciated that it is tough to love your neighbor if you have already excluded him or her from the community of acceptable humanity.

Opposition to multiculturalism is especially ironic at an institution like Villanova. In the United States, Catholic colleges like Villanova trace their origins to a "multicultural" desire to expand the "canon" of accepted wisdom beyond mainstream Protestantism. Indeed, there was a time in this country when mainstream academia derided the phrase "Irish culture" as an oxymoron.

Multiculturalism is not an option. It is a moral and Christian imperative. It is also an essential component in the curriculum of any institution of higher education that purports to be providing its students a liberal education for the 21st century.

Michael Burke, director of the Honors Program, was one of the authors of the diversity requirement.

Professor challenges definition of cult

By CHRISTOPHER HAAS

The Villanovan has seldom, in recent memory, concentrated such journalistic firepower as in its recent expose of the Greater Philadelphia Church of Christ: the issue's page one story, a full-column editorial, an interview with a campus expert and a lengthy open letter from campus administrators. The casual reader may surmise that more than the normal editorial process was at work in the careful orchestration of these articles. Clearly, this religious group is perceived by many members of our Villanova community to be a dangerous threat to free discourse and religious liberty. Perhaps these concerns are entirely justified. As a scholar who has spent several years conducting field research on new American religious movements, I have witnessed at close range the devastation caused by the coercive practices of religious cults. All members of our university community should vigorously deplore recruitment and retention tactics designed to break down an individual's faculties of critical thinking and judgement.

However, I found aspects of both the argument and tenor of the articles attacking this group to be deeply troubling. Two of the pieces contrasted religious cults and organized religions. This is patently a false dichotomy, since all religions (even one's private beliefs) are "organized" in some fashion. Perhaps the authors intended to make a distinction between a cult and a recognized religion — the editorial used the phrase "legitimate religious groups." These latter groups acquire this coveted status by becoming either a majority religion, or by trying to ease into the mainstream of American religious life. Witness the desperate attempts of the Unification Church to achieve acceptance as just another denomination.

> Beneath the exterior of the most offensive true believer is a real person needing compassion, engagement and even debate.

In my view, the Villanovan articles failed to distinguish between a cult and a sect. Both groups run counter to majority opinion. Both may adhere to exclusivist belief systems and consider themselves persecuted by the majority. Both may encourage lifestyles which are out of sync with popular opinion. And yet, if we are true to our commitment to diversity, we must recognize that it is only the cult which deserves our condemnation. For the crucial difference between the sect and the cult is in the means of recruitment and the methods of retention. If we overlook this distinction we may find ourselves in a quagmire of relativism where one person's sect is another person's cult. At a large public university I attended, parents and administrators were up in arms over the defection of several young men to a total belief system which mandated a radical change in lifestyle. They had become Cistercian monks. Likewise, within some Jewish communities, certain evangelical Christian groups are considered cults because they specifically target Jewish converts. Despite our own reactions to this cross-religious raiding, these groups hardly fit a careful definition of a "cult." Our geographical proximity to Amish groups should sensitize us to the important role of non-mainstreamed sects in American life. Is part of our difficulty in understanding these groups attached to our own cultural prejudices, our sense of what is "normal?" Is it more culturally acceptable to devote long hours to Bible reading or to the Lancaster Crawl?

Many of us feel uncomfortable with total belief systems which do not adhere to our notions of tolerance. And yet, this alone is not sufficient reason to banish seemingly intolerant voices from the university community. The world is filled with true believers. We ignore or ridicule them in our peril — whether in Louisiana or in the Middle East. I wonder if many early Christians would have been pigeon-holed by the Villanovan as cultists, since they "refuse(d) to recognize other religions as viable." Thoughtful pagan observers labeled these Christians as "atheists" since they narrow-mindedly considered the gods of their neighbors to be evil demons or even non-existent. Their anti-social lifestyle earned them the epithet of "haters of mankind." And beneath the exterior of the most offensive true believer is a real person needing compassion, engagement and even debate. Remember that Augustine himself became increasingly unsure of his long-cherished (and anti-social) Manichaean creed even as he propagated it. Diversity of opinions, even intolerant opinions, can only enrich discourse. I have often thought that Villanova could benefit from someone taking a van to a Center City campus (preferably not the van in Lower Bartley) and bringing back an assortment of true believers — from a chanting band of saffron-robed Krishnas to an impassioned cell of the Spartacus Youth League!

Academic freedom does not shrink from the true believer. Authentic diversity means rubbing shoulders with those who choose not to embrace diversity. Can it be that we wish to banish true believers because our commitment to tolerant questioning and limited knowledge springs from a belief that there is no final truth? Enshrining relativism and asserting the impossibility of real knowledge precludes any recognition of truth. Asking ultimate questions but refusing to allow for ultimate answers is one of the most egregious sins of intellectual pride.

Kids deserve a voter's chance

By ELLEN GOODMAN

Kids do not vote. We have heard this cry so often that it is hard to know any longer if it is a lament or an excuse for the neglect of the youngest and poorest Americans.

Why don't children's concerns reach the top of the government agenda? Kids do not vote.

Why doesn't child care, child abuse, child health, child housing, get a priority bid for our tax dollars? Kids do not vote.

Why doesn't the White House, the State House, City Hall pay more attention to their needs? Kids don't vote.

There is something sad about this generic, all-purpose answer and something cynical as well. It is as if the every-man-for-himself, me-first wrestling for tax money were a given, as if there were no longer any belief in the common wealth. And as if politicians were helpless in the face of the "reality" that — after all — Kids do not vote.

But this fall, as national concern grows about the deteriorating condition of our young, the people of San Francisco have become part of an experiment. On Nov. 5, this city with a smaller percentage of children than any other of its size will vote on a Children's Amendment. Proposition J, as it is formally listed on the ballot, would change the city charter to mandate the use of a small portion of property tax money specifically for children.

A group of advocates, frustrated and despairing, have decided to bet everything on the hope that the public is miles ahead of the politicians. As Margaret Brodkin, the ebullient head of Coleman Advocates for Children and Youth which authored this amendment, describes: "Kids have been just so shortchanged. Even the most liberal, progressive politicians have been wonderful on the rhetoric and wanting to do the right thing. But when push came to shove and the resources were limited, they didn't want to waste political chits on a constituency that had no clout."

> In polls Americans say they are worrying about kids. But nearly every attempt to translate that alarm into policy is paralyzed.

In San Francisco, as in every big city, the budget brokers have been juggling all the mounting woes of urban life. But as reports of child abuse in the city increased 400 percent, with 5,000 children listed among the homeless, with the day care waiting lists reaching 8,000, the children's share of the budget, according to Coleman Advocates, went down.

So this spring, with 68,000 signatures in a city of 750,000, supporters got children on the ballot. "This is an experiment. We're asking if the people are going to be more farsighted than City Hall," says Brodkin. Despite one poll that showed 75 percent support, she adds, "I don't sleep at night."

The Children's Amendment does not ask for new tax dollars. It asks that for the next 10 years kids get a larger portion. Exactly 1.25 percent of property taxes would go to this purpose the first year and 2.5 percent in each of the next nine years, adding about 3 million more to child care, prenatal care, job training for teenagers, health and social services.

This is by no means a perfect idea, as even its advocates agree. The money that goes to children must come from somewhere else and there are needs all around the Bay city. Many supporters of Proposition J worried at first that the amendment would precipitate generational warfare, or pit AIDS patients against homeless children against public workers.

But the list of endorsers includes senior citizens, gays, police and more remarkably, politicians. Seven out of the 11 city supervisors support it. Mayor Art Agnos, who is running for re-election calls it, "an idea whose time has come." These are the politicians who could have increased funds for children on their own. Why didn't they? Agnos speaks of the "competing priorities" and then adds, "Kids don't vote."

In polls, Americans say they are worrying about kids. In surveys they say, yes, we would tax ourselves to educate, house, care for the young. But nearly every attempt to translate that alarm into policy is paralyzed. We have come to the sorry place where even politicians are asking to be saved from politics — as if they were paralyzed in the face of the process.

So, an experiment, born of desperation, is facing its first test in San Francisco under the watchful eyes of other cities and other citizens. "If we have to tie their hands to get policymakers to fund prenatal care," says Brodkin, so be it. Now it is up to the grown-ups.

Arctic Wildlife Refuge debate continues in the senate

By ERIC CHEUNG
Staff Reporter

With the defeat of Senate Bill 1220 Nov. 1, the Arctic National Wildlife Refuge (ANWR) in Alaska appears to be safe. But this can only be an uneasy victory for all Americans as we continue to waste the oil we have. The unsatiable desire for new sources of oil will indubitably lead many prospectors back to this 19 million acre land. For this reason it is important to continue to stress exactly what the Refuge is and its importance.

ANWR is basically a desert, receiving less than eight inches of rain annually, but the 1.5 million acre coastal plains within it teems with life. This wetland is home to many bears, wolverines, wolves, musk oxen, birds and 180,000 porcupine caribou. Oil interests find it of little value except for the possible oil it may contain below its frozen surface. Environmentalists see it as an untouched and self-contained Arctic ecosystem. For the past few months it has become a battle ground between many different interests.

The environmentalists view oil-drilling as a tremendous source of pollution as well as a detriment to the region itself. The chemicals emitted into the air as a result of oil operations lead to acid rain and global warming. Currently, Prudhoe Bay, an established oilfield in Alaska, produces pollution that can be found 200 miles away. The pipelines that transport the oil and gravel "pads" that support oil facilities have caused destruction to the habitat. Oil fields tend to alter much of the environment including thermal erosion of the permafrost as well as the destruction of much of the life-supporting vegetation. Additionally, the freshwater habitat becomes threatened by oil industries because of the massive amount of water that is needed to support drills. Already as much as 15,000 birds and 400,000 fish have been destroyed as a result of oil operations. All this occurs because of the initial production of oil. As with many industries, oil produces waste, 40 million gallons of "toxic brine" and the 300 cubic yards of solid waste created daily are injected underground into reserve pits. Seepage of much of these wastes have led to even further destruction of the tundra. The alternative to dumping the wastes into the ocean is not much better. Furthermore, many regions of tundra that had been disturbed through oil drilling have not been restored, indicating that environmental loss could be permanent.

The oil industries argue that new technology has made their drilling more efficient. If they could be allowed to drill the coastal plains for oil they would do so with as little damage to the environment as possible. They argue that the coastal plain is a small part of the entire refuge and that their drilling has little to no effect on the environment. Unfortunately, even the most advanced technology cannot compensate for the margin of human error. In 1989 that human error came in the form of a 11 million gallon spill of oil by the Exxon Valdez. As we have seen it only takes one mistake to irrevocably destroy the entire habitat.

There is also another element, a kind of Alaskan version of "Dances With Wolves." The Refuge is home to a herd of caribou that migrate throughout the land yearly. The oil pipes make the herds nervous and they tend to stay away from them, limiting the amount of land the herds have to live on. In Prudhoe Bay much of the caribou's natural enemies, such as bears, have been hunted or scared away, leading to a population problem. In other areas, oil drilling has destroyed the lichens t(ey eat.

Ecologists believe that oil industries will eventually lead to the end of the Porcupine caribou. The herds have been compared to the buffalo that once roamed the Great Plains. And like the buffalo, they have Indians who depend upon them for food and clothing. The arctic village is home to a tribe of Indians known as the Gwich'in. The caribou to them are a gift from the world. They do not hunt them for more than what they need. With the death of the caribou would come the death of their people as a culture.

Further up north is the Inupiat Eskimo community who, although not dependent upon the caribou, live off the food supplied by the sea. They are economically benefited by the oil industries and have no problem with drilling in the Refuge. However, this attitude arises more from hopelessness since they feel that the oil industries will eventually drill it anyway so they might as well reap the rewards. Their culture, too, could be destroyed as more and more of their lands are taken by the outsiders intent upon oil.

It is our dependency on oil that has caused the pressure to open this refuge to the oil companies.

"Don't Tread On Me" is a newly created section of The Villanovan. It hopes to bring the concerns for the safety of the planet to the University Community. Recycling eases stress on landfills

By GUY McDONALD
Staff Reporter

Not many people think about what happens to their garbage once they put it out on the curb and it is picked up, but this country is facing a serious problem concerning waste disposal. Most of the trash generated in our country ends up in a landfill and these landfills are filling up all too quickly. Each American generates four pounds of garbage per day which equals an outstanding 182.5 billion tons per year! By the year 2000 it is estimated that 66 percent of this country's landfills will be filled to maximum capacity.

What can be done to alleviate this problem? Many states have favored the use of incinerators, but this just exchanges one problem for another. With the use of an incinerator the aesthetically unpleasant aspect of a landfill as well as the chance that harmful chemicals found in the trash will be released into the atmosphere. Two safer alternatives to waste problems are recycling and composting.

The recycling of paper and glass is mandatory in many states around the country, but there is still have a long way to go. Currently, in the United States, 11 percent of the trash generated is recycled. In Japan, whose available land is at a premium, they are able to recycle 50 percent of their garbage. This shows that there is much more room for the United States to improve.

There are two problems hindering the recycling effort, and they go hand-in-hand. The first problem has to do with our society which has been geared towards a "disposable" lifestyle. We are very wasteful of the things we buy and own. For example, if we buy something at the store, we take it home and the wrapper or the box comes off and goes into the trash. Then when we get tired of it, or a new item comes along, we just get rid of it for something new.

The other problem is that much of the time, especially with paper, recycled materials cost more than raw materials. This hinders the drive for recycling because if a company buys the more expensive materials, they can either take this loss fromtheir profits or pass it on to the consumer.

Recycling can be profitable in this country but changes have to be made. First of all, most of our recylced materials are not kept within the United States. They are sold overseas. If all people did their own recycling, a tremendous amount of money ($200 per person/year) could be saved and we could create many desperately nneeded jobs.

Finally, through recycling we can lessen human impact on the environment. Recycling will reduce the number of landfills needed for the trash and it will reduce the amounts of raw materials needed. For example, for every ton of paper recycled, 17 trees and 7000 gallons of water are saved. Also, 60 pounds of harmful pollutants are kept out of the environment.

Another alternative to our landfill problem is composting. Composting is when the organic matter in trash is taken out and left to decay. Organic materials usually do not decay well in landfills. In a study done at a landfill in New York state a newspaper was found which dated back to 1953. The newspaper was wrinkled and yellowed but still very legible. In landfills the environment is unsuitable for the microorganisms which cause decay so none of the raw materials are returned back to the environment. Inthe case of composting, the organic materials found in trash is kept in an environment suitable for the microorganisms. The result is a nutrient rich, natural fertilizer which can be used in organic farming. A form of composting is currently used on the Villanova campus. Have you been wondering where all of the leaves have gone from around campus? The leaves have been taken, composted and used in the plant beds around campus.

As you can see, recycling and composting are a viable alternative to landfill woes. Landfills were not anyone's first choice as a way to dispose of trash but they were a way to put off the problem until a later day. Through recycling the need for raw materials is lessened. Composting will take the organic waste we create and convert it to a form which can be used as a substitute for chemical fertilizers. Utilization of these two techniques will preserve remaining resources and help to solve waste management problems.

Veg continues to grow

According to Kristin Romano, Villanova's Environmental Group (VEG) began five years ago when Clare Deleao was working with a teacher in the biology department. They tried to get Igloos (recycling bins) on campus but ran into red tape, and it was never accomplished.

In 1988 Patricia Gavin, Deleao and Romano formed a group through a game of ultimate frisbee. They tried to establish formal meetings, but no one showed up. Romano on her own, recycled computer paper, cans and newspapers. She collected the computer paper in her own room, borrowed Campus Ministry vans and brought it to different recycling sites. In addition, she, along with a few of her friends, recycled newspapers and aluminum cans.

The group had some difficulties in the beginning because it lacked direction. The following year, Rich Henneberry led the group, then consisting of over 100 people, giving them more structure. The group worked closely with the school administration and Dr. Richard A. Neville, vice-president for Student Life.

Last year, VEG continued to evolve despite organizational problems. A recycling program was set up by Kevin O'Donnell. By the end of the year, the organization had a strong group of very committed environmentalists.

This year, there is a lot of interest and things are improving under effective leadership. According to Jeaneen Riely, the best part of VEG is that it consists of people who are committed, working for the environment and having a good time. If you are interested in joining the committee, there is always room for more.

'Nova realizes hunger problem

By ELIZABETH HARTNETT
Staff Reporter

For the 19th consecutive year, Hunger Awareness Week has brought the suffering of those without food to the Villanova campus. The past week was designed to allow students to become more aware of famine and starvation in the world, especially in Third World countries. Hunger Awareness Week was founded in 1972 by the Rev. Ray Jackson, O.S.A., who is still the driving force behind the program's success today.

The Awareness Program officially began last Sunday during the Masses. Each priest used his homily to stress the vital importance of making a difference in the problem of world hunger. The program was also extended to include university faculty. The program coordinators scheduled a curriculum development workshop on hunger for each one of the four schools within the University.

One of the week's central events was the "Run for Hunger" which took place Monday. Runners earned pledge money for completing the one mile course which began at Falvey Library. Almost 60 students, in addition to members of the track teams, participated in this run. The race was led by track Coach Marty Stern, who lifted the starting flag and encouraged runners in their attempt to make a difference.

The past week was designed to allow students to become more aware of famine and starvation in the world.

The highlight of the week was Thursday's Fast Day. In the days preceding the fast, students were asked to sign up to abstain from eating lunch so the school could contribute $3 per student to a designated charity. The fast also functioned to make each student aware of what it feels like to go hungry. This year the money donated will help build an agricultural education center in Peru, where farmers will be taught methods of planting, irrigation and other farming techniques.

Jackson and student co-chairpersons, seniors Laura Heitzmann, Mike Adams and Michelle Hicks, coordinated Hunger Awareness Week. Jackson intends for this week to "raise the consciousness of the problem of malnutrition and starvation in the Third World." Jackson believes that as a Catholic priest, it is his duty "to spread Christ's message to care for the needy." According to Jackson, his involvement with Hunger Awareness Week stems from a devotion to God and the personal satisfaction he derives from observing the results of his dedication.

Jackson hopes that students gained a better understanding of the problem of hunger through their participation in Hunger Awareness Week. Each small act or sacrifice grants students the power to relieve some of the suffering in poverty stricken areas.

As sophomore Meg Dekeukelaere said, "By giving up your meal and fasting, you feel as if you are aiding those plagued with starvation even though you may only be helping them in a small way."

A bit of Broadway hits 'Nova

By GRETCHEN FISHER
Assistant Features Editor

"If I were a rich man . . ."

This line from "Fiddler on the Roof" is something we often dream about. If many of us had the money, we would travel to Broadway to see our favorite plays. But thanks to the Student Musical Theater, four of Broadway's most popular musicals are being brought to us. Last night the group presented the first of three performances entitled "A Night of Mini-Musicals," which combine excerpts from "Fiddler on the Roof," "Anything Goes," "Barnum" and "Godspell."

In only its second year, the Student Musical Theater has become quite a success on campus. The students involved play a very active part in organizing and directing the various events. The board consists of President John Castano, Kristy Peyakovich, Vince Lamonaca and Maria Jackson.

The group started rehearsing just a few weeks after school began. Practice is usually once a week, but before special performances practice increases to at least twice a week. Auditions for a part in the musicals require students to sing a song of their choice and answer a few questions. Callbacks consist of further eliminations and result in roles offered to prospective stars. If not called back, applicants are encouraged to try out for dancing auditions.

Thanks to the Student Musical Theater, four of Broadway's most popular plays are being brought to us.

The members of the Student Musical Theater are pleased with their involvement.

"It's a great opportunity to meet people and express yourself on stage," junior Sean Collins said.

Junior Kasi Patterson agreed. "It's a brand new organization, and everyone is working hard to get it off the ground," Patterson said. "The group brings a new dimension and perspective to Villanova, making it a more diverse place."

The "Mini-Musicals" production promises to be an entertaining time for people of all musical tastes. The second performance is tonight and the final performance will be held tomorrow night. Both begin at 8 p.m. in St. Mary's Auditorium. Tickets are $3 for students, $6 for adults and can be bought at the Connelly Center Ticket Office or the Music Activities office in the basement of St. Mary's.

Meet Chi Omega

By STACEY GIBERTI
Staff Reporter

"A world of support, a lifetime of sisterhood" are the words Chi Omega has chosen to express its motto. This idea has been extended to Villanova with the colonization of its 176th chapter Nov. 17.

The process of Chi Omega's birth at Villanova began several years ago. Lorrie Hill, extension coordinator for Chi Omega, explained that when Villanova introduced sororities on campus it invited several sororities to make presentations. Then Villanova ranked the sororities according to when each could come on campus. The Rush process last year showed Villanova's need for a new sorority. Due to a vote and decision made by Villanova's Panhellenic council, Chi Omega received a call during the summer, requesting it to begin a chapter at Villanova.

As a result of this request, seven members of the Chi Omega national extension team arrived at Villanova Sept. 22 to make their first presentation to the women of Villanova. During that week, the team conducted interviews of over 200 women seeking a place in the sisterhood of Chi Omega. The Chi Omega chapter from Franklin and Marshall College in Lancaster attended the preference party to select 90 women to begin the process of pledging.

The normal pledge period of 10 weeks was condensed into six. "The pledge period was condensed due to the Thanksgiving holiday and the need to have the officers trained before beginning finals and the next process of Rush," said Gina Borgognoni, chapter visitor. During this period the Chi Omega pledges were busy with TGs, a pledge retreat, dinners, intramural sports and learning the history of Chi Omega.

"I have never seen a group come together in such a short time and work together so well," said Borgognoni.

The pledge process culminated in prelude week which began Nov. 11. During this time, the pledges took part in nightly ceremonies and learned further information about the sorority in preparation for their long-awaited initiation.

The pledges were joined Nov. 17 by Roselyn Dabbs, Chi Omega's governing president; Melanie Shaine, treasurer; Mary Ann Fruge, national extension chair-

Lip-It provides charity for needy through laughter

The Lip-It '91 champions wowed the audience with an encore performance of "Good Vibrations."

By MAUREEN MEYER
Staff Reporter

What do Chief Henry Jansen of the Radnor Police Force, Ed Ryan from California Style Pizza, Jeff Horton, director of Villanova Public Safety, Suzanne Slattery from Campus Corner and Villanova Student Government President Mark O'Rourke have in common? The answer is that they were all judges for Lip-It '91, sponsored by the Resident Student Association (RSA). All of the proceeds will be donated to the Philadelphia chapter of the Juvenile Diabetes Foundation to aid in research aimed at finding a cure for juvenile diabetes.

Comedienne Nancy Parker was the emcee for Lip-It and slowly started out the evening with impersonations of such female personalities as Edith Bunker from "All in the Family," Roseanne Barr and first lady Barbara Bush. Parker, who has appeared on "Arsenio Hall" and "Evening at the Improv," met with a tough audience at Villanova. The level of anticipation in Jake Nevin Field House was high as students awaited the show's beginning.

House Council officers volunteered to help with ticket sales, security, stage crew and all of the various responsibilities that comprise the annual Lip-It event.

The level of anticipation in Jake Nevin Fieldhouse was high as students awaited the show's beginning.

"It was a big success," said Nicole Lenti, House Council president of Alumni Hall. "I only wish that more people had come to watch because the show was really good."

Act I began with a performance of Aretha Franklin's "Respect." Hasshi Sudler was next with an extensive tribute to Michael Jackson. This was followed by a hilarious rendition of "I've Got You, Babe" with Terri Tolerico and Ken Batchelor playing the parts of Sonny and Cher, respectively. "Good Vibrations" ended the first act.

During the intermission, prizes donated from places such as Cafe Bartley, Flowers on the Avenue, Campus Corner and the University Shop were raffled off.

A number entitled "Down with APD" kicked off Act II, followed by "Cool Rider" from the movie "Grease II" and "Mick & Mike," an act with Michael Jackson and Mick Jagger look-alikes. Stevie Wonder's "Keep Our Love Alive,"

Lectures target poignant issues

By PEGGY AGOLINO
Assistant Features Editor

Many organizations on Villanova's campus sponsor various activities and lecture series. Some people walk by a sign thinking they would like to attend, but never actually get there. The Panhellenic Council at Villanova just presented a unique lecture program entitled "The Women's Series." However, the topics discussed by no means concerned only women.

The lectures began Nov. 6. Dr. Sheryl Bowen and Dr. Paula Michael-Johnson from the communication arts department discussed the topic of Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome (AIDS) and how college students can address this topic in their relationships. Dr. Michael Pertschuk, chairman of the Eating Disorders Program at the Graduate Hospital in Philadelphia, and Janice Janosik, from the Center for Drug and Alcohol Assistance at Villanova, discussed eating disorders and addictive personalities Nov. 13.

The last lecture was Wed., Nov. 20. A career panel consisting of four women on Villanova's faculty discussed their careers and how they balance their personal and professional lives.

Dr. Helen K. Lafferty, associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts and Sciences; June W. Lytel-Murphy, of the English department; Barbara Will, O.P., peace and justice education; and Dr. Cheryl Asher, economics department, comprised the panel. Nancy Dudak, director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, also acted as a part of the panel and answered questions about Villanova's resources in this area.

Many times, women have few role models who are easily accessible to them. This program allowed women and men to discuss issues freely in a more personal setting. Wall stressed the importance of women role models at a school where there are few. She feels it is beneficial for women to learn about what other women are doing so they realize what can be accomplished. Wall added that in the future she would like to see lectures about what motivates people to choose a Catholic education, and perhaps a "Men's Series" as well.

Other members of the Career Panel agreed with Wall.

"As a woman I am pleased to see programs dealing with women's issues and I am glad to be a part of it," Janosik said. "This series of programs discusses critcal relevant issues that affect the student population. Much thought has been put into selecting the speakers and the issues."

Lafferty also feels very strongly about helping out with such programs and "feels a responsibility to the women students at Villanova."

Gary Bonas, associate director of Student Activties, stated that the Panhellenic Council is one of the largest women's groups on campus. The Council did not see much programming aimed at issues women face and wanted to create awareness. This program truly adds a unique perspective to the average lecture series because of its emphasis on women's issues. It has been very beneficial for those who have attended due to the importance of the topics discussed. At these lectures both women and men gained a new perspective on issues, both serious and interesting.

person; Hill and Borgognoni, as well as many alumnae and the University of Pennsylvania chapter. The women participated in the process of initiating the 87 pledges.

The Villanova chapter will continue to have a chapter visitor until it has completed the spring semester Rush process. The officers for the chapter were elected Nov. 17 following the intiation. The newly elected president, Clare Danek, said, "Chi Omega will be for me stability, support, good times and great friends."

The newly initiated sisters of Chi Omega at Villanova are very excited about the future of their chapter.

"Our sorority at this point is very strong. As we go through Rush, I hope our enthusiasm and strength will show through to all those who participate in the process," said Kristin McKeon. "Becoming a sister in Chi Omega has been a rewarding and fulfilling experience in which I have gained 86 new sisters. I hope to share all this with future Chi Omega sisters at Villanova," said Colleen Randall.

These 86 Chi Omega sisters have formed a family through which they will espouse the six purposes of Chi Omega: friendship, high standard of personnel, sincere learning and creditable scholarship, participation in campus activities, career development and community service. The sisters are already striving to make a difference at Villanova and leave their Chi Omega mark.

Emergency aid now services Villanova

Special to the Villanovan

This week marks the first anniversary of the Villanova Emergency Medical Service (VEMS). The group, open to both students and staff, received its charter last November and promises to have a bright future on campus. VEMS currently provides constant medical coverage to the University community Thursday through Sunday. The emergency crews are staffed by students who are Pennsylvania certified Emergency Medical Technicians and First Responders.

Thus far, VEMS has responded to over 100 campus emergencies, ranging from minor cuts and sprains to seizures, unconscious persons and choking victims. The group's average response time to the scene of an emergency is under four minutes and is assisted by the Department of Public Safety. Once at the scene, the crew initiates medical care until the arrival of the community ambulance, if necessary.

Last semester, VEMS sponsored two first-aid courses, certifying over 40 people and taught on campus by the Fitzgerald-Mercy Training Academy. The group will once again offer the "First Responder," a basic course consisting of 40 hours of training, as well as the "Emergency Medical Technician," a more advanced and detailed course. Both will begin in mid-January.

For more information regarding EMS or the courses, stop by the Department of Public Safety at the St. Clare House on Lancaster Avenue. Course registration deadline is Dec. 31.

SASS RECOMMENDS

Students Against Sexual Stereotyping (SASS) would like to state clearly that our group is in favor of the diversity requirement. We dislike the Young Republican's false advertising which suggests that students will be compelled to take courses on abortion and homosexuality. In actuality, the diversity requirement encompasses a large number of courses from a variety of departments. No student will be forced to take a particular diversity course, and, in fact, many courses already offered will become a part of the new diversity requirement.

SASS feels compelled to speak up against the Young Republicans ad because it fosters fear and hate of difference rather than the spirit of understanding and acceptance which Villanova is trying to promote during its Year of Community. The world is a diverse place and the multicultural requirement (not a multicultural core) attempts to educate students about a different culture. Ignorance often feeds hate and violence. Please support the diversity requirement and encourage understanding, if not acceptance, of different points of view.

Beth Tacelosky, the Postman in "Please, Mr. Postman," said of the performance, "It was a lot of fun, except for falling on the stage in front of everyone I knew. More people should do it because it was so fun. It wasn't a big commitment on my part, but it gave me a chance to spend some quality time with my friends."

Moore's licks express versatility

Vinnie Moore wails away at the 23 East Cabaret.

Solo guitarist Vinnie Moore spoke to David J. Criblez in an exclusive interview for the Villanovan.

Vinnie Moore may not be a name that is bathed in lights, but who cares? The guitarist has surreal talent that oozes out of every corner of his latest LP, Meltdown. Moore has all the fire and fury that a solo shotgun guitar player should possess. With past solo milestones Mind's Eye and Time Odyssey under his belt, Moore has spread his wings by working with classical and fusion styles while returning home to pure rock. Perhaps Moore may be more familiar then you think. This past summer he toured arenas spotlighting as Alice Cooper's lead guitarist on the "Operation Rock-n-Roll" tour with Judas Priest, Motorhead and Dangerous Toys. Meltdown stakes Moore's claim as the heir to Joe Satriani and Steve Vai. He is currently on tour with Rush popping ear-drums and guitar strings across the country.

VILLANOVAN: It seems that the culture is turning to a much more guitar-oriented rock and steering away from that heavy keyboard sound. Why do you think that is?

MOORE: "It is so hard to say. I think people are just excited by the sound of a guitar because it's so raw, loose and imperfect. Whereas keyboards lie within a perfect world. It's always in tune and sounding the same. When people play guitar, it seems more human."

V: With your straight ahead attack, do you feel that your music is much with the times or rather a throwback to the past?

MOORE: "I'd like to think that my music is on the cutting edge of things. But I've taken things from my past and music that I grew up on and incorporated that in my playing.

V: The blues base seems to be rather popular today with many metal/rock guitarists. Do you see yourself referring back to old blues riffs for inspiration at all?"

MOORE: "I've kind of come full circle as an artist. I started out as a teenager, playing like I do now. Then I did Mind's Eye which was a speed-rock piece which tied both rock and classical guitar together. Along came Time Odyssey, which was a fusion record. This new record, Meltdown, is the kind of record I would have made when I was 17."

V: In your own words, how would you describe your own playing?

MOORE: "A wall of noise! (jokes) ... Nah, but it's really hard to judge your own playing or style cause you lose perspective and focus very easily."

V: How would you say your playing has been altered, if at all, through the years?

MOORE: "I think the most important thing is to keep evolving and growing and I've done that using different styles here and there. If you don't grow, you might as well quit, cause it's over. I'm glad my records are so varied. If you fail to vary things, you end up making the same record over and over again."

V: What kind of guitarist inspired you as a kid, what impressed you?

MOORE: "I have two separate sides. There's the rock side in which Richie Blackmoore, Eddie Van Halen, Michael Schenker, David Gilmore and Frank Marino inspired me. Then there is the instrumental side like Al DiMeola, Larry Carlton, Steve Morse and Alan Holdsworth. Two opposite ends of the spectrum. All of it shows up in my playing some how. You are a product of what you listen to. You are what you hear."

V: How about now, who blows you away when you see them or hear them?

MOORE: "Steve Morse is incredible. Holdsworth is great. But I still like Trauer a lot. I saw him about a year ago. He just plays with so much feeling, really captures your attention."

V: Is there anyone in particular who you would consider to be overpraised?

MOORE: "That Vinnie Moore guy! (Kiddingly.) He's totally overrated! Nah, in actuality I like the guy in Spinal Tap."

V: Meltdown has a lot of people talking. Its power is immense. How long did it take to put together?

MOORE: "I started writing last year, 1990, in June. It took me three months to finish writing and then we started recording on Halloween of last year. It took a month-and-a-half to record and mix."

V: Many record companies are fearful of instrumental albums, due to lack of sales. With Satriani, Vai and yourself, do you see a new trend arising?

MOORE: "Record companies are definitely more interested in guitarists nowadays. They were close-minded to it a few years ago. But, its kind of proved itself due to both Satch and Vai."

V: What would you say sets you,

Nirvana breaks college scene

By MAURA RURAK
Editorial Assistant

The cult group Nirvana has made its way from the streets of Seattle, Wa., onto the radio waves of colleges throughout the country. The band mixes the sounds of metal, rock and folk with a progressive flavor and has found success due to the hot single, "Smells Like Teen Spirit."

Overall, Nevermind is a high energy album made for thrashing. The songs are complete and polished. The talent of this trio is as obvious as their hate for the establishment. "Breed," the fourth track, pounds a heavy beat while "Lithium" and "Polly" balance the pace with mellow rhythms. "Territorial Pissings" is the epitome of the trasher theme song. From the first beat, the track screams, slams and throws the listener up against a wall of sound. As an added attraction, the final cut "Something In The Way," is not over at the usual time. If the CD is left playing, a different, brash melody will begin playing on minute 14.

"Smells Like Teen Spirit" has become a cult classic, especially of MTV's alternative show "120 Minutes." Probably the most unique track on the album, this song encompasses all of Nirvana's best musical traits. The melody is haunting, eerie but memorable. The pace shifts as frequently as lead vocalist, Kurt Cobain, increases his traditional yell. As always, the lyrics of this alternative band express the deeper introspective side of its music. "With the lights out, it's less dangerous, here we are now, entertain us, I feel stupid and contagious, here we are now, entertain us, a mulatto, an albino, a mosquito, my libido ..." Although the words are often difficult to understand, once it is accomplished the song takes on much greater meaning.

Surprisingly, Nevermind is one of the few alternative rock albums that is not plastered with a parental advisory sticker on the cover. Nirvana has even gotten away with not publishing the lyrics to all the songs. Instead, it chose to create a collage of all the lyrics which reads as a off-beat form of poetry. " ... sell the kids for food, we can have some more/ The water is so yellow, I'm a healthy student, you're my vitamins/Take your time, hurry up, the the choice is yours, don't be late ..."

Innuendo offers creative atmosphere

By PAUL J. BARBEN
Staff Reporter

So you say you are looking for some on-campus, alternative entertainment? Tired of Nintendo, television and the pool hall? Cafe Innuendo had its second successful outing in Dougherty Hall Nov. 11. The lights were low, the candles were burning, the art was being absorbed, the coffee was hot and the crowd of approximately 70 anxiously awaited the show.

The extremely talented Touch Monkeys opened the evening with an intense acoustic set of originals. John Goetz and John DiBella were on guitars and also provided the ripe vocals, while the percussion was taken care of by Andy Applegate.

The next act was a short but refreshing blues set done by Dennis Phares on guitar and Dan Gries on piano. B.W.N., the duo made up of Rob Staeger on vocals and Christian Ready on acoustic guitar, took the stage and stole the show with their cynical and comical style. B.W.N., as explained by Staeger, "used to mean Beethoven's Worst Nightmare, but now it could be anything that you want it to. For example, it could stand for 'Buffalo Without Nipples.' "

Their song content varied from fetishes with fast-food restaurants, as in "Watching the Undead (Stumble into Denny's)" to gambling experiences in their catchy "Going to Atlantic City." B.W.N. finished with "Hard to Get," a song Staeger amusingly dubbed "Our Freebird." The one satisfied bystander stated, "These guys are Frank Zappa with a tad of Dead Milkmen thrown in."

The middle of the night hit a more serious note as a prisoner of conscience, Kamar, talked on behalf of Amnesty International. The native of Sri Lanka told of how he spent five years in and out of jail for his involvement in protests against the government's Laws of Religious Majority. He described the inhumane torture techniques used on him by the government. He has genuine gratitude towards Amnesty International, the organization that fought for his release. This was evident in his alarming account of the slaughter of 50 political prisoners by criminal prisoners, which took place which he was released. He stressed the importance of Amnesty's letter writing campaigns as well as the necessary involvement of the United States in helping free prisoners of conscience. Before leaving the shocked crowd, he explained, "The unknown helping the unknown is the highest form of humanity."

The readings of various poet's works were given by Loraine McCurdy and followed it with her own distinct cover of a Joni Mitchell song. The Touch Monkeys wrapped the eventful night up with one final song. The next Cafe Innuendo will be Monday, Nov. 25, at 8 p.m. All are welcome and admission is free.

Theatre runs "All My Sons"

By COLEEN KENIREY
Assistant Entertainment Editor

The second production in the Villanova Theatre's "Season of Just Desserts" will be "All My Sons." Arthur Miller's tragic drama deals with family relationships and ethical decision-making. The main character, Joe Keller, is a man whose role as the head of a family and as a businessman come into conflict. The story, set in post-war America, examines Joe's decision to ship defective airplane parts to the front line and the powerful effect it has on his family, since two of his sons served in that same war.

The play carries a timeless message about ethical responsibilities and human relationships. Director Lon Winston feels that Miller's work serves as a warning "in wartime fervor not to lose touch with individual, personal morality that informs and affects the bigger picture." Winston sees Miller's success in his ability to speak to the American working class directly, with themes which "touch a collective nerve ending."

Winston's widely acclaimed direction of two other Miller plays at the Villanova Theatre, "Death of a Salesman" in 1982 and "A View From the Bridge" in 1988, serve as a promising predictor for the quality of "All My Sons." An experienced cast also provides a positive indicator of superb performances. Villanova graduate and professional actor Mark Conti, who starred under Winston's direction in Sam Shepard's "Buried Child," plays Joe. Keller's wife Kate will be played by Mimi Smith, a Villanova Theatre regular who performed in last spring's "The Birthday Party."

Russ Widdall, who appeared in "Nothing Sacred" last fall, will perform the role of Chris,and Ann will be played by Eva Kay Sheets. The cast will also include graduate students Simon Linscheid, who also appeared in "The Birthday Party," David Olmstead and Ruthanne Keck, undergraduate student Raymond Sarceni, recent Villanova alumna Annemarie Murphy and Radnor Middle School 6th grader Jesse Ryan.

"All My Sons" will be performed from Nov. 20-24 and Dec. 4-8. Contact the Villanova Theatre for more details.

DeNiro rages as evil hero in "Cape Fear"

By AARON NICODEMUS
Entertainment Editor

"Cape Fear"
Directed by Martin Scorsese
Universal Pictures
 1/2

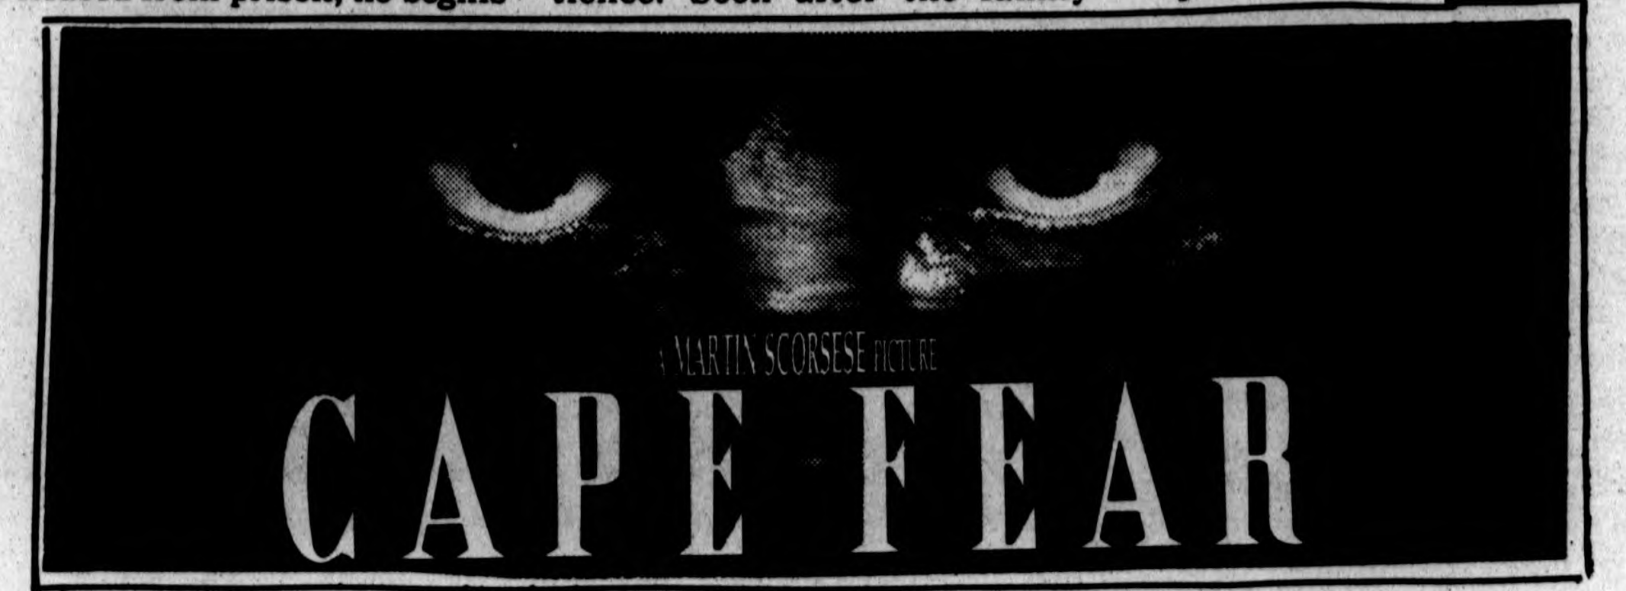
The eyes of a stalker burn through its prey, through the veneers of humanity into its very core. By analyzing and calculating, the predator strikes at the precise moment. Combine this relentless obsession with a psychopathic personality and the result is pure terror. "Cape Fear" is big-screen suspense at its best.

Nick Nolte plays an industrious lawyer whose career is blossoming. His wife (Jessica Lange) and daughter (Juliette Lewis) have finally forgiven him for years of infidelity. The family has put the past behind and look ahead to a future full of hope. Just as their lives appear promising, Nolte's haunting past destroys any chance at happiness.

When an ex-con (Robert DeNiro) is released from prison, he begins to subtly harass Nolte's family. Nolte, then his attorney, suppressed information that might have acquitted DeNiro for the rape of a young girl. Now, after years of pent-up frustration and anger, DeNiro is determined to seek revenge upon Nolte and his family.

He begins by delicately testing the borders of the family's patience. Soon after the family dog dies from poisoning, it appears DeNiro is somehow working from the inside. As he plots his next move, he can be charming and warm while his blood runs cold like ice. By the end, his raging presence is simply stunning.



DeNiro's character ranks as one of the most diabolical psychotics ever portrayed. The pure evil energy he emits and his absolute unpredictability keeps the suspense pitched.

Nolte and Lange give fabulous performances as the couple who pull together in the face of nerve-wracking anguish. Lewis, as Nolte's nubile daughter, is a pleasant surprise in her first major role.

Scorsese scores a major hit with his revival of the 1962 classic. The film itself is a masterful psychological drama, but some of the intensely graphic scenes might turn away the fainthearted. The forced combination of DeNiro's character as a cold psychotic and a Freddy Krueger-like splatter hero is too much for one film to bear. For the most part, however, DeNiro is able to overcome this hinderance and give an outstanding performance.

The film itself ripples shockwave after shockwave through the audience. It literally pounds the viewer with an unmerciful sequence of terror and suspense. "Cape Fear" is a worthwhile effort and an incredible work of cinematography. Prepare for a roller-coaster ride of the mind, but be ready for its effects on the stomach.

Bowie's Machine gets in gear at the Tower

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior reporter

Crash. Boom. Bang. These are the three laws David Bowie's sophomoric side project, dubbed Tin Machine, live by. This brash philosophy was apparent and constantly applied during their rock-n-roll weekend at the Tower Theater Nov. 15 and 17.

Bowie kept up his reputation as being a "chameleon" as he transformed himself from classic rock icon/innovator to simply the lead singer of a new non-commercial progressive rock band on the run. Tin Machine is a rather healthy unit despite its age. The Sales brothers, bassist Tony and drummer Hunt, mesh quite eloquently with guitarist Reeves Gabrels, who appears to be hot on the heels of guitar legends Steve Vai and Joe Satriani.

Warming up the audience with the Machine's pseudo-classics "Baby Can Dance" and "Under the God" from their debut LP, Tin Machine. Their presence, although commanding, was down played. The tremendous ego that Bowie cops had to be shunned and put away or else the band would not be able to work at the finely tuned "machine" that it is.

Tin Machine II, their latest effort and touring backbone, was well represented. "Shopping For Girls" and "Goodbye Mr. Ed" are merely two bite-size sweets that comes out of the Machine. However, one of the evenings most engrossing performances came from drummer Hunt Sales as he sang the modern blues on "Stateside." His skin tapping was throbbing with thunder despite the small four-piece set that gave birth to it.

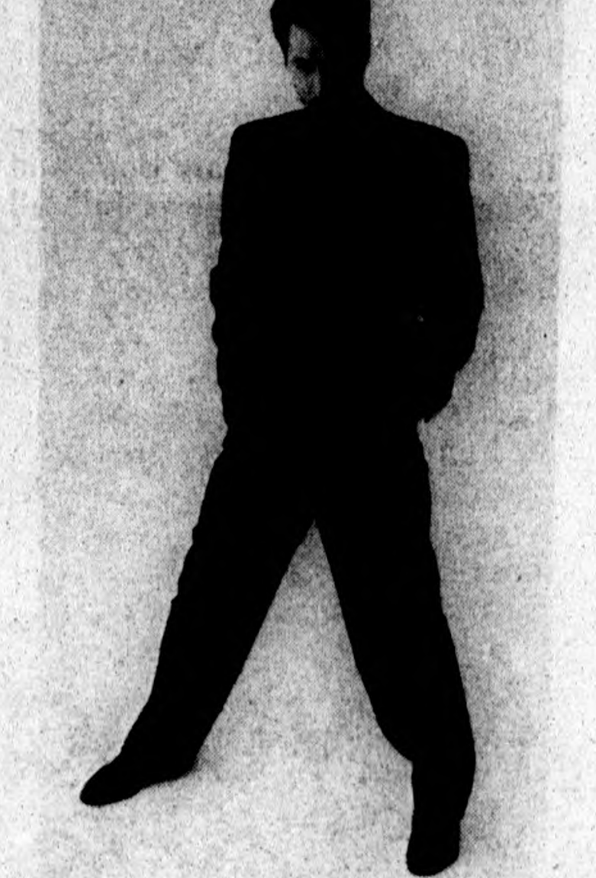
TIN
machine

The reserved Gabrels spoke strictly through his fingers, playing with fierce fury on several jams while Tony Sales crooned "Better Go Now." But there was one performance that shined just as bright. From shadow casting to flood lights to performing the entire opening song in silhouettes, the state of the art lighting created a drama about each song as Bowie belted out in anger, fear and sadness.

Bowie's stage presence could not be caged. His antics and energetic bounce surpassed that of his sludgy recent solo efforts. He looked so vibrant and strong he could have transformed into Ziggy Stardust right there. Instead, he teased the audience with quips like, "Be careful about what you wish for … you just might get it!" Here he led the crowd to believe that by some miracle of God some old Bowie favorites would pop up on the set list. However, these hopes were short-lived as he performed "You Don't Know Me," a new single, "Baby Universal" and closed the set with a medley of "Heaven's in Here"/"April in Paris."

Encores were infested with improvisational jams as well as two subdued left-field cuts "I'm Sorry" by Hunt and "You Belong to Rock-n-Roll" by Bowie.

Even so, their tight performance seemed to go over the heads of the audience and was a bit unappreciated. Some say Tin Machine is the best thing Bowie's done since Scary Monsters, while others think he is biding time. The fact remains that Bowie is and always has been ahead of his time. Perhaps his Machine is too fine tuned and well-oiled for the 1991 public.



The Down plays classics with eccentric twist

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

"Has Jimmy showed up?" questions keyboardist/voicalist Michael Giacchino. "Hendrix, Jimmy Hendrix, he said he was gonna show up and play tonight!" This is exactly what you get with 2 Houses Down, an eight-piece house band with a sense of humor and more to offer then the average bar band. Their wall of sound hit Josh and Molly's just outside of Philly in Edgewater Park, N.J. Nov. 15 and 16.

The standard "Shout"/ "Twist and Shout"/ "Satisfaction" type bands are tired. This band, affectionately known as "the Down," serves up classics, new hits, oddities and originals as well.

The lineup of dual keyboards provided by Giacchino and David May, guitarist Glenn Johnson and Dave Dougherty, back vocalist Debbie Schuster, Jill Zelnick and Angela Cavallero, and drummer Ron Conti. Conti was originally from the band Love Special Delivery (LSD) who opened for the Who in the late '60's.

The song listing is rather eccentric. While classics such as "Wild Thing," "Honky Tonk Women" and "Johnnie B. Goode" are still adhered to, new radio tunes such as "Shiny Happy People" and "Love Shack" arise with sheer energy and emotion. In fact, the Down's version of the Jesus Jones' progressive pop hit "Right Here, Right Now" is right on target.

2 Houses Down serves up classics, oddities, new hits and originals as well.

Along with this wide array of songs, the Down will perform those AOR hits that you will only hear in your dorm room. Billy Joel's "You May Be Right," Stevie Ray Vaughan's "Tightrope" and Clash's "Should I Stay or Should I Go?" keep the audience enthralled while "Crocodile Rock" and "Surfin' U.S.A." fills the dance floor.

Originals such as "Hawaiian Blues" "Mary Alice" and "Top of the World" kept the momentum going as well as a look into the Down's promising future. They are currently seeking gigs in the Villanova community, so if you see a group of crazy 20-year-olds being led by a maniac Hawaiian guy in a flowered shirt do not be alarmed. It's just the Down.

Poison & Rÿche tear it up

By DAVID J. CRIBLEZ
Senior Reporter

ROCK QUARRY

"Ladies and Gentlemen, I give you the glam, the slam, the rock-n-roll … P-P-P-P-POISON!" shouts an over-exasperated announcer as the new double-disc live Poison LP, Swallow This Live, kicks off.

As high-glossed as it may sound, Swallow works from the first chord. Bret Michaels, C.C. Deville, Bobby Dall and Rikki Rocket do not know step one about real rock-n-roll. However, there is one thing they do know about and that is cartoon rock. Much like the announcer forewarned the listener at the beginning, their 'glam-slam' mentality is their draw.

Swallow is almost a throwback to the '70s with a '90s twist. Running along the lines of Kiss Alive I & II, Poison gives the fans what they want: a double-live album packed with hits after hits, a booklet filled with color pictures and four new studio tracks to keep its spot on the charts nice and warm.

The set list is an exact replica of their live show. Hits "Talk Dirty To Me," "Every Rose Has Its Thorn," "Unskinny Bop" and "Something To Believe In" all apear in fine form. The feel of the live jolt feeds more energy to the band.

The addition of a drum solo and a guitar solo add to the concert authenticity but go off-track from the focus of the band which, after all, is ear candy. Perhaps these tangents should have been replaced by missing tracks such as live staples tour and album title track, "Flesh and Blood" and its jumping-jack cover of Kiss' "Rock-n-Roll All Nite."

Believe it or not, very few newer metal bands follow this once popularized format. The question is, is Poison tying its loose strings in order to call it quits? The band has been on ice since the backstage fistfights between Michaels and Deville.

Although, going by its new studio tracks, Poison appears to be simply on fire. "So Tell Me Why" and "Only Time Will Tell" show the more cultivated melody Poison nearly perfected on its last studio LP, Flesh and Blood. Poison is not a sincere group but a fruitless fun gang nonetheless. Its music is not to be analyzed but to be enjoyed. Honesty is what Poison delivers. They know they are superficial and do not claim to be monumental songwriters. Now if somebody could wake up Jon Bon Jovi …

"I remember now … I remember how it started. I can't remember yesterday, I just remember doing what they told me," cries a helpless drug addicted victim. "Welcome to Operation: Mindcrime," says lead singer Geoff Tate. May the seduction begin … as Operation Live Crime, a box set of a CD and accompanying video goes under its way.

Queensryche has had a phenomenal year despite the dark recession-influenced cloud that hovered above the music industry. Operation: Mindcrime was originally released in its studio form in 1988. With the success of its last LP, Empire, and hit single "Silent Lucidity," Queensryche burned a hole through the metal scene like a Molotov cocktail. This enabled them to headline arenas for the performance of its rock-concept epic Mindcrime in its entirety.

Dealing with the theme of drugs, brainwashing, murder and dictatorship Mindcrime tells a disturbing yet intriguing story of a manipulated young man. Songs "Revolution Calling," "The Needle Lies," "Breaking the Silence" and "Eyes of a Stranger" fill the exquisite soundtrack that easily ranks among some of the best metal of recent time due to the poetic lyrics and down to the screaming howl of Chris DeGarmo and Michael Wilton's guitars.

The video, filmed in black-and-white to preserve the dramatic tone, shows both the band, the crowd and screened sequences all at once. Each moment is riveting. A booklet with lyrics and numerous pictures is included to help follow the story. Quality metal for your brain, not your head.

SPECIAL REPORT*: Michael Jackson's latest "short film" video "Black or White," accompanying his first single of the same name off his upcoming LP, Dangerous, seems to have a majority of the world guessing at Jackson's statement behind the video. The first part of the film features actors Macauly Culkin ("Home Alone") and George Wendt ("Cheers"). This segment portrays Culkin as a child blaring rock music in order to release parental pressures put upon him. This leads to the musical segment featuring Jackson along with many people of different races and color. Jackson dances with aborigines, Indians and Jamaicans only to end up at the top of the Statue of Liberty symbolizing true freedom.

However, the camera is set back exposing the viewer to the false formulated Hollywood set as well as the unimportant chaos that goes along with it. Through newly discovered computer digital special effects (used in "Terminator 2"), Jackson transforms into a panther and stalks off into the night. Jackson, as the panther, then transports back to his human form and breaks into a sequence of dance steps from his signature style to tap. This is where the video takes a left turn.

Jackson finds that his dancing is not enough of a release for him, he begins to become violent by smashing windows and destroying an old car with a crow-bar, screaming at the top of his lungs in the meantime. What Jackson seems to be getting across is that after making the video of "Black or White" about racial equality, the hard cold truth of racism still remains a reality.

Jackson, after working out his frustrations, transforms back into the panther and waltzes away. His transference suggests his disgust of the current human race. He is ashamed and does not want to be part of it and escapes in an animalistic form.

Vinnie Moore rocks hard

as an artist, apart from those guys?

MOORE: "I basically think my style is more heavy and more rock oriented with the music in general."

V: Is writing an instrumental album a different mind set then going in and doing a regular album with lyrics? Is it pretty much a song without lyrics or would you call it more than that?

MOORE: "I've never done a vocal record, so I don't know what the differences are. I think the guitar, being the main instrument, is like a voice that speaks. It's a little harder than a vocal song cause you only have notes and you must put a lot of expression in there to get a message across to people."

V: How would you go about writing these pieces? Do they work themselves out through jam sessions?

MOORE: "On the new record, everything kind of came to me. I'd sit around and just pick at the guitar and something would come about. I wanted to make the record sound really rough on the edges. We recorded the drums and bass live in the studio."

V: There is also a lot of melody underlying each song on Meltdown. Do you implement that on purpose?

MOORE: "It's important to have melody. Especially on an instrumental record 'cause it's hard for people to absorb the stuff when your flying around note after note. You need some sort of structure to hold onto."

V: Were you in a band when you first started playing?

MOORE: "I played in a cover band and then I bought a four-track recorder. I began to lay down my stuff on tape, different ideas and what not. It naturally developed into what I do now. It wasn't really a conscious decision, it simply happened."

V: How did you find the experience of playing with Alice Cooper this summer?

MOORE: "It was great. I had a lot of fun. It was a great experience playing really big venues and arenas. Although, I prefer to headline by myself at smaller clubs. But, Alice was cool. He allotted time for me to solo throughout the show. Plus, it helped me get recognized as a rock figure rather than just a 'guitar guy.' "

V: What is your long-term goal, to find a perfectly suited band or continue soloing?

MOORE: "Eventually I want to get a vocalist in the band and make a vocal record and experiment with that route. I can always do instrumental stuff but, I'd like to explore a bit more."

RTZ plays back-to-basics rock at Cabaret

By DAVID A. MARCONE
Staff Reporter

Picture a couple of members from the late '70s rock group Boston that recruit a guy who was voted Boston's (the city) best bassist for four years running, a drummer who used to play with Peter Wolf of J. Geils Band fame and a keyboardist who plays a mean harmonica. What do you get? No, not Boston II or Boston 1991. You get RTZ, a band which knows how to perform live and proved it Nov. 12 at the Chestnut Cabaret.

Opening with debut album title track, "Return To Zero," the band demonstrated its back-to-basics, no-frills philosophy of rock-n-roll. Lead singer Brad Delp shone throughout the night. His vocals were outstanding, particularly on "This Is My Life." Barry Goudreau proved that he was not just "that other Boston guitarist" (besides Tom Scholz) and contributed a couple of songs to the set list from his solo album and his former band, Orion Hunter.

> Overall, RTZ came off better live than it did on the album.

Once bassist Tim Archibald started playing a solo, with a little help from the drums courtesy of Dave Stefanelli, RTZ kicked into "Devil To Pay." Soon, the sounds of a harmonica, supplied by keyboardist Brian Maes, began the slow "All You've Got." The band was well-rehearsed and tight, with two background singers filling out Delp's vocals. Delp was having a particularly good time, playing guitar for some songs as well as talking to the audience. Overall, RTZ came off better live than it did on the album.

The question on everybody's mind, though, was whether or not RTZ would play any old Boston tunes. "We'd like to thank everyone for coming here tonight by playing a couple of songs from a band Barry and I used to be in a few years ago," was Delp's answer. The crowd roared.

As the band played Boston's "Let Me Take You Home Tonight," the audience sang, swayed and experienced deja vu.

Delp then ripped into the opening guitar of "Long Time," and RTZ proved it could play the old as well as the new. Delp, laid back the entire night, suddenly remembered he was a rock-n-roll guitarist and posed his guitarist poses, switching back and forth between electric and acoustic guitars. Brad ran into the audience, shaking hands along the way. "It's been a long time," Delp sang. Truer words were never echoed.

The band left, but not for long. RTZ kept the feeling going with its own "Livin' For The Rock 'n' Roll" and a brand new song as one of its encores. By the end, RTZ displayed how to put on a good show with music alone.

The opening act, Echolyn, was very good, even if it borrowed more than a few tricks from Yes. Songs ranged anywhere from five to 10 minutes, and the lead singer was trying to be very theater-like in his movements. Regardless, Echolyn has the makings of a good band.

Fresh talent fills Cabaret stage

Woody, the naive "Cheers" barman, has turned bluesman and brings his act to the Cabaret. Manly Moondog and the Three Kool Kats features Woody Harrelson as lead vocalist with a quality act that may surprise.

While acting propelled Harrelson to relative stardom, it is playing music that fulfills a lifelong dream. His self-described band "blends rockabilly, socially conscientious folk songs and funky rhythm and blues into a rowdy party band." The three-man horn section combines with the harmony vocals of the Kool Kats to give new life to '60s and '70s tunes. The sound is simple, straight-forward and has a pulsating dance beat.

Harrelson has been writing songs since he was 11 years old. Music, he claims, has always been his passion, but only now can be afford to juggle an aspiring acting career with his old love, rock-n-roll. His musical influences include Paul Simon, Van Morrison and Ricki Lee Jones and their styles dominate his sound.

Harrelson is serious about his new career. "I'm going headfirst into music, as hard as I can," he said. The band itself has been together for over a year, and is poised to make and impact on the club music scene. Manly Moondog and the Three Kool Kats appear at the Chestnut Cabaret Nov. 26.

That sultry queen of hard rock, Lita Ford, is back with a vengeance. Her powerful presence fills all types of music venues and captivates audiences. Dangerous Curves, her latest release, rips and roars its way through a powerful set of songs. Yet through her tough metal image, she "maintains a delicate balance of masculine and feminine energies — raw aggression tempered with decidedly female sensibilities."

Her sound mixes softer ballads with the blasting rock sound that has earned her a place among rock's top female performers. Such songs as "Playin' With Fire" contrast with the stinging "Black Widow" and are combined in "Bad Love." Her performing style is reckless and uninhibited, much like the edged toughness in her music.

Ford began her career with the all-female punk band, The Runaways, in 1970. After five successful years, she launched a solo career peaking with the release of Lita in 1986, which went platinum. Many of metal's top acts, such as Ozzy Osbourne and Alice Cooper, have performed with Ford. She has received numerous awards for her guitar performance, most notably her induction in Circus magazine's hall of fame. Hit Parader, Guitar Player and Metal Edge magazines have also recognized her talent. Now in her third decade as a rocker, Ford still knows how to kick up a storm. See her live at the Chestnut Cabaret tonight.

The Horse Flies, a progressive band which has vast touring experience but a small following will be performing locally. Its unique sound, in the tradition of the Violent Femmes and Camper Van Beethoven, has been critically praised and often described as "surreal as a David Lynch movie."

The Flies' live performances received outstanding reviews when it opened for 10,000 Maniacs on its "Blind Man's Zoo" tour. The band has also made solo appearances at The Ritz and CBGB's in New York, L.A.'s China Club and at the World Philadelphia Folk Festival.

The Horse Flies will perform at the 23 East Cabaret on Nov. 23.

Women's Big East Preview

By ED WASIELEWSKI
Assistant Sports Editor

Coach Geno Auriemma has quietly built Connecticut into a budding national powerhouse. Even with the loss of All-American Kerry Bascom, the Huskies will be looking to claim their fourth consecutive Big East title and a return trip to the NCAA Tournament.

Coming off a 29-5 season, the Huskies are led by three-point bomber Wendy Davis, point guard Debbie Baer and spiritual leader Meghan Pattyson. Davis, an All-American candidate, averaged 13.2 ppg. last season and leads a strong UConn perimeter attack. Inside, the Huskies will turn to Pattyson (8.9 ppg., 5.4 rpg.), junior Kathy Ferrier and sophomore Heidi Law. But the major weapon will be 6-foot-4-inch freshman Rebecca Lobo, the nation's top prep prospect last season. Exit Bascom, enter Lobo. Expect UConn to ascend to greater heights.

The St. John's Express is on the move. Last season's Big East Coach of the Year, Joe Mullaney, returns four starters including ace forwards Cozette Ballentine and Tina Ogden. The 6-foot Ballentine was among conference leaders in scoring with a 22.4 ppg. clip while snagging 8.8 rpg. Ogden, the other starting forward, contributed 13.2 ppg. and 5.9 rpg.

The loss of point guard Margaret McKeon (12.8 ppg., 8.8 apg.) hurts St. John's. But, Mullaney scowled the country and inked Junior College All-American Joyce Bell and standout Marcia Price. If the supporting cast can keep the pressure off the "dynamic duo," the Express has all the tools to advance deep into the NCAA tournament.

With everyone finally healthy and ready to play, Seton Hall coach Phyllis Mangina must blend all the individual talent if the Pirates hope to improve on last season's 18-11 mark. The leading returning scorer is Kelley Moore, SHU's dominant center. Moore (15.0 ppg., 9.9 rpg.) will team with forward Ruth Lovelace, a former Juco All-American who redshirted the past two years, to give the Pirates a potent frontline.

In the backcourt, the key loss is Kris Durham who led the team in scoring, assists and minutes played last season. To compensate, Mangina needs senior guards Veronica Sims (11.2 ppg.) and Tonya Alleyne, who returns after missing last season with an injury, to step up to the challenge.

Coach Kirk Bruce and his Pittsburgh Panthers must toughen up this season. Long gone are all-conference performer Lorri Johnson and center Connie Hurt. These two Panthers combined for over 34 points, 14 rebounds and 2.5 blocks per game last season. In their places, 1991 rookie of the year Jonna Huemrich and an outstanding triumvirate of guards will have to improve their games if Pitt expects to improve.

Leading the charge, Huemrich (10.0 ppg., 6.7 rpg.) is the foundation for the Panthers, but will receive assistance from 6-footer Turia Ransom. In the backcourt, Bruce depends on juniors Maureen McConnell (7.8 ppg., 4.0 apg.) and Lisa Fessler along with sophomore Erin Maloy. Without a true center, Pitt will rely on a quicker tempo to utilize its talented backcourt.

Beware Big East, Georgetown is primed for success. With last season's starting lineup intact and four incoming freshmen, the Hoyas have the guns to finally challenge the league's elite teams like UConn and St. John's.

Coach Pat Knapp will look to all-around talent Kris Witfill (22.6 ppg.) and seniors Karen Sheehan, Peggi Jewell and Tricia Corace to take the G'Town program to unchartered waters. With rebounding leader Leni Wilson rounding out the starting five, Knapp has the leadership, scoring and depth needed to make a run at the upper division. This could be the breakthrough year for Hoya basketball.

Where would Providence be without Tracy Lis? The 5-foot-9-inch forward, a first-team All-Big East selection last season, averaged 23.7 points and 6.9 rebounds per game and is the building block for the Lady Friars. Behind Lis, the probable frontline starters are sophomores Jennifer Mead and Lucie Fontanella. Senior guard Ann Marie Kennedy leads a corps of inexperienced players who must replace All-Big East star Shanya Evans, the class point guard who orchestrated the high octane PC attack for four years.

The bottom line, however, remains unchanged. The Lady Friars can only go as far as Lis will take them.

The Villanova Wildcats return six contributing members from last season's 12-17 team. Despite the loss of point guard Sandy Litkenhaus and center Renee Groft, the Cats feature a big, talented frontline. Forwards Justine Chaverini (9.4 ppg.) and Nikki Benedix (12.1 ppg.) led the Cats in scoring a year ago. Roseary Margarity and Karen Connell combined for 53 blocked shots last season and provide Coach Harry Perretta with additional frontcourt talent.

The big question for the Cats will be at the point guard position where transfer Trish McDonough and freshman Michele Thornton will compete for the starting role. Can 'Nova solve its backcourt problems? If not, Wildcat fans are in for a long season.

The Big East Conference welcomes its newest member, Miami. With all five starters back from a 20-10 team, the Hurricanes are ready to make a splash in their new league. Behind leading scorers Jeannine Hebert and Vicki Plowden, the 'Canes have a veteran point guard and a proven rebounder in the middle.

Miami needs forwards Frances Savage and Ronnie McGarry to emerge as solid prime-time performers in order to be competitive in the tough Big East. Combined with the signings of two recruits, the 'Canes will surprise a few teams around the league.

Boston College boasts one of the conference's best young backcourts. And the Eagles need their guards to carry them this season. Junior Sara Behn, the Big East's leading scorer last season, hopes to build on her 23.9 ppg. average while sophomore Kerry Curran continues to develop into a fine point guard. Backup Jennifer Leddy provides added depth in the backcourt.

Justine Chaverini

Last season, Syracuse finished in the Big East cellar with a 3-13 record. This year, coach Barbara Jacobs needs to take full advantage of 6-foot-5-inch Holly Oslander (17.4 ppg., 8.1 rpg.) in order for the Orange to avoid another last-place finish.

Guards Erin Kenneally, Karen Zajick and Charisse Crouse must take pressure off Oslander. If not, opposing defenses will continue to collapse on the SU center and the Orange will once again stumble through a losing season.

VILLANOVA AT FORDHAM
Tomorrow at 1 p.m.
TV: None, Radio: WCZN-AM (1590)
Records: 'Nova 9-1, Fordham 2-7

The Yankee Conference co-champions head into the Bronx this weekend to battle an overmatched Fordham squad in a non-conference matchup. The 2-7 Rams, however, are coming off a 24-19 loss to No. 3-ranked and unbeaten Holy Cross in Limerick, Ireland in a game where Fordham quarterback Gary Brennan was 22 of 49 for 251 yards passing.

For Villanova, this game is not meaningless. The Cats need a victory to secure a playoff berth. A loss would jeopardize a bid in the playoffs and eliminate their hopes for a high seed.

The Rams gave Bucknell its only win of the season thus far but lost to a 10-0 Holy Cross squad by just five points. Which team will show up tomorrow?

The Cats totally destroyed that same Bucknell team 40-0 and have not lost to Fordham since 1920. Other then a loss at Delaware, this 'Nova team has arguably proven itself as the greatest football team in school history by dominating its opponents. The Yankee co-champs have their sights set on advancing through the playoffs and the first roadblock is Fordham.

Fordham played way above its head against Holy Cross. That is not an accurate portrayal of this team. It is highly unlikely that the Rams will be able to maintain that same intensity against the Cats. They are a team that has many holes, particularly on the defensive side of the ball. Not counting their 14-7 win over Harvard, the Ram defense has given up an average of 27.6 points per game. They will be facing a 'Nova offense that puts up an average of 38.3 points per game. The Cats offense, even without running back Pat Kennedy, should have a field day.

The 'Nova defense is playing outstanding football. They are No. 2 in total defense in Division I-AA and No. 3 in scoring defense. They will be matched against a Fordham offense that has only exceeded 20 points once this season, a 50-30 loss to Hofstra.

The Cats are playing every game as if it is a playoff game. The Fordham game should be no different. This is 'Nova's final tuneup before the playoffs and it hopes to go into the playoffs on a high note. However, it is important to avoid injuries so do not be surprised if coach Andy Talley rests his starters in the second half. The game should be well in hand by then.

Prediction: Villanova 46, Fordham 9

Cats ice Iona

By JOHN OGLE
Staff Reporter

The Wildcats ice hockey team upset ECAC South Conference rival Iona College for the first time in Villanova history Nov. 17.

Many have picked Iona to win the ECAC South this year. However, John Demers recorded a hat trick, pushing the Icecats to a 6-4 win and raising his team-leading goal total to seven. Along with Demers, freshmen Dennis Mastriano, Ryan Sattenfield and Bill Palisak scored goals. Seniors Hugh Maginnis and Mark Guertin and junior captain Ty Carmichael each notched two assists in the game.

'Nova took the lead during the second period after falling behind 3-2 in the first period. Junior goaltender John Gallegro shut down the Gaels during the period to provide momentum for 'Nova going into the final period. When the match ended, Gallegro had saved 31 of 35 shots and added a rare goalie assist.

Villanova's record is now 2-3-0 in the ECAC South and 2-5-0 overall.

The Icecats have two away games in the upcoming week. They play at Fairfield University 8 p.m. tomorrow and at the United States Military Academy 7:30 p.m. Nov. 26.

WXVU heads to Houston

By ANDY FITZPATRICK
Sports Editor

As most people know, the Cats kick off the 1991-92 basketball season tomorrow night at Houston. But did you know that the only way to follow the game is to listen to it on the radio, specifically 'Nova's own WXVU (89.1 FM)?

That is right. The game will not be televised so WXVU is sending basketball announcers Ryan Fannon and Patrick Meiler to Houston to provide live coverage, starting at 8:30 p.m.

"Our sports department is trying to be as professional as we possibly can," said Fannon, a junior who is the station's sports director. "We have covered all the football home games and most of the road games and the feedback has been really good."

This is the station's first year on the FM dial and it broadcasts on Tuesday, Thursdays, Saturdays and partially on Sundays live from its studios located on the second floor of Dougherty Hall.

The hierarchy at WXVU includes Mike Howe, general manager; David Burger, program director; and Sherry Bower, faculty advisor.

But the station will not only cover just football and basketball, according to Fannon, who handles the play-by-play responsibilities.

"The sports department will give continued updates on all Villanova sports. I want to make that very clear. Plus Thursday nights between 5:30 and 6:30 p.m., we will host a sports call-in show that will encompass both 'Nova and the world of sports. The phone number is 645-7202," said Fannon.

Fannon, Meiler and also Matt Tripodi are tentatively planning on broadcasting 15 to 19 basketball games, including the Big East Tournament and the NCAA Tournament. The football broadcasting team includes Fannon, Tripodi and Brian Goebel.

"I see this as two years of opportunity in broadcasting 'Nova basketball," said Meiler, a junior who will act as the color commentator.

Mahon prepares for NCAA's

By LARRY LANZA
Staff Reporter

Seeking to end a pair of streaks at this year's Intercollegiate Association of Amatuer Athletes of America (IC4A) Cross Country Championship, the Villanova men succeeded in one attempt but fell short in the other.

The 11-year absence of a Villanovan from the IC4A victory stand ended Nov. 16 at Lehigh University when junior Terrence Mahon captured the individual championship, but the Wildcats fell short in their bid to end a seven-year team absence from the NCAA Championship.

Nevertheless, 'Nova's eighth place IC4A finish and sixth place finish in NCAA Region 2 capped V.U.'s best season since 1983.

For Mahon, however, the season continues. The 1991 IC4A and Big East individual champion will now take his five-meet winning streak into Tucson for the NCAA Division I Cross Country Championship Nov. 25. It will be the third appearance in the NCAA final for Mahon, a two-time cross country All-America.

"Terrence is a man you have to love," said Head Coach Marty Stern. "He is one of the most sensitive, tough men I have seen. One minute he is caring for one of his young teammates and the next he is blowing away the IC4A field in true Villanova fashion. He must be proud, because I am certainly honored to be his coach."

On the long, uphill start, Mahon had to fight through early traffic as he surged to the front of the 256-man field. Further behind Mahon, Wildcat freshman Dave Hartman and Louie Quintana joined with sophomore Mike Going and senior Tim Pollis in working their way to the front part of the field. They were followed by juniors Jim Meszaros and Chris McDermott.

As Hartman and Going continued to build strong races, Quintana had to fight his way through stomach problems. Meanwhile, Mahon ran with the lead pack through the halfway mark of the 10 kilometer (6.2 miles) course.

These men will someday remember that they were the beginning of the return to the glory days.

Head Coach Marty Stern

At four-and-a-half miles, Mahon pulled rank and moved out ahead of the leaders. Having concentrated all season on working the downhills, Mahon found the long downward slope at the five-mile mark at just the right time. Building his lead into the final mile, Mahon dug in to hold off Steve Swift of William and Mary and won the title by three seconds in 30:17.

Prior to Mahon's finish, the last Villanova to take the IC4A title was Olympian and world and American track record holder Sydney Maree, who captured the crown in 1978 and '79.

Three seconds behind Swift, Big East runner-up Steve Holman of Georgetown took third, followed by Rick Wemple of Yale and Irishman Packy Mulvaney of Iona.

Just over a minute behind Mahon, Hartman crossed as V.U.'s second man, 28th overall. Going concluded his fight through the last mile by finishing 55th in 31:48, while Quintana finished his fight through the stomach problems eight seconds back in 65th.

Pollis capped the team scoring with a 98th place finish in 32:23, while Meszaros crossed at 139th in 33:07 and McDermott finished 177th in 33:40.

Villanova's final team score of 173 put the Cats three places away from the top 3 finish in NCAA Region 2 that is necessary to qualify for the NCAA Championship as a team.

Penn St., who Villanova had beaten a month earlier on the same course, was the sound winner of the region, followed by Georgetown, Bucknell, Iona, William and Mary, and then 'Nova.

In the same race, Providence took the Region 1 title as well as the overall IC4A championship. Heading into the NCAA final, the Friars have an outside chance at contending for the national title against top-ranked defending champion Arkansas, Iowa St., and Oregon.

As for Villanova, Stern was pleased with the team's overall performance.

"Everyone ran their hearts out. I thought Hartman and Going ran exceptional races," said Stern. "We didn't make it to NCAA's, but the men and I know that we are nearing a new level for Villanova cross country, and it's only a matter of time before we are back up top at the national level. These men will someday remember that they were the beginning of the return to the glory days."

ATHLETE OF THE WEEK

Vicky Dispenza

This week's Villanovan Athlete of the Week is volleyball setter Vicky Dispenza. The junior co-captain was named MVP of the Asics Autumn Classic last weekend. Dispenza's consistent play is a major reason for the Cats impressive 30-5 record. Her past honors include being selected as the Big East Conference Volleyball Player of the Week as well as several other all-tournament and MVP laurels.

Volleyball

Nov. 10.

"We're taking care of the little details," said Barkley of the team's preparation for the competition. "I expect to get to the finals. Our goal is to win the finals. I expect to be on the endline when they play the national anthem at the finals and then play the best match of our season."

Should the Cats claim the championship, they would secure an automatic bid to the NCAA Tournament. If they falter, they must hope for an at-large invitation to participate in the competition. This is far from guaranteed, but it is not an impossibility. The Cats, though, will try to leave nothing in doubt by winning the Big East Championship.

VILLANOVA AT HOUSTON
Saturday, November 23, 1991, 9 p.m. EST
Hofheinz Pavillion
TV: NONE, RADIO: WXVU 89.1 FM, Pregame 8:30 p.m.

The men's basketball team opens its season with a tough non-conference matchup at the University of Houston. Coach Rollie Massimino continues his tradition of bringing a senior back to his hometown to play a game. The Wildcat of reference is point guard Chris Walker.

The Houston Cougars are most remembered for their dominance in the early '80s. Led by Hakeem Olajuwon, the Cougars advanced in the NCAA tournament to three-straight Final Four appearances. But in the seven post-Olajuwon years, Houston has advanced to the NCAA's only twice. In 1990-91, Houston finished 10-6 in the Southwest Conference but lost in the opening round of the conference tournament. That loss cost Coach Pat Foster and his squad an NCAA bid. The final record of 18-10 was not enough because of a weak schedule.

The 1991-92 University of Houston team will feature a balanced blend of veterans and newcomers. Houston returns three starters and a redshirt all-conference starter. The newcomers are from both junior college and high school. Starting at point guard for Houston will be senior Derrick Daniels. He has started 94 consecutive games at the point and led the conference in assists (6.3) last season. The two-guard spot is up for grabs. The likely starter will be Juco transfer David Diaz. He will be pushed by freshman Lloyd Wiles.

The small forward slot will be occupied by junior Derrick Smith. He averaged 12 ppg. and 5 rpg. while shooting 55 percent from the floor. Joining Smith at power forward will be senior leader Craig Upchurch. He redshirted last year with a ruptured disc in his lower back, but earned all conference honors in 1988-89 and 1989-90. The pivot will be occupied by another junior college transfer, Charles Outlaw, a 6-foot-8-inch banger who averaged 13 ppg., 11 rpg. and shot 66 percent from the floor last season.

Villanova will look to slow the game down by using match-up zones and occasional half-court pressure. Do not be surprised to see the Wildcats on the break when the opportunity arises, though. But in 1990-91, when Villanova's opponents scored 70 or more points, the Wildcats were 7-13. So look for Massimino to try to slow down Houston.

Experience and home-court advantage are two important dimensions of the Villanova-Houston game. Villanova returns all five starters from a 17-15 NCAA tournament team last year. Three key reserves also return. Senior captains Marc Dowdell, Chris Walker, and Greg Woodard all have a solid grasp of the system in this early stage of the regular season. The Wildcats have the advantage in this department over a Houston team that will need some time to blend two Juco starters and other newcomers with the returning starters. Home court advantage also will play a factor. Since 1976, the Cougars are a whopping 90-7 in non-conference games at home. In the past two seasons, Houston is a combined 25-2 at home. Of course, the caliber of opponents is not that of Big East proportions. The two most impressive wins were both against the University of Texas. But stats do not lie. No doubt, Villanova-Houston will be an early season battle.

For Villanova to establish an impressive season-opening performance, the Wildcats must: a) control the tempo of the game by handling Houston's pressure defenses, b) establish James Bryson or Anthony Pelle in the post, since Houston's tallest player is only 6-foot-9-inches, and c) stress ball movement and penetration on the offensive end of the court.

Swimmers pool talent

The Villanova swimming team kicked off another year as it dove right into its competition last week.

"I definitely believe that this year's team is better than last year's. On paper, with the freshman we have coming in, this is a much better team," said Coach Chuck Horton, who begins his second season.

The team is comprised of thirteen returnees and a whopping 12 newcomers. With a large crop of seniors, Horton is looking for a leader to step up and lead the team in the right direction. The man to fill this spot may be Jerry O'Mara, who placed third in the 100 yard backstroke, fourth in the 50 yard freestyle, and fifth in the 100 yard free as well as swimming the anchor leg of two Big East Champion relays in last season's Big East meet. Other seniors who will be the mainstays on the team are Mike Bagshaw, Dave Mehok and Russ Stockman.

This is definitely the best team we've ever had.

Junior Eddie Paradise, who led the team in breaststroke while making his way to the Big East runner-up in the 100 yard breast, and Chris Desmarais, a two-time Big East individual champ, are also expected to have large impacts on the team. The freshman class of Pat Donahue, Rob Drumm, Todd Cimicata, Mike Holden and Ryan Joseph will contribute in its first year.

The women's swimming team is coming off its best season ever. "This is definitely the best team we've ever had," said Horton. "We are hoping to crack the Top 20 at the NCAA's. Everyone is excited about this season."

In last year's Big East Championships, 'Nova finished second after beating champ Pitt by 98 points in swimming events, but lost the title after being shut out in diving 120-0. Also, only one senior was lost from last year's team.

Returning this year for the women's team are Lisa Flood and Mary Dowling, both of whom qualified for the NCAA's.

Sarah Dykstra and Eileen Consadine look to leave their marks on the sprint events. The distance events will be anchored by Dowling and Christy Bridgewater.

"If we can get people to swim well together on the same day, we should be able to qualify relays for nationals, and improve on last year's finish," Horton said. "That's the step the program is looking to make right now."

'Nova takes win

The Cats went on a 20-0 run early in the second half and Greg Woodard chipped in with 17 points to lead the basketball team past the Canadian Nationals 65-57 Nov. 14 in 'Nova's last tuneup before the regular season begins tomorrow at Houston.

'Nova got off to a horrendous start, falling behind 11-0 and failing to light up the scoreboard until over five minutes had elapsed in the game. The first half was a sloppily-played affair in which the Cats shot just 29 percent. It was characterized by bodies flying everywhere and a record number of jump balls. But it was exactly what you would expect of an exhibition game, according to coach Rollie Massimino.

"These games are made to iron out some kinks," said coach Massimino. "We had plenty of shots but the ball just didn't go in."

The team picked up the pace in the second half when the squad went from being down 37-24 to leading 44-37. A 20-0 burst was keyed by the defense as the Cats came out in the second half in a half-court man defense that put pressure on the ball. "Defense makes up for a lot of sins," Massimino said.

The Canadian Nationals, who are touring Big East arenas, came out aggressively and were looking to include 'Nova on a winning list that includes Providence. The team played a sagging zone that created havoc for the Cats in the first half. The only way to beat a zone like that is to hit from the outside and the Cats were unable to down the open shots and found themselves trailing at halftime 32-20.

In the second half, 'Nova adjusted to the style of play and created open shots from its defense. The 20-0 run, however, did not finish the Canadians. It was not until Arron Bain drained a three-pointer with just under three minutes left that the victory was secured.

Women advance

Carol Haux, Nova controlled the meet with four of the top 10 finishers and five of the top 15. In fact, if a team of the best runners from the meet competed against 'Nova, the Cats still would have claimed the title.

Lynch, a qualifier for the U.S. Olympic Trials along with Goddard and Zajac, finished nine seconds behind O'Sullivan and took third with a time of 16:09. Zajac and Goddard rounded out 'Nova's top 10 finishes with fourth (16:16) and ninth (16:30), respectively.

"Lynch and Goddard have never lost a meet here," Stern said. "They are two of the great runners in America."

"Zajac continues to run as well as she ever has. She has overcome the sophomore jinx after having the best season of any freshman in the country. The sophomore jinx usually occurs because athletes are content. But Carole has matured and is relaxed and running her best."

Fifth-year senior Haux rounded out the scoring for 'Nova with a 13th place finish (16:43) while Christine Gentile and Michelle Torelli placed 18th and 28th respectively. Stern pointed to Gentile's improvement throughout the year.

"At this stage, Christine's our most improved runner from last year," Stern said. "She's gone from being an alternate to one of our top seven runners and she just continues to progress."

After such an impressive showing to garner an NCAA appearance, fear of overconfidence might concern many coaches. But considering the position 'Nova has been in all season as the No. 1 team in the nation and the squad expected to win the title, Stern is not concerned with outside distractions and believes the Cats will maintain their grip on the championship if they remain focused.

"I always tell the kids not to break their routine," Stern said. "Just stay organized. You can't get caught up in the hype of the NCAA's and lose concentration. So long as they keep doing what they've been doing both on the track and in the classroom, we'll be fine."

Week In Review

By BOB TRAVISANO

Last week was the most important week in college football, deciding a number of questions. Besides Miami's taking over of the No. 1 position in Division 1-A, there was also a lot of action in Division 1-AA. Villanova assured itself of a share in the conference title with Delaware, with its win last Saturday against UMass.

Maine 49, Towson State 34

Two pickoffs by Lance Boston and Bill Curry off quarterback Dan Crowley resulted in first-quarter touchdowns as Maine started an early scoring spree.

Boston University 29, UConn 26

These two teams fought into double overtime until BU's Jay Hillman rambled in from three yards out to score. Hillman had 230 rushing yards on the day. UConn's Nick Sosik booted a field goal to start the second overtime, but unfortunately for the Huskies, BU scored a touchdown on its next possession.

New Hampshire 42, Rhode Island 35

The tandem of quarterback Matt Griffin and running back Barry Bourassa proved to be too much for the Rams' Griffin threw for 260 yards and three scores while Bowrassa ran for 199 yards and two touchdowns.

Delaware 23, Richmond 17

Delaware held a comfortable 16 point lead as late as the third quarter, but Richmond blocked a punt for a score and kicked a field goal to bring the score to within six points. This is as far as the Spiders would get because Blue Hen safety Warren McIntire intercepted his opponents after a turnover to seal the victory. Delaware's Darryl Brown rushed for 125 yards and two touchdowns in a standout performance.

When UMass running back Jerome Bledsoe broke two tackles on his way to a 44-yard touchdown run to put the Minutemen up 7-0, the No. 7 ranked Cats realized that a share of the Yankee Conference title would not be quite as easy to attain as they thought.

But then the defense took matters into its own hands.

Led by safety Kevin Long, the Defensive Player of the Week in the Yankee Conference, the defense completely stifled the UMass offense and after that first quarter run by Bledsoe, it shut the Minutemen out until Bledsoe scored a meaningless touchdown with 31 seconds left to make the final score 24-14. Long, playing in his last regular season conference game at 'Nova, made it a memorable one by returning a fourth quarter interception 27 yards for his first career touchdown to make the score 24-7 and ice the victory.

"UMass played us harder in the first half and we were happy making it 7-7 at the half," said head coach Andy Talley. "From a hitting standpoint we weren't playing well at all."

But the second half saw a different Wildcat team come out of the locker room. After giving up 191 yards rushing in the first half, the defense cut that total in half, yielding only 90 rushing yards in the second half. Bledsoe, who finished with 181 yards on 32 carries, was ineffective in the second half, gaining only 67 yards.

Meanwhile, after a slow first half, the offense re-established itself. Flanker Harold Hart made the most of his three receptions, scoring two touchdowns. Coming early in the fourth quarter the second touchdown went for 36 yards and put the Cats up 17-7.

The team wants to be the best ever at Villanova and work hard to be national champions.
Head Coach Andy Talley

"The difference was that we wanted the championship so bad. We drew from the UConn game [when the Cats trailed 13-7 at the half] to establish ourselves," said quarterback Tom Colombo, who was 15 of 25 on the day for 217 yards. "There was no way tht we were going to let the seniors down."

"We did not want to have this one stolen from us like last year [3-0 loss at UMass]," said Long. "Being the defending champions, they were not going to come in here without giving us a fight. That caused a lot of the hostility."

"There is so much pressure on us that 9-1 is almost not good enough," said Talley. "The playoffs diminish the championship and we have stopped being the hunter, now we are the hunted."

With an impressive record and a share of the Yankee Conference title, Talley believes that his Wildcats will be in the playoffs regardless of the outcome of tomorrow's game at Fordham. But just making the playoffs will "not be good enough" for the aspiring Wildcats.

"This team wants to be the best ever at Villanova and work hard to be national champions," said Talley.

NOTES: The 16-team playoff field for Division 1-AA will be announced Sunday at 2:30 p.m. If the current rankings hold, the Cats will be the No. 5 seed but likely will head south in the first-round due to the low capacity of Villanova Stadium. Possible opponents for the Cats are Marshall, Furman and Appalachian State. The Cats cannot open with Delaware in the first round. Conference foes are not allowed to meet until the second round ... Stats that doe not lie: the Cat offense is No. 6 in total offense, while the defense is No. 4 in total defense in Division 1-AA.

'Nova looks to improve

By ED WASIELEWSKI

The 1991-92 Wildcats are looking to improve on last season's 12-17 record with a solid nucleus of veterans and a talented crop of freshmen leading the way. Head Coach Harry Perretta and the Cats hope to climb out of the lower division in the ever-improving Big East Conference.

Coming off another difficult season, 'Nova features a well-rounded and diverse roster. The Cats have a potent frontcourt that features five six-footers and last year's two top scorers, Nikki Benedix and Justine Chaverini. On the other hand, the backcourt situation remains unsettled with coach Perretta still searching for a replacement for graduated point guard Sandy Litkenhaus. There are many question marks that the Cats must answer before their season opener Nov. 29 at North Carolina St. University.

With the departure of Litkenhaus, Perretta loses 9.4 ppg and 113 assists from the point position. More importantly, the Cats lose a floor general who kept the offense running smoothly.

"A big problem will be at the point guard position," said Perretta. "We don't have any returning players who have played very much there. The position is really wide open. Anyone could win the job."
